Sec. 3. And he it further enacted, That the Mayor of said city shall cause notice to be given of the taking of said vote, by public notice, at least ten days before the day on which said election shall be held, at least ten days prior to the day of holding said election; which notice shall distinctly state the question to be voted upon, and shall be given to the freeholders and householders of said city.

Sec. 4. And he it further enacted, That in case this act shall be repealed, the same shall be so construed as to void the title to said lots in said corporation so long as the market-house and apartments shall be consumed thereon and used for the purpose aforesaid, and no longer.

The Senate Committee on the District of Columbia had reported certain amendments, the first of which was, in the first section to strike out the words "to be used within two years after this act takes effect" in the second story thereof, as may be deemed necessary.

Mr. HALE. I wish the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia would explain why that amendment is proposed to be made. It seems to me to be an interference by the Executive Government with a little local matter—the construction of a building here—that might be better left to the city.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator has got it all wrong this time. We propose to strike out these words for the very reason that we do not mean to interfere with it. The House bill requires them to construct certain apartments in this building. The determination of the Senate committee was that we had nothing to do with it. If they wanted the apartments, let them make them; if not, do not force them on them.

MR. HALE. There is in the construction, very well; but I do not see that it is so.

MR. BROWN. You have not read it right.

MR. HALE. Yes, I have.

The amendment was read.

The next amendment was, in the same section, to strike out the words:

And inspected therewith, in case a majority of the freeholders and householders, who are legal and competent voters within said corporation, shall vote as hereinafter provided, in favor thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. BROWN. The other amendments are to strike out certain sections, and are all dependent on the one just adopted.

MR. PUGH. I desire to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I understand that the second, third, and fourth sections of the House amendment make this act conditional, to take effect on the vote of the people of Washington city; and these sections it is proposed to strike out. Now, sir, the present City Council was not elected in view of the emergency; and although I am not in favor of shirking the responsibility of legislative bodies, yet it has always appeared to me that a proposition to create a public debt, especially to the extent of $200,000, to be a charge on the property of the tax-payers—the principal and the interest to run through a series of years—is a question that ought in general to be submitted to a direct vote of the people interested. It seems to me a wise restriction on legislative bodies, and especially municipal corporations; and therefore, unless the Chairman can give some good reason to the contrary, I would like to retain these sections, which require the tax-payers of Washington city to act on the question whether this debt of $200,000 shall or shall not be created.

MR. BROWN. I can state in a very few words the reasons which influence the committee in moving to strike out these sections. First, we did not regard this as a charge upon the city of Washington. It is true, the credit of the city is to be pledged for the redemption of these bonds; but it is equally true—and the committee were precisely and carefully informed of this fact—that the rents and profits of the present indifferent structure, called a market-house, would more than pay the interest on this debt, and create a sinking fund sufficient for its ultimate extinction. Of course, the rents and profit arising from the new structure will be very much more, so that it is utterly impossible that it can ever become a charge upon the people here. But very many of the people of Washington live remote from this market-house and do not do their marketing there, and therefore would be unable to pay here anything which might, in their judgment, or which they might be told, would result in any possible chance of their being called upon to pay the money or any part of it. Having no interest in the thing at all, they would in all probability vote against it, so that the whole project to put here a decent and proper market-house on the avenue, in the central part of the city, would be defeated by people who had no interest in it. If it were a proposition to tax them, I would say submit it to them to know whether they were going to be subjected to taxation. If you were to build it out of the funds of the city, out of appropriations from the city treasury to be raised by direct taxation on the people, then of course I should say, submit it to them; and let them decide for themselves whether they will do it; but that is not the proposition at all.

Then, sir, the main reason which the Senate committee had for moving to strike out these sections, was to secure and make certain the erection of this building. We believed the whole thing would be defeated if the sections were retained.

MR. PUGH. I should like to ask the Senator what is the present debt of the corporation of Washington?

MR. BROWN. I really do not know what it is, nor do I think for the purpose of this bill it is at all important. This cannot by possibility, I tell the Senator again, fail to be a self-sustaining institution. The profits are pledged for the redemption of the debt, and I tell him again, that the present profits, as the committee was assured by those who know, are about thirty-two thousand dollars. It is supposed they will be $50,000, greater than this new market-house.

MR. PUGH. I understand the present debt of the city is $800,000. Now, I do not say but that the Senator may be right, that the rents from the proposed market-house may be sufficient to pay the interest, and perhaps create a sinking fund; but we know that no project was ever proposed of any such character to a legislative body, that did not have some argument in its favor. I believe the State of New York, and certainly the State of Ohio, has had a very bitter experience in heretofore improvements on such arguments, and their failure to realize those splendid profits. Undoubtedly this debt will be charged on the property of the citizens of Washington. They may never be called on to make it good; the income from the market-house may be sufficient; but nevertheless, to use the credit of the city is to impose a tax on the property. It is according to me that a body, elected for one year or two years, ought not to impose so large a liability on the people of Washington, without the tax-payers having an opportunity to speak upon it. The House has already adopted a question about the submission of them. If it can be shown to people in all parts of the city that it never will be a tax on them, they will not object to it. I am very much afraid that as this bill passes and the project should not realize as much as is expected, we shall be called upon to take some kind of the Treasury of the United States to relieve the city of Washington from its taxation. That is the next thing to be expected; and I think the better course is, before these gentlemen enter upon this expenditure of money, that the tax-payers should express their opinion on it. I also intend to offer my opposition to the bill further than expressing my opinion on it.

MR. BROWN. I do not want to prolong this question—

MR. PUGH. One word more, if the Senator please, relative thereto. It is scarcely a State that has been authorized to revise the constitution which in the last few years which has not provided that no debt shall be created beyond a given amount, without being submitted to the people. That is the provision of the constitution of Ohio, and of the constitution of New York, and perhaps many other States.

MR. BROWN. I have said about all I desire to say in reference to this matter. I believe that the introduction of these sections will defeat the whole scheme, and mainly through the instrumentality of people who have nothing to do with it, and have no concern in it. I state again what I stated before, because I want Senators to make note of it, that I cannot, for the life of me, see how it is possible ever to become a charge on the tax-payers of this city. I say again, that the present indifferent structure, unsuited as it is, would pay the interest on $200,000 at six per cent. and make a sinking fund sufficient to take it up. Can the profit of a new building be less than that?

MR. HALE. I wish to ask a question. Is there any limit as to what they may go on and build a market-house at a cost of $1,000,000?

MR. BROWN. No, sir; they are limited to $200,000.

MR. HALE. They are limited to $200,000 in issuing bonds.

MR. BROWN. There was in the original bill—and I should have no objection to it here—a limitation of $220,000; that, under no circumstances should they contract for a building to cost more than that sum. I have no objection to that amendment; but I have had better decline of one question at a time. I am perfectly willing to have that limitation inserted. I think it right.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the committee, to strike out sections two, three, and four of the House amendments.

The Secretary read the sections proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That at the first annual election held in said city after the passage of this act, the person or persons receiving the vote of a majority of such election, who is a freeholder or householder of said city, shall propose to such voter the following question, to wit:

"Are you in favor of creating a debt of $200,000 for the building of a new market-house?" and the voter to vote question, whether yes or no, shall be set down upon the poll-list opposite the name of such voter; and in case a majority of such freeholders and householders answer said question in the affirmative, then this act shall take effect and continue in full force, but not otherwise.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Mayor of said city shall cause notice to be given of the taking of said vote, by publication in three or more of the newspapers published in said city, at least ten days prior to the day of holding said election, which notice shall distinctly state the question to be propounded as aforesaid to the freehold and householders of said city.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That in case this act shall take effect, as hereinbefore provided, it shall be so construed as to require the said Mayor of said city, as well as the market-house and apartments shall be constructed thereon, and used for the purpose aforesaid, and no longer.

MR. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to strike out.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. PUGH. I ask for a division. Let the question be taken first on striking out the second and third sections. The fourth section is on a different subject.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. A division being called for, the question is on striking out the second and third sections, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

MR. HAMLIN. I desire to say a single word on this subject. In the first place, the Senate have already adopted an amendment in the preceding section exactly like this; that is, they have stricken out of the first section of the bill that provision which requires a submission to the people for their approval or disapproval. The sections which it is now proposed to strike out relate only to the mode and manner in which the thing shall be carried out. I desire also to state to Senators that if they will look into this bill, they will see there is still another amendment reported by the committee to come in at the end of the first section of the bill, in these words:

Provided, however, That the Government of the United States shall, in no event whatever, be, either directly or indirectly, liable for the principal or interest on any loan which may be obtained under the provisions of this act.

And I shall offer an addition to that provision, in these words:

And that the entire revenue of said building shall, after providing for the interest on the same, be appropriated to the payment of the stock issued in accordance with the provisions of this act.

That will make this building, as the chairman of the committee has said, a self-sustaining institution. I have no doubt but what I create a sinking fund vastly more than enough to pay for the building within the twenty years prescribed for the debt. The committee gave it a very careful consideration, and were unanimously of opinion that this was the better mode.

MR. HALE. I know how well these calculations sound on paper; and if I had not lately read a report from a select committee of the Legislature of the State of Maine, showing how such calculations utterly fail, I might be induced to agree to this; but I recollect that one of the most notorious failures of the last session was the Canada speculation, which was going to be a self-paying concern. The treasurer of the State went into it and invested $100,000 of the money of the people of Maine, and never got a dollar of it in return, and the concern has failed to pay a paying concern. Such calculations often fail, and best not to be made. So, I think we had better keep these sections in the bill.

MR. BROWN. I say again to the Senator this is not the result of calculation of what may be done, but the fact has been demonstrated. I tell the Senator again, that the rents and profits of the present house would more than take up this debt, to say nothing of an improved house.

MR. CLARK. Who is to pay this debt in the event of its ultimate failure of the corporation? Then why should not the corporation say whether they will create it or not? The Government is not to be liable for it, if the amendment be adopted that the Government of the United States shall, in no event, be either directly or indirectly liable.

MR. BROWN. If the Senator will let me, I will answer that question in a word. There is, in the present charter of the city of Washington, a clause denying to the corporation the right to borrow money upon the faith of the Government, and issue bonds. This is only making an excep-maintain, through any of the Territories of the United States, a branch line, or so to connect their said line or lines with Oregon; and that they shall have the permanent right of way, said line or lines, under, and over, and along, and alongside public lands and waters in said Territories, with the free use during the said term of such lands as may be necessary for the purpose of establishing said line or lines, and along said line or lines, not exceeding, at any station, one quarter section of land, such stations not to exceed one in four miles on an average of the whole distance; said contractors, or their assigns, to have the right to purchase such lands as may be selected by them at stations during the term aforesaid, at the rate of $1 25 per acre.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That if, in any year during the continuance of the said contract, the business done for the Government as heretofore mentioned by such contractor, or their assigns, shall, at the ordinary rate of charges for private management, exceed the price contracted to be paid as aforesaid, the excess shall be paid by the Postmaster General.

Mr. GWIN. I ask the Secretary to read the amendments which the committee propose to the substitute reported by them.

The Secretary read the amendments: in line five of the substitute to strike out the word "N. man," and insert "Norvin;" after the word "Stebbins," in the seventh line to insert "James S. Graham;" in line twelve, after the word "river," insert "by any route or routes which the said contractor may select;" in line seven of section two, after the word "Territories," to insert the words "by any route or routes which the said contractor may select;" and to insert at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That the use of the line be given at any time, free of cost, to the Coast Survey, the Smithsonian Institution, and the National Observatory, for scientific purposes.

Mr. GWIN. I move these amendments which have been read to the bill. I hope the amendments will be acted upon all together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Chair will put the question on the amendments together. The question is on agreeing to the amendments which have just been read.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is not the motion to print those amendments?

Mr. WADE. I understand it was merely proposed to print the amendments.

Mr. GWIN. I want them acted on and printed, and then we shall be done with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments which have been read.

Mr. WADE. I thought the intention was only to print the amendments.

Mr. GWIN. They are mere verbal amendments.

Mr. KING. I hope that the amendments will be printed, and the subject then passed over, in order that we may have an opportunity to see precisely what they are.

Mr. GWIN. The bill itself is not in consideration at all. We are just maturing the substitute reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. KING. There is no objection to printing the amendments; but I thought the Chair was putting the question on agreeing to the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments which have been read by the Secretary.

Mr. GWIN. The bill is not in consideration at all. I want to see what it is reported by the committee, printed, with these amendments inserted in it. I merely propose that those amendments be inserted in the proposition of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from California to propose certain amendments to the bill.

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair then puts the question upon agreeing to those amendments before putting the question to print.

Mr. WADE. I do not understand this at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again state that the question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

Mr. WADE. I understood his motion was to print the amendments, and not introduce anything that might give rise to debate.

Mr. GWIN. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads wished these additional amendments to be inserted in the substitute reported by them, and they are all verbal in their character, for the purpose of having it printed as amended, to come up for consideration as the action of the committee. It is not intended to come up to-day at all. We want the bill to stand as if these amendments were reported originally from the committee, and then that it be printed. There is nothing in it at all.

Mr. WADE. When we adopt the amendments, we do not see why we want them printed. Here it is proposed to adopt them first and print them afterwards.

Mr. GWIN. If we adopt these amendments now, they will come up for consideration hereafter. The bill has been reported from the committee with a substitute, and the committee subsequently report these amendments to their substitute, that is all. The proposition is not to consider the bill to-day.

Mr. KING. The better way would be to have the amendments printed without acting on them.

Mr. GWIN. I am perfectly willing that the bill should be printed with the amendments reported by the committee. I do not want final action on them at all.

Mr. WADE. Then that is disposed of. The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the present form of the motion of the Senator from California, the question is to print the bill with the amendments proposed, without voting on the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. WADE. I now move to take up the homestead bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole—the bill (S. No. 1) to grant to any person who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period hereinafter specified—the said condition being on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. WADE. That is the Senate bill, as I understand. I want to know now if it is in order to move to strike out all after the enacting words of the Senate bill under consideration, and to insert the House bill as a substitute for it. If it is in order to amend it in that way, I make that motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. What effect will that motion have upon any amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first motion in order is the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to offer a little explanation of that amendment. I do not wish to take up much time. I do not desire to have it lost sight of. If the Senator from Ohio desires to speak at length on the bill, I, of course, will give way.

Mr. WADE. No, sir, I do not expect to speak at length upon it.

Mr. COLLAMER. I have not yet succeeded in obtaining the position which I desire in the matter stands. I understand that there was referred to our committee a House bill on this subject. I understand there was also a Senate bill on the same subject. I understand it is stated now that the committee propose to amend the House bill by inserting in it the Senate bill. Am I right?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Yes, sir; substantially so.

Mr. COLLAMER. Then the House bill is before us.

Mr. CLINGMAN. No! I must correct the Senator. We ordered the amendment to it to be printed, and it is not before us. It was by common consent that the Senator from Tennessee was allowed to report it. It is no more before us than any other bill that has been reported. The only bill, I take it, which is now under consideration, is the Senate bill, and to that my amendment is pending.

Mr. COLLAMER. We shall understand each other before we get through. I do not know how there can be an amendment reported by a committee and still the position which I desire in the matter stands.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me a single moment, I think I can set this whole thing right. When we adjourned yesterday, the Senate bill to grant homesteads to actual settlers was the unfinished business before the Senate. This morning, at one o'clock, the President announced that the unfinished business was before the Senate.

Mr. COLLAMER. That was the Senate bill. Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Yes, the Senate bill. By courtesy, not pushing that measure out of its place, I reported back the bill that had been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. COLLAMER. What was that?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The House bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. Then the House bill is here?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The House bill is here, an order having been made to print the amendment; which leaves the unfinished business before us, being the Senate bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. Then we stand now upon the Senate bill; and that alone, at present, is before us.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask the permission of the Senate for a few moments, to explain the amendment of the bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. Let it be read.

The Secretary then read it, as follows:

Strike out, in the first section, the words "to enter one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body, in conformity with the land subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed," and insert, in lieu thereof, "in any Territory, or in any State, by the Commissioner of Public Lands, a warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, to be located in the same manner as that under which the homestead laws heretofore issued have been located, on any of the public lands of the United States subject to entry, the applicant being required to file a map of the land to be located in the same manner, and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the section read:

That any person who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, to be located in any Territory, or in any State, by the Commissioner of Public Lands, a warrant, &c.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. President, I think that, on this amendment being understood by the Senate, every Senator who is in favor of the principle of the bill will adopt it; at any rate, I am confident that every Senator who favors such a proposition ought to support it. I am frank, though, to admit, in the outset, that I have been opposed to this policy of giving away the public lands. In my judgment, the public lands stand on the same footing as the other public property of the Government, and ought to be used for the benefit of the Government. I can make no distinction between donations of land and donations in money; I take this to be a naked donation. While, therefore, if you leave it to me, I would retain all the lands for the use of the Government so as to keep down the public taxes, nevertheless, there seems to be a disposition on the part of many Senators here, and there clearly is manifested in the other wing of the Capitol a disposition to give away a large portion of the public property. If that policy is to be carried out, it will result in all that is now, and see if my amendment does not, fortunately, free the subject from all the difficulties that are in the way of it.

Senators will see that the present homestead bill is liable to two or three objections. One objection is, that it is open to all, and that a few months under its provisions a man is obliged to go on public land and work upon it for five years. He must go into the woods, make some outlay of capital, labor there continuously for five years before he gets any title. I believe if he happens to rent his farm for only six months, for any unforeseen cause, he loses the benefit of all that he has already done. It is hardly necessary for me to say to gentlemen that our Americans who are of changeable minds and run up and down the country, do not like to tie down to any place for a long time; and it may be happy that a man may settle in a location which he finds to be unhealthy, and, after two or three or four years, it may be necessary for him to emigrate to some other. Under the existing bill, as I understand it, he loses his title if he does not sell it within a few months; he is not allowed to sell it; he must go off, and somewhere else comes in. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pugh] said, in the last Congress, that those men who went into the new Territories and labored there for five years, really put more work on the land than it was worth. Under his view, there-are two or three objections. One objection is, that it is open to all, and that a few months under its provisions a man is obliged to go on public land and work upon it for five years.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pugh] said, in the last Congress, that those men who went into the new Territories and labored there for five years, really put more work on the land than it was worth.

Under his view, there-

Under his view, there-

Under his view, there-

Under his view, there-

Under his view, therefore, I take it he will see that my amendment is what they ought to have. If my amendment be adopted, as soon as the settler goes and takes his position on the public domain, he is "monarch of all he surveys;" he has a title at once; he may improve it, he may live on it forever, or he may sell it. My proposition, therefore, is clearly better for the settler than the original bill.

Well, what is the second objection to the bill, which strikes every mind with great force? Here is land belonging to all the people of the United States. You say that those who are settled on it shall have only a hundred and sixty acres each; but nineteen twentieths of the American people never expect to go there. I do not suppose that out of every fifty men whom I represent, more than one, if one, expects to go and take the benefit. Why should the other four-nine tenths lose their share of the public property? What justice is there in it? I will appeal to the Senators on the other side of this Chamber; take, for example, the twelve New England Senators: there is no public land in New England; and the only way any New England man can get a foot of it is to expropriate himself and go to the West. Now, is it right to drive our people from New England, or North Carolina, or anywhere else, to enable them to get their share of the public property? I put it to every gentleman on principle of justice. You may say that all have an equal advantage in this; that any man has the right to go; but remember what it costs a man to move his property and pull up stakes. Suppose I should advocate a proposition that the Secretary of the Treasury should give ten dollars to every citizen who would apply at the Treasury to-morrow, or next week. It might be said every citizen of the United States may go in and get his share; but we know that men living at a distance could not go without a loss, and the effect would be to give the money to men living in the States, and to exclude the others. So, if you pass the provision contained in this original bill, you give the lands to those who happen to live in the new States, and you exclude everybody in the old States. I should like to see any man go before my constituents and address an assembly of men, and say, "I have been given away a part of your property to the men in the new States, and refused to give you any portion of it unless you emigrate." Everybody sees that it is grossly unjust. It is not only unjust to the individuals but unjust to the States. What right have you to discriminate between the States, and to try to drive off their people? What right have you to impose a burden on my constituents, and say that they shall submit to these things or emigrate to a distant country? The force of this is so obvious that it seems to me that it ought to strike the mind of every Senator.

Again, sir, there are classes of men who cannot avail themselves of it. The mechanics do not want to abandon their business and turn land owners. Go up to Massachusetts, where hundreds and thousands of men live on the soil, for higher wages. I should like to see how the Senators from that State, or any other State in that region, would go before their constituents and say to them: "You complain that you have difficulty in making a living; well, we have taken a portion of your property and given it to men in the West, and if you choose to leave your own country and emigrate out there, you can have a share of it." The great body of those men would say at once: "It does not suit us to leave our country; it does not suit us to engage in farming."

My proposition, then, Mr. President, fortunately gets us out of all these difficulties. Pass it, and the Secretary issues his warrant to every man in the United States who falls within the provisions of the bill. It is to every man who is the head of a family and who is a citizen. That will include the shoemaker in Massachusetts and New Hampshire—for I see the strike has gotten up there; and as I catch the eye of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALL, I will say that I should like to see him go to the States and explain these two systems. I do not think I misunderstand his position. I take it for granted he will adopt my proposition in preference to that contained in the bill; but suppose he was to take a different course, how could he defend himself there? He would go before his constituents, and his people and say: "I have given away a great deal of the public property to men in the West. There was a proposition pending by which each one of you could have had a warrant; you might have sold that warrant, if you did not think proper to emigrate, and bought a horse, or leather, if you are shoemakers; you might have used it to support your families; but I have decided that you shall not touch it; that all the benefit of this land shall go to those who happen to settle on the public lands!" I should like to know how that Senator would be able to satisfy such an assembly. I see the course of things in this State and Massachusetts, and elsewhere. No man could do it whatever. I take it for granted, that any man in the old States will be beaten who makes an issue between my proposition and the other. Why? Because this is naked, simple justice.

There are objections which are made to it. It is said that if this be done, it will take all the public lands, there will be none left; but that is not a valid objection. If your principle is right, carry it out. Suppose a gentleman should introduce a proposition to give $1,000 to each soldier in a certain regiment that served in the American war. I may say, "I do not think this ought to be done; but if you intend to adopt such a system, let us give each regiment the same advantage." The gentleman replies, "That will take all the money but the Treasury." There is no objection to my amendment. I may have a objection to the principle of the bill. It would be a ready means, perhaps, of showing that the bill was erroneous. If you go on the principle of giving land to the citizens, it will not do for you to stop and say, "We can give a few more not to the benefit of those who stand in that relation ought to have the benefit."

But again it is said—and I have been surprised at those who have made the argument—that if you adopt this system, you will fail in the object you have in view, to exclude the old States, and to get people to go into the new Territories, and become cultivators of the land. Let us look at that for a moment. There are countries in the world, Mr. President, where the Governments undertake to regulate labor. They say to one man, "You shall not go to India." They say to another, "You shall follow that." Go into India and there are castes; some men are allowed to do certain things and others not. Even in monarchies people are driven by particular circumstances into some line of employment; but it is supposed that in the United States we have the privilege of exercising the right of his own occupation. It seems we are in error in that respect, and in this late day, after seventy or eighty years of liberty, the Government is to come in and to say, "We think you were wrong in following the bent of your inclinations; you should not be mechanics, you should not cultivate your lands as you choose in the old States; we think you ought to go into the new States and labor there to suit our purposes;" and some Senators have said that here, about the cities, are great numbers of men who are willing to go. These men have a right to be leaders if they choose, and to stay in the cities. How is it that any Senator has become so great a man that he has a right to go down here on Pennsylvania avenue and say to some man he meets, "You are leading about the streets, where you are not wanted, to the new Territories; I want to get you away." That is the substance of the argument. You do not compel them directly, but you say to them, "You ought to go there." Would it be justice? Let us look at this question for a moment. Suppose I owe a man $100: would I have a right to say to him, "I will not give you this money, that you are entitled to receive, here; I think you had better go to some other point of the country, and I will pay it to you there." There is not justice in that.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that this is a most extraordinary idea. I can understand that in a monarchy, where they claim to regulate the people; I can understand that perhaps some of the old Federalists in the old times, who thought we were settled in the old States, and who would adopt that line of argument; but I am utterly amazed at this day, when everybody professes to be a Republican or a Democrat in principle, and to allow equal privileges at any rate to all free white men—we may make the distinction as to color, but not as to race and communities—that this idea should be broached that this Congress is to be called upon, by such a line of argument, to undertake to regulate the business of the community, and say to one set, "You are idle loafers about the cities and we want to get you off, and therefore we will not pay you what you are entitled to; we will make a division of the property; we will cut you out of it."

The argument cannot be maintained for a moment. It is just as bad as, in fact it is worse than, the system that I used to combat, and many men combat now, of compelling our people to manufacture. A school spring up in this country at one time that said the people were too generally farmers in the United States, and that we must have manufactures. I am in favor of manufactures and mechanic arts, but then I am in favor of them on sound principles; and if they will pay, if individuals can embark in them and make good pay, let them do it; it is a good thing. But there was a school which said: "We must compel men to manufacture; too much agriculture is going on; produce is too low." Now, that system is to be reversed, and we are to swing like a pendulum over to the other side. It is now said: "All this was a mistake; we have too many mechanics in the country; we have got the cities crowded with handicraft men manufacturing, and we must get them off to the frontiers and settle them there." The result is, however, that the people and the Treasury are to suffer under both systems. In God's name, let us abandon them both.

Under my proposition you leave these men free to do as they please; to stay in the cities if they want to do so, or to emigrate. Again, it is a most preposterous idea, anything that you will get rid of those who are idle loafers, hangers-on to society, by this bill. Take one of those men and put him into the forest, and give him an axe, and do you think he would stay there to cut timber? Not a bit of it. He would walk or ride until he could get to some place where he could make his own taste and follow his own occupation.

But there is another objection which was made to my amendment, in some little discussion we had about it in the Senate a year or two ago, when I brought up a similar proposition. It was said, "If you do this, you will reduce the price of the public land very much; it will be worth very little." I admit that for argument's sake; but it will reduce it no more than the other. The other proposition destroys its value for sale. If everybody goes out there, the price of the land, of course, will have no price and cannot have a price. Lands that lie in the far West may bear a certain price here in Washington. Why? Because a man can only get it by paying a certain sum, and he may pay for it here; but if everybody who goes into the western country can get it for nothing, he will not pay. Of course, the price will go down very much under this bill; and I think perhaps just as much as under my proposition. But suppose even it turns out that there is a very large reduction in the price, gentlemen, it is not the price of the land that is to be reduced; the actual settlers will get the lands very low. If nobody buys them, at least they will be settled up as they were in North Carolina; and I do not believe there is a very much in the notion that speculators will monopolize the lands. In the new States, and in the old States, if you give an acre as long as I can remember, and yet they were never bought up in large quantities. If there is very little land offered, or to be got at, speculators will buy it to hold it up; but when land is plenty, like water, when you fill the whole country with speculators, you put down the price, I admit, to a very low rate. But even suppose there should be an inconvenience to the new States; if it should happen, contrary to my expectations, that speculators get a great deal of this land, they must see that it is not the price of the land that is to be reduced, but their own conduct. We had a very good land system that kept it out of the hands of speculators, and if you choose to break that down, you cannot complain that we in the old States take our chance to get a share of the money.

It is not the price of the land that is to be reduced, but their own conduct. We had a very good land system that kept it out of the hands of speculators, and if you choose to break that down, you cannot complain that we in the old States take our chance to get a share of the money.

was very much in favor of this bill some two years ago, made use of an argument which was a very ingenious one, I admit, as all his arguments are ingenious and subtle; but I think there is a fallacy in it. He says there is no hardship in the way of its passing this bill, because we have got land enough in the United States to give every man one hundred and sixty acres, and we only provide that those who choose may own and take possession of their lands now. If that were all of it, the argument would be all right, and take exactly for justice and equality, the men who go and settle on the land will derive just as much benefit from the residue of the domain as we do, who do not get any of it. A man will go there and get his one hundred and sixty acres, and then the remainder of the land, if it is worth anything at all—and the Senator alleges it will be just as valuable as it is now—in sold, and goes to support the Government, thus relieving the individual of taxation, so that he gets a double portion. He is in the condition that Benjamin was in when he was twice as much as the other brothers. I might illustrate it in this way: Suppose a man has ten sons, and has a thousand acres. He can afford to give to each one of them a hundred. One of the sons says: "Give me my hundred acres now! I want to make something out of it. It is very easy for me to go off and stay there, and make no demands; but if he remains at the family table, boards and is clothed as a member of the family, then it is very unequal and very unjust. That is the very position we now stand in. The men who go and get their portion of the soil, and take possession of it, still come in, take their share, and draw with the rest of us for the residue.

My proposition, therefore, exactly meets the view of the Senator from Tennessee, I take it. By it, we make a fair division of all the land; the old man says to each of his sons, "I leave to each of you one hundred acres; you may take it and use it as you like; if you do not choose to cultivate it, sell it to some of your neighbors, and put the money in your pocket." That would be the effect of my proposition. Pass it, and a man who is first in North Carolina, and I am sure says: "I do not care to settle on this new land; I have paid for as much as I need or want; I will buy a plow horse." He may sell his warrant, and get a plow horse; and if a mechanic wants to add to his stock in trade, he may sell his warrant.

But really, Mr. President, I promise to make a short explanation. My proposition is so just, that the more Senators look at it the better they will like it. If so, and it passes, it relieves us of all the difficulties of this question. We divide the public property fairly among all persons.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? He seems to suppose that the principle of this bill granting tracts of land to actual settlers is something new in the history of the Government, or in the management of the public lands. Is that so?

Mr. CLINGMAN. This is a new proposition. Mr. PUGH. I tell the Senator it has been the fixed policy of this Government, commencing with the acquisition of Louisiana; and therefore all the evils he anticipates either have occurred or will soon occur.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I think my friend will find, when he looks into those acts, that there is a difference. I admit that there were special grants made in Oregon.

Mr. PUGH. In New Mexico and Louisiana it has been the fixed territorial policy.

Mr. CLAY. It was never done in Alabama or Mississippi.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I know my friend, the Senator from Ohio, is very ingenious, and I shall not quarrel with him; but I want to give him an explanation of the principles of my amendment; and if, when I hear him, I do not agree with him entirely—and he did not convince me in the last Congress, and I am very much afraid he will not again—I may have something to say in answer. I wish to state, however, that the whole thing is the principle of my amendment. I think he will find that the measure now under consideration is in some respects different from any that has been adopted heretofore. I will not, however, weary the Senator with further discussion now. Mr. WADE. Mr. President, this whole thing has come up in a shape that I wish to rectify; and I think it ought to be set right before we begin with it. The Senate bill was made a special order, I believe; and right on that, this morning, as it came up, the committee reported back the House bill; so that both those propositions are really before us. I think, out of respect to the other House, this considering this subject, we ought to consider their bill, and not the Senate bill. Of course, it can make no difference in the ultimate result, whether we take the one bill or the other; but, if we should pass the Senate bill, that will have to go to the House of Representatives to be acted on. If, however, we proceed to the consideration of the House bill, and agree with the House in it, then we pass the bill, and there is an end of it. By the course which I suggest, every man will understand what he is about, and we shall proceed in order, and I make the motion, for the purpose of putting matters right, that we postpone the present and all other orders, and proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill of the House of Representatives, as reported back by the committee this morning; and I hope all the friends of the bill, and I hope all Senators, will agree to that for the purpose of putting ourselves right.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I propose to say a few words in reply to the Senator from North Carolina, as he made an appeal to me; and I am glad to hear because I want to answer him. I wish that, when the Senator was explaining his amendment, he had gone on, and, with his accustomed frankness and candor, told us whether he was really in favor of his proposition as a substantially correct one, and would stand for it if it was adopted, or whether it was a mere piece of legislative tact to defeat the bill. That might possibly have explained some of his positions.

Mr. CLINGMAN rose.

Mr. HALE. The Senator need not answer my question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I think the Senator did not hear the first part of my remarks. I stated that I was opposed to this system; but if we are to have it in any shape, I prefer an equal one.

Mr. HALE. So that, I suppose, if we should adopt his amendment, then he would vote against it after all; and therefore, the speech which he made, and to which I listened, may be considered rather as a philosophical dissertation than a legislative recommendation of the measure which he proposes. But, sir, there were one or two suggestions he threw out that I want to answer. He said: how can we—appealing particularly to New England and to those who have strikes in our vicinity—justify this measure to our people? Sir, I have never had the slightest difficulty in the world in justifying any vote I gave, since I have been a member of the Senate, to my people. I never was called in question for any vote; and when I attempt to justify my vote, I think I can do it. But, sir, if you should ever measure up with the House bill, I can justify my vote to my people, by the soundest principles of legislation and of philosophy, it is a vote in favor of this free homestead; and I will tell you why.

The experience of this Government, for a long time past, has witnessed—something for the Senator from North Carolina, I have no doubt, that not one of the old States can ever derive any direct benefit from the public lands. We have tried it in every possible way. We tried to get a grant of public land for the purpose of aiding the great colleges to be established in the different States, but we found a majority dead against us. An appeal was made to the heart of this nation by one of the greatest philanthropists that exists—I refer to Miss Dix, and had gone through every State of the Union, and had gone across the Atlantic on her mission of benevolence. She came here and appealed to the heart of the nation, represented in Congress, and asked you, out of the great abundance of your land, to give but a pittance to aid in the greatest philanthropic scheme of the age; and it has failed, and it has failed in the indigent States. That appeal was listened to by Congress, but it was met by an Executive veto. Every possible scheme that has been suggested by which the old States were to get any, even the most remote benefit from the public lands directly, has utterly failed; and it has failed, too, in a great measure, from the votes of the political party with which the Senator from North Carolina is associated and acts. They have uniformly, in a body, voted against anything of that sort.

Now, sir, let me say one word in regard to that peculiar state of society which exists in our States, and to which the Senator alluded, and I am glad that he did allude to it—I refer to those conditions of mechanics, journeymen, laborers, which began with the shoemakers, by which they have struck for higher wages. They have struck, and it has become very general, and I hope it will continue to do so. My sympathies are with them. I hope they will combine any confederate unit the highest possible amount that is consistent with the prosperity of the whole community may be given to the hand that toils. I thank God that in his good providence he has given us a system of labor in our States by which, even the laborer feels that he is not simply compensated, he may "strike," without finding himself subject to the penalties that are imposed on insurrections. I am glad, sir, of these strikes. They are indications of the material of which our laboring classes are composed, and I glory in them. I hope they will continue; and I hope that the day will be far distant that any class of laborers in our States, when they feel themselves aggrieved for the want of sufficient compensation for their daily toil, will fall to organize, as they have organized, and demand what they are justly entitled to.

Let me tell Senators—and it may, perhaps, be some information to them—this thing is too intelligent, and it is too deeply seated, to be turned into the political or party channels of the day. The power of the country grows upon them, like the best protectors of their rights. I live in one of the largest manufacturing towns in the State of New Hampshire. I live in a town where one of those strikes has been organized to a very considerable extent. I live in a town where the shoemakers pay to their journeymen something like twenty thousand dollars a month in cash. They have organized a strike there, and it has been pretty universal; and some of the foul birds of the party who thought that this strike might be turned to political capital came down to my town last Saturday night before last, and some of them took place on Tuesday, and undertook to make the strikers all vote what they called the Democratic ticket. They called them together in the City Hall, and addressed them on the outrages and enormities of a strike which they were undertaking to make them turn their attention, their support, and their sympathy, to the Democratic party which was the great friend of the laborer; which was the protector of the oppressed, and which would see that they did not suffer any of the wrongs under which they were groaning. Well, sir, they were heard patiently; they lay the last word; they spoke on Saturday night late, ran into Sunday morning, and the election came off on Tuesday, and I will tell you the result. The Democratic party twelve months ago threw in that place for the Democratic ticket, and this year, this year, after this attempt to turn the action of the strikers to their account, the Democratic party threw six hundred and fifteen votes—just exactly a unit what they threw last year.

Well, sir, if it should be my fortune to meet them and to hear it will be for I usually have a talk with my neighbors when I get home—I would tell them that I had voted for this free homestead, this giving away of the lands to those who would go and take them, this giving a free home to every head of a family who would go; and I would justify it in this manner, if I was called upon, but they have too much sense to want a justification. In the first place, they would have confidence enough in me to know I would not give a wrong vote, [laughter], to begin with; and then their own good sense would tell them that I was right. I will reason, without any explanation of mine; but I would say to them: "We in New England are, and have been, the great bee-hive of this country; we have a small territory; we have a sterile soil; we have a severe climate; but against all these we have been able to stand, and we have put out a large line of our history our young men, and they have carried with them the principles of civilization, of liberty, of knowledge, and of science; and the return which they make to us is the planting of free institutions in their own land, making us the great and broad base of the great principles of liberty, of humanity, of righteousness, and of justice, upon which the permanent foundations of national pros-

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, MARCH 23, 1869.

NEW SERIES.....NO. 82.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. You do not mean so to imply?

Mr. WADE. Certainly not. I have not said any such thing.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am glad the Senator disclaims it. Then the meaning of his remark is, that he does not share the policy, course of business, and take up the House bill in preference to the bill which the Senate committee had matured anterior to the House bill being received by this body; that we shall consider it, and suffer it to take the place of what has been the special order of the Senate—the Senate bill. It was made a special order long before the House bill came here. Or does the Senator mean—and I impute no such motive to him, or to those with whom he acts—that the Senate, when there is a serious existing opposition, upon principle as well as upon policy, to a bill, is to have it forced through by the power of numbers? for the question has become almost sectional in its character, almost positively and completely sectional. Does he mean that we must abandon, without debate and without consideration altogether, this subject so far as we have matured it here in the Senate, or as it has been matured by the Senate committee, and must take up the House bill, and pass upon it, as was done in the other House, without debate, and under some form that shall be applied to the whole body? It looks so, if it is not so. I cannot but believe that there could not be a thing more satisfactory to the Senator and those who act with him than that the Senate should be forced to take a vote at once on the whole subject, without debate, without reference to the results which reason and the light to be obtained from it might give to the whole subject.

Sir, the Senate bill was some time ago made a special order; it has continued a special order; it has been on as such in the Senate, and is now to be before us as a special order; and the Senator says the House bill must be taken up, or at least, he moves that it shall be done, when he knows that there is a Senator entitled to the floor on the subject at once, who wishes to be heard upon it, and who would have the right to do so. The policy he himself cannot question; and upon that motion the Senator from New Hampshire takes occasion to express thanks to God, and I hear thanks to God expressed nowhere else, and on no other subject except when slavery comes in. It is connected too, with the "strike" of New England on the subject of their pay. Sir, that was insincere as the motives which he attributed to the Senator from North Carolina, and had no place here, and had no connection with the subject. The Senator and every Senator here, to tell the truth, insincerely; that there was nothing true in it; that there was nothing honest in it; that there was at the bottom of it a miserable, demagoguing trick with regard to his constituents, his neighbors, that he presumes would ask him about it at home.

He addresses them from here, to tell the truth, he offered free homes to them and took their part against capital; but at the same time, he leaves a sufficient opening for himself to be able to go there afterwards and to say to the capitalists, "politics and considerations compelled us to do this, in order to keep the estate with us and induce them to go along with us, to make them repeat the approaches of Democracy; when the truth is, that we ourselves, who are the principal men of New England, have made war upon the South and driven every man from the wilderness who would string and broken connections, which are to be seized hold of in order to sustain a political ascendancy that is still to trample upon the laborers, and that under the guise and name of free homes without cost—homes that they cannot go to, and if they went to them they would starve, and if they would survive; homes that could furnish them no place to live in on earth, except with the results of suffering and starvation and beggary; homes that the Senator knew would be worthless when given to those who are suffering and crying out for the price of labor against capital; homes that the Senator knew himself were sales to the lips, and were neither food nor clothing. Such is the case, and so the Senator from New Hampshire has addressed his own people; and this side of the Chamber looks at it with scorn and with contempt—feels it sincerely to be so, and will not consent to be deceived.

Now, the Senator from Ohio has moved to lay aside the bill. He himself earnestly desires that this matter shall be considered, and continuously considered, until it be disposed of. He knows that under the rules of the Senate discussion cannot cease until the bill is matured. He knows that it is a subject about which there has been contention for sixteen or eighteen years in both branches of Congress, and he cannot rest until a full consideration of it is in this body. He knows it well; and there is, I fear, some other object; I hope not, but I sincerely fear it. Sir, I am afraid it has connection with some expected triumph that the Black Republican party anticipate. It is thus that they press this measure. They press it against the opinion, from every evidence that we can give, of the administration committee, and press it against what have been the opinions of a majority of the Democratic party for many years, and indeed of the whole Democratic party, with few exceptions. They press it in the teeth of a member of that party who himself is one of the foremost friends of the measure. Why should it be done? You will find the bill which is furnished by the Senate, of which you yourselves are members, over the bar, and call on us to take up the bill of the House, though it materially differs on four distinct points. You rise from the floor, and without the consent of this body can feel as all that you are aware of all the points of difference that exist, say it is this, and it is that, and it is the other; you furnish your synopsis of the points of difference, and say that the House bill is better than the Senate bill, and that the Senator, the parent, the father of the movement, who has followed it steadily and in sincerity for many years—though I think in error—desires a different course to be taken. He asks that you permit the Senate bill to go on and take its natural course, and be full and free to properly discuss and present, being entitled to the floor upon it. Instead of pursuing that course, you ask that the House bill shall be brought forward at once—a bill that went through the other House under the gag and without discussion, and which differs materially from all that the authorized agents of the Senate have thus far done. You propose that all that the Senate committee has done shall be set aside, and the House bill taken up and acted upon at once; and then many extraneous things are brought in, and God is thanked; and I hear Him thanked for nothing short of that which is to produce distraction in this country, war between sections, and a total dissolution of the Government itself. Whilst you speak against those who mention disunion here, you thank God, with the devotion of your souls, and with the enthusiasm of a present mood, can tend to forward and promote that result.

I hope and trust that the Senate will adhere to its own orders, and permit no little motives and no small considerations to come between it and a full and free discharge of that duty which it juries owes to its own standing and position among the highest authorities of this Union. I hope we shall not permit ourselves to be driven from the regular course of business here, and from the full consideration of bills which have been matured by our committee, and when the committee of the Democratic party have been formed under the power of the Democratic party here, with a majority on the Committee on Public Lands who favor this policy—a concession which I have never thought wise; a concession which I have almost thought ought to have called upon the minority of the Democratic party to abandon the committee, and have nothing more to do with it. Those were the feelings with which I was affected; but in discharging my duty, my desire has been, if we did act on the subject, to act sincerely and fairly, and try to make the bill as good as we could, and then vote against it when it came before this body, if we could not approve it. The motion is now, and it is urged imperiously, that we shall abandon and throw aside our work entirely, and take up the House bill; and that is to pass, I suppose, if the wills of gentlemen on the other side are suited, in the same style in which it was passed from the Senate, without a single word of discussion whatever.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to postpone.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech, but simply to make two or three remarks on the present position of the question before the Senate. The first bill that was introduced into the Senate at the present session was the homestead bill, which was presented at a very early day. It is bill No. 1. That bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and after mature consideration, they reported it back in its present shape, and it is now under consideration. The committee, I repeat, considered the bill maturely. Those members of the committee who voted in favor of it, at the present time, the members and friends of the homestead principle disconnected from party considerations, reported that bill back, because they thought it had been put in the most acceptable shape, and in that shape in which it was most likely to receive the sanction of the country at the present time. It was then made a special order. The time arrived for its discussion in the Senate. It was continued a special order, and has been so continued from time to time up to the present moment. In the mean time, the House passed a bill on the same subject, and it was transmitted to the Senate. That bill was referred, as was remarked by the gentleman who has just taken his seat—the Senator from Arkansas—to the Committee on Public Lands. That bill was promptly considered by the committee with a view to reporting it back to the Senate, and the majority of the measure, as has been very correctly remarked, was authorized to report it. That friend of the measure has exercised due diligence in reporting it. This morning, after the morning hour had expired—no other time being presented for reporting the bill—the majority of the Senate, and after the unfinished business had been taken up, it was reported back without displacing the regular order of business of the Senate.

The query now comes as to the propriety of postponing the Senate bill, which has been regularly introduced, regularly referred, maturely considered, and reported back in that shape believed to be most acceptable, and in that shape in which it was thought it would command the greatest strength, upon the reporting by the committee of the House bill, by substituting the House bill as an amendment in lieu of it. It is proposed that that bill should be taken up, the regular business of the Senate postponed, and the House bill considered. I can see no substantial or good reason for it. I do not understand it to be dissonant or unparliamentary to the Senate to proceed with our regular order of business, and especially when that order had been taken prior to the passage of the bill of the House. There are points of difference between the two bills, as was remarked by the gentleman from Ohio, and it is very easy to offer them as amendments, or offer the House bill as a substitute in lieu of the Senate bill; and then we can have a fair test when the action of the Senate shall be had. I think it neither unparliamentary nor unbecomingly to the House of Representatives for the Senate to proceed regularly with the consideration of a bill that it has matured and made a special order.

I regret, I will remark while I am up, to see this measure take a party direction. It may be the feeling and the desire of some to proceed for the express purpose of making political capital before the country. I hope, though, that it is not. I shall speak for myself, and I think I am authorized to speak for others, when I say that they are for this great measure, and should succeed not merely on account of what little capital can be made out of it in one direction or another. I repeat, I have been pained to see an attempt to give this measure a party direction. I have been pained to see men in different portions of the country seizing this measure and trying to incorporate it as part of their creed, for the purpose of affecting the public mind. If there are friends of the people in the Senate and in the other branch of Congress, let them be friends, and friends upon correct principles. If there are Senators here who believe that this is a great measure, calculated to ameliorate and elevate the condition of the common men and advance the great cause of civilization, let them stand by the great measure upon principle; not upon party, or the feeling or direction that may be given to it. All these movements, though they may be made with good intentions, are calculated to mislead, to retard, and in the end to defeat, its final consummation.

I speak what I know, when I say that no bill can pass the Senate containing the provisions of the House bill. Then, he who is a friend of the honestest proposition, when he can get the substance of that great proposition, when he can get all the essentials, all that is material in the bill now under consideration, it does seem to me is not acting in good faith when he takes that course, and gives the measure that direction that is likely to defeat it. If we cannot get the measure as we desire, let us take what comes the nearest to it. If we cannot get some of the details of the measure that may be desired by some, let us come forward and take the substance. Let us take the great principle; let us incorporate and place upon our statute-book that honest principle, which will carry relief, which will ameliorate, as I remarked before, the condition of thousands, if not millions, of the people of the United States.

Why, then, should we not proceed regularly, and consider the proposition legitimately and regularly before the Senate? We may simply wish to test the strength of the two propositions; if he wishes to throw this side of the Chamber in opposition to some points that he conceives material in the House bill, for the purpose of effecting party objects, let him do so. But the Senate bill, if we cannot get that which we most desire, let us take that which comes the nearest to it; leaving those who are desirous to pass the measure to stand on practical grounds, and where they properly belong.

The time has been, Mr. President, when this was no party measure. In 1846, when it was introduced in the other wing of the Capitol, it was not looked upon as a party measure. Then Whigs and Democrats sustained it; and in 1852 it passed that body by a majority of two thirds. In 1854 it was considered, debated, and finally put upon its passage, and passed by a similar majority. But recently, it is true, some of the parties of the country have assumed to make it a tenet of their creed; but let me ask the Senator or member who started originally for this great measure upon principle, let me say to him who looked at the measure and its application to the toiling millions of the United States, and was for it upon great rational principles—let me ask him, either on this side of the Chamber or on the other side of the Chamber, is he now going to be driven from its support, because some to whom he stands opposed in politics favor the measure?

I say for myself that I care not who sustains it; but, on the contrary, I am anxious to obtain support for this measure, comes from what quarter it may. If it is right in itself, it embraces a great principle; and I intend to pursue this principle, carry me where it will. I have learned in early life that, in the pursuit of a great principle, you never can reach a wrong conclusion. If this great measure is right in itself, I say the politician and the statesman is not the man who has the moral courage which should accompany every man in high place, when he is driven from its support because some may assume to support it to whom he stands opposed in reference to their political creed. It is right in itself, it is a great measure, calculated to do great good. Why, then, should we abandon it? Why should we not act on it, without reference to its bearing on any particular action that may come off hereafter? I say, let the measure be passed now, or as soon as it can be considered; let it be placed on your statute-book as a law, and take it out of the hands of wrangling and contending and misrepresenting parties. It is above parties. Parties have scarcely aspired to the elevation of the principle involved in this measure. Parties too frequently, on both sides, forget the people, the interests of the great masses of the toiling millions of the United States who bear all, who toil for all, who are to be benefited by all, and whose rights and their interests are overlooked and neglected in many contests and conflicts that transpire between the parties of this country.

It was not my purpose, sir, to make a speech on this occasion. It was not my purpose, when I entered the Senate, to obstruct any measure, unless where I believed the importance of the measure with which I was connected, or the interests of my people, required me to speak. I hope, then, that we shall consider our own bill. If the Senators wish to test the sense of the Senate upon the leading point, it can be done. If this bill is rejected, the other bill can come up as a matter of course, and we can have the sense of the Senate upon it in that shape.

But while I am up, Mr. President, I may allude to the amendment that has been proposed. Perhaps, however, I ought not to speak of that now. The question before us is simply a motion to postpone; but it seems to me that before the action of the Senate is had on the postponement, the suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama, Mr. WIGFALL, is most to be desired, so that the two bills be read, and the comparative difference between them understood, so that the Senate can act understandingly. In reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the Senate bill now under consideration, I do not know whether it is legitimate or not to discuss it now. Probably it is not, until the Senate determines whether it will postpone the one measure and take up the other, and therefore I will not touch that point. All I desire, I will say to the friends of the honestest measure, is that they should oppose the sanction of the Senate and House of Representatives—feeling confident that, if we can pass the bill in such a shape as to indorse the policy, in a very short time Congress will cure all the defects that there may be in the bill. I hope, then, that the Senate will proceed to consider the bill that is now before it.

Mr. WIGFALL. Mr. President, I propose very briefly to give my views in reference to the question before the Senate—the comparative merits of the two bills—and if I can do so in some way, so that, as the Senator from Tennessee has done, from the immediate question—

Mr. WADE. If the gentleman will permit me, I will inquire if it would not be better to settle this preliminary question before we debate the bill? I do not know but that the Senator is in order; but it seems to me to be better to adopt the course I have suggested; and I will here state that it is no part of my purpose to check or to interrupt the debate, and I cannot see how my proposition could possibly do so. I have been anxious to my friend from Tennessee—my friend on this question, at all events—that I do not wish to put myself in antagonism to him or his way of proceeding upon this subject; but it seemed to me to be right that, both these bills coming together, I should say up the House bill, and I will undoubtedly, those who preferred the Senate bill would move that as a substitute for it.

Mr. BIGLER. If the Senator will allow me a moment, that will not be necessary; because the committee have reported back the House bill, as I understand it, with amendments to make it conform to the Senate bill. The fact is, there is no difference in the questions whatever. The bill which the Senator from Ohio moves to consider is precisely the bill which is under consideration. The first question that will come up, will be on the amendment to the House bill, and the second will be on the amendment to the Senate bill. That will be the first question; and on that the merits of the two bills will be tested.

The Senator from Ohio is obviously right, so far as relates to the order of business. The House first passed the bill, it is proper that the Senate should consider it first, and if not agreeable to the Senate, the bill ought to be amended. The committee have proposed to amend the bill; they have reported amendments; and the first question will be on agreeing to those amendments. Mr. WIGFALL. The first question which I will decide, will be precisely the question between the two bills, as the Senator from Ohio proposes; and there is nothing at all in the whole question but the order of business. Now, I suggest to my friend from Texas, as he desires to go into the merits of the whole question, that he will be perfectly free to do so on the consideration of the House bill, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio; for the amendments of the committee bring up the merits of the Senate bill in antagonism with the merits of the House bill, just as distinctly as the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WADE. I did not understand, as the Senator from Pennsylvania said, that the committee reported back the House bill with the Senate bill as an amendment to it.

Mr. BIGLER. Yes, they did.
Mr. WADE. I did not understand it so.
Mr. BIGLER. Certainly they did.
Mr. WADE. If that is so, then the question would be on agreeing to their amendment, and the friends of the House bill could vote against it; but I do not understand that to be so.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of Tennessee. If the Senator will allow me, I stand distinctly that I was instructed to report back the House bill with an amendment, in lieu of it, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert what was substantially the Senate bill now under consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the first question turns on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of Tennessee. Exactly so; which is the Senate bill.

Mr. WADE. Then I withdraw the motion, and am willing to take the question on the amendment if that is the order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Ohio is under a misapprehension. There is no amendment now before the Senate; but there will be, if his motion prevails. This is the position of the case: now considering the Senate bill, not as an amendment; the Senator from Ohio has moved to postpone the Senate bill, and to take up the House bill. When you do postpone the Senate bill and take up the House bill, what have you got before you? You have got before you the House bill with the proposed amendment of the Committee on Public Lands, which is to strike out the House bill and insert the Senate bill which we are now considering. Then, if the motion of the Senator from Ohio prevails, we shall have the whole question before us in a regular shape; we can consider it, and it seems to me to be better, by common consent, postpone this bill and take up the House bill, which has with it the very Senate bill we are considering, and then we shall have the whole question before us. That is the natural course, and then we have the whole proposition before us. But now we only have the Senate bill before us. I hope the motion of the Senator from Ohio will prevail.

Mr. WIGFALL. Mr. President, the preliminary question of order being settled, I do not pretend to understand the question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have a vote on that, if the Senator from Texas pleases. Let us settle that question and know where we stand.

Mr. WIGFALL. ["Go on!"] I say I do not precisely understand how, but understanding the merits of the bill, I am going to propose as briefly as possible, give my views on the subject now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question before the Senate. The bill under consideration is a Senate bill, reported from the Committee on Public Lands, as the Senator from North Carolina has moved an amendment, and the question was upon the adoption of that amendment. In that condition of things, the Senator from Ohio moved to postpone the Senate bill and the amendment, and to take up for consideration the House bill, with the amendments, and that is the motion now before the Senate, unless he has withdrawn it.

Mr. WIGFALL. Precisely; and, Mr. President, I propose now to discuss that, and I trust that the friends of the House bill, for example, that has been so closely before us, will speak to that question as before us as they have already spoken.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I would like to ask a question of the Chair: whether it is in order to discuss the merits of the bill, or the question of amendment? I thought it had been decided that it was not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been the decision of the Chair, within a short time, that debate upon the merits of a measure was not in order, when a question merely as to the order of business was before the Senate; but debate has gone on without interruption, and the Chair will not feel like interrupting it now.

Mr. WIGFALL. I presume, if Senators will be patient, and not call me to order, the Chair will not interrupt me; and as other Senators have not interrupted me, I trust, I may continue. I am in the humor of speaking, to say a few words on this question. With that distinct understanding, I shall discuss the question before the Senate.

The Senator from Tennessee begs that this may not be considered a party question; I am at a loss to know how it can be anything but a party question; and there we differ. I suppose that every question that comes before either branch of Congress, or before the President, is ipse facta and, as our friend John Tyler would say, per se a party question; for what is the very foundation of any matter coming under consideration here? It is the power of the Government. I care not what the measure is; if it is a bill for establishing a post office or post road, or if it is a tax bill, or a bill disbursing money, or increasing the Army, or anything else, it is a party question, because the question that can come up involves, first, the power of the Government; and that again involves the ideas—and that must be settled—as to what is the form of Government under which we are living.

Here is a bill providing land for the landless, important for the African race, and touching the important matter, in my opinion, of negroes for the niggerless. [Laughter.] If this Government is an elemosinary establishment; if it was intended by the fathers to provide for the indigent, the halt, the blind, the deaf, and the dumb; if those who cannot support themselves are to be supported by the Government, then, when you give land to them, I think you ought at least to furnish those who are to work the land. That is but fair. I would regard it as a very great outrage to give a man one hundred and sixty acres of land, and then to let him go, without giving him anything. He has shown his indisposition to work at anything else. If we are to give men land, let us furnish those who will work it for them; and do the entire thing for them at once; and I was almost going to say, reopen the African slave trade, which would involve; for it would convert the Government not only into an elemosinary establishment, but a missionary concern also, that we should undertake, by reopening the African slave trade, to Christianize Africa by catching Africa and bringing Africa here where Africa can be preached to without endangering the cloth; for it is my deliberate opinion that about three preachers are eaten to every convert that is made by those who go to that country. [Laughter.]

But, the Senator from Tennessee says that this is not a party question, and that he is not a party man. I am a party man, and I cannot vote for anything except on party grounds. If it is not a party question, I cannot vote at all, [laughter;] and I expect to vote on it, and therefore I must consider it as a party question.

Mr. President, what is the proposition before the Senate? It is that we shall give homes to the homeless; that this Federal Government shall furnish for those who have no homes a place in which to live. I am in the habit of looking at things plainly and dealing with them practically; and if I know myself—and I am not in the habit of talking very often about myself—I think if there is anything for which I have an utter abhorrence, it is demagoguism, or sailing under false colors. I never run into a port and claim neutrality, but am always showing my flag. I never sail under the marine leaguers or out upon the high seas. If this Government is a consolidated, central Government; if sovereignty resides in the Federal Government; if the legal title rests in the Federal Government to all the property owned by the United States, and not only the legal title but the actual title; if this Government is not the trustee, but the cestui que trust, then I say we have a right to do what is proposed by this bill; not otherwise.

Then is this Government sovereign? How was it formed? Where does the power reside? Where is the legal title to the equities of the thing that is owned? For I shall, before we get through with this question, propose to give, not land, but money. I shall improve some what, for I am rather progressive, upon my friend from North Carolina, by substituting, not one hundred and sixty acres of land for every man, woman, and child in the United States, but $160 in money, to every one of them, and we will hold the land; for, being the friend of the people, I think the people ought to have something that would be of some use to them. Give them the money; they have as much right to the money as they have to the land. Give them the money, and then I think they ought to have their mileage, because it would be a crying evil, it would be a gross outrage, it would be a monstrous wrong upon the sovereign people of this country if they should be required to pay their own expenses here to the seat of Government to get only $160! Sir, it would be aristocratic in every feature, [laughter;] it would be establishing a monopoly in favor of wealth; it would be enabling those who could travel upon steamboats and railroads to come here to Washington and get the $160, and the poor, hard-working man who lives by the sweat of his face would be unable to get the bounty of this Government. Therefore, I shall not only propose to exchange land for money, but to add mileage also; and, if that shall be voted down, then I give fair notice that I intend to propose that, if we are to give land we shall furnish those who shall work it, and I think about three negroes would be enough—one woman, with a child, and her husband, with a prospect of a large increase. [Laughter.] Then we shall be doing the clean thing.

As before I begin exhibiting my affection for the people, and making these demonstrations, I propose to consider whether we have a right to do this, for all of us are here under oath; and I am not disposed to vote for any measure unless I believe I have clearly the constitutional right to do so. How stands this Federal Government? I cannot say that the question is sprung upon me, because I have known always, ever since I can recollect, that this question was before the country; I have at different times considered it, but I have not considered it with a view to debating it to-day. It has happened to me to feel in a humor, and therefore I speak upon the question.

Some years ago—it began a long time ago—first one of the kings of England, and then another one, then, established colonies on this continent by means and means; and after a while there were thirteen, or fourteen, or fifteen colonies established under different charters, all of them different each from the other, some of them colonial governments, some of them charter governments, and some of them proprietary governments; but such a separate, distinct political organization and community. Time rolled on; and in 1776, thirteen of these different political communities declared their independence. Canada did not; there were other British possessions and colonies that did not; but these thirteen political communities declared their independence, and thereby, by seven years' hard fighting, achieved that independence, they became sovereign, separate, and independent States.

As I have said, I can consider nothing, except as a party man, and I can vote only on party grounds, and I can vote only on party grounds. History has been ignored. Men who understood it, or ought to have understood it, have laid it aside. Theories have been substituted, and men have preached theories upon facts which never existed, except in their own imaginations; and among these, I would name that distinguished jurist, Mr. Justice Story, who wrote books; and, if he was remarkable for anything else, I happen never to have ascertained it.

When these colonies, all of them separate and distinct political communities, declared their independence under the Crown, declared their independence, what became of the colonial governments? When I speak of colonial governments, I mean those governments that were established by the Crown. Some of them were colonial; some were proprietary; some were charter governments; all of these governments were established and did exist, because of the authority which the Crown had given. When the authority of the Crown ceased, what became of the authorities of the governments? They ceased; of course they were no longer in existence, because the foundation having been removed, the superstructure toppled and fell. Then what became of them? Sovereignty rested somewhere; the sovereignty that had been in the Crown devolved somewhere. Where did it devolve? In the governments? There was no governments on which it could devolve, for the governments were all destroyed by the act of the Declaration of Independence. Then, sovereignty devolved upon the people. Upon what people? Upon the people of the thirteen different colonies which had declared their independence. Upon any others? No. Canada did not declare her independence, and she retained her sovereignty; the Crown did not devolve upon the people of Canada; but upon the people of the thirteen independent, separate colonies this sovereignty devolved, and they became in instanti thirteen sovereign, separate, and independent States. This is history. There is a general sentiment prevailing in every country that our Union is of Divine origin, and it has had a most pernicious effect on the Union itself. I believe that this very sentiment has had more to do, or will have more to do, with its destruction, if destroyed unfortunately it ever shall be, than any other sentiment that ever has pervaded the country. It has had the same effect that the old idea of torism had in England. Had Sir Robert Filmer never written his book proving the Divine right of kings, probably the revolution in England would never have occurred; and had this idea of unionism never been established, and the United States, probably this Federal Government, under the direction of a dominant party in the country, would never have committed any act that would precipitate a dissolution of the Union. As well, therefore, to talk of the rights of men, names, and discuss matters as they present themselves to us. Unionism, as unionism merely, and torism, are synonymous terms. I call things by their right names, and I shall continue to do so.

If, in the course of human events, it had happened unfortunately that one single colony had been established, and that its metes and bounds had been described by the Canada line on the one side and the Florida line on the other, and the South sea on the west, and a Declaration of Independence had been declared and a Government established, and that one single colony, and that Government would not have lasted ten years. The wisdom of man could not have devised, for such a State, a republican or democratic Government that could have lasted ten years. The soundness of the theory of the political community is that such a government as they have in Rhode Island, such a government as they have in Texas, such a government as they have in Virginia, such a government as they have in Georgia, such a government as they have in any State in this Union could not possibly have existed ten years, had it been established. Such a Government must have been established, had the people of the United States been one people; had there, in other words, been but one colony; and, when the Declaration of Independence was made, had sovereignty devolved upon one political community. But, fortunately or accidentally, there were thirteen colonies, and the sovereignty devolved upon thirteen separate political communities. Having declared their independence, they fought through a war, and they were fighting it under a loose league. They knew that they had a common enemy, and they joined together to fight that enemy without any written stipulations. About the year 1781, Maryland, upon this very equator-sovereignty, homestead doctrine, claims the Union, and she said that they were fighting for these lands, and they ought to be owned by the States in common; and that though Virginia, and New York, and the other States, had the paper titles, Maryland was not going into this matter unless she could come in and have these lands set aside for Federal purposes. Maryland was man upon this point, or in this Union, who knows the character of Maryland, that would ever accuse them of standing upon anything except a question of principle—not the love of money.

In 1781 a constitutional convention was called by Mr. Justice Story says the people of the United States as one community. Amongst whom was it formed? Amongst the people of the thirteen different colonies, then States, and amongst those thirteen States that had declared their independence, and amongst those thirteen States, the Declaration declared that "each State retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not by this Confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled. How could each State retain its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, unless each State previously had those attributes? Then they retain what else? Every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not by this Confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled. That, it seems to me, ends the question, and they stand up to that time, in their opinion, and that they each to the other admitted the fact that they were sovereign, separate, and independent communities.

These Articles of Confederation were ratified by the States in 1781. They fought the war through, and after the war was over they lived under these Articles of Confederation for three years; and any one who will sit down and read the Articles of Confederation, and then read the Constitution of the United States, will come to the conclusion that there is but one great difference between the two. The Articles of Confederation required the States to ratify the acts after they were done, and the Constitution requires them to ratify them before they are done. One is a general power of attorney to do an act; the other requires a ratification of the act after it is executed.

There is one other matter of difference between the Articles of Confederation and the present Government, though they are Governments precisely of the same sort so far as the constituents are concerned. They differ in this, that the one was a naked confederation, and the other is a republic Government. Mr. Story says that this is a consolidated Government; that it was not ratified by the States, and that it does not derive its authority from the States, because the Federal Government is a Government proper. That is what he says, from my recollection of his comments. The distinction between a Government proper and a Government improper Mr. Justice Story has never enlightened us about. Admitting that this is a Government proper, the difference between the old Articles of Confederation and the present Government is, that the present Government is a republic Government; that it is a Government which operates directly on the people, in which the powers are divided between the executive, legislative, and judicial departments. The Articles of Confederation did not provide for that division. This does; and in that again consists a main difference between the two.

In General Washington's letter, as president of the convention, he says that the object of adopting the present Constitution was that they did it unsafe to intrust these powers to one legislative body. Hence it was a change in the organization of the Government only. That being the case, it speaks volumes. The convention that drafted the Constitution, the States that ratified it, the powers that ordained and established it, never intended to change the form of the Government, or the parties to the Government, or to sacrifice the rights of those who had ordained and established it. They intended simply to change the organization; and then the words of General Washington. I quote now from the letter:

"But the propriety of delegating such executive trust to one body of men is evident."

That was the old Constitutional Congress.

Hence results the necessity of a different organization.

That "different organization" was simply substituting the present Federal Government, in which the legislative, executive, and judicial powers were vested in different departments of the Government; and in that consists the whole change between the old Government and the new. Now, sir, if, after the Articles of Confederation of 1781 were adopted, in which each State retained to itself its sovereignty, independence, and freedom, those States ever abandoned their sovereignty, independence, and freedom, I ask where is the deed of abandonment? When did they claim title? You surely would not charge me with losing my title to land, unless you could show somebody in whom it vested? You would not charge upon me that I had lost my right to anything, unless you could show some better outstanding title?

I have shown already that these thirteen colonies were separate and independent communities, existing by the authority of the Crown. I have, then, shown that they threw off the authority of the Crown, and in throwing that off, their governments fell, because the authority by which those governments had been established had ceased to exist. Then, I have shown that the sovereignty devolved not upon the governments, because there were no governments to receive it, but upon the people; and that sovereignty devolved upon the people of thirteen sovereign, separate, and independent nations.

Then I have come up to this point—we have got through the Articles of Confederation and the formation of the present Government—why was the present Government formed? In 1787, there were seven three and four million people in the United States. These United States were acting together under the Articles of Confederation. They found that it was a clumsy arrangement. No State was strong enough to stand by itself. Each one of them would have been in a most excellent condition had been secure from foreign aggression. Then, in order to secure liberty to themselves and to their posterity, to insure domestic tranquillity, to provide for the common defense, and promote the general welfare, and to form a more perfect union, they sent delegates to a convention, to which should be added the words of the Articles of Confederation, I have not the paper before me now, but if I shall deem it necessary, after this debate is over, I may furnish it to the reporters; it is a singular fact that every single State that appointed delegates to that convention, upon that convention, should have the right to propose any amendments which would deprive the States of their right to self-government. I do not pretend to quote literally, but that was the substance of every single one of them. Those delegates were appointed by the State governments; they met and drafted the present articles of union.

Now, sir, let us consider for a moment, in order to construe these articles, (for it is right, in construing a treaty, always to look to the protocols,) what was the object of the convention? The articles states the object. The preamble by a party that has existed in this country for a long time, has sometimes been considered as the Constitution—I mean the old Whig party—and the Constitution itself has been considered as a sort of contract. I do not think that is correct; but that anything which, in the opinion of the Federal Government, was for the common defense and general welfare, could be done without reference at all to the enumerated powers. Such was not the understanding of the fathers. This Constitution was drafted by men who were sovereign over the States. They ratified it. It became binding between each State that ratified it and the other States ratifying it. Between no other States did it become binding. When it was ratified by every State, it became binding only between the States; the individuals had nothing to do with it. I have no right to construe this Constitution; I cannot say what it means; I owe my allegiance to the State of Texas; the State of Texas has become a party to this compact; her understanding of the compact is binding upon her. When the Federal Government talks about a State committing treason, they talk sheer nonsense. A government cannot commit treason! Why, sir, a de facto government, one that has no existence except for a day, cannot commit treason. A government is a temporaryity; it is a matter of imagination; it is a thing that cannot exist; but if there is any single rule that is laid down by the writers on international law about which there is no exception in the world, it is the proposition that any individual acting under a government de facto can be guilty of treason only in the eyes of the world which he is acting. By a government de facto, I mean a government that has a legislative, executive, and judicial department, and an exchequer. Whenever you find a legislative, executive, and judicial department, and an exchequer, then you can be guilty of treason; and any one acting under such a government, and who cannot be guilty of treason to the government that has that legislative, executive, and judicial department, and that exchequer; and whenever that government declares its relations to any government, or set of governments, as an end, its decision is final, so far as those within its territory (that is) are concerned.

fancy for being hung that I have not. They are perfectly willing, they say, whenever the emergency arises, to comply with rebellion and treason; they are willing to be hung; now I am not. I understand that I owe my allegiance to the State of Texas; I understand that that State is one of the parties to this compact. I understand that this Government is exercising—no, sir; I take that back. I understand that this Government assigns powers through this Government conjointly with the other thirty-two States with whom she is confederated; and whenever she declares that she ceases to exercise those sovereign powers conjointly through this agency, whenever she declares that this Federal Government is no longer her agent, I am bound by her behests; and if this Government or the other States shall declare war against her, I will elect either to fight under the standard of my own country, or to fight against it; and if I shall be found under her flag fighting for and upon the soil of Texas, then I shall be held to have transgressed upon the law of nations before you could treat me as a traitor. If I should be caught in the ranks of the enemy and he not hanged, I should not receive what I should in that event receive from the Government of Texas. Those men who talk about revolutionary rights are simply guilty of the ignorance of not knowing under what form of government we are living. They talk about States committing treason. How is it possible that a State can commit treason? A State is not a rebelion. Perhaps, as you say, the individuals who are acting under the authority of the State. You cannot pick up any book upon international law that does not lay it down as an axiom, that any one who is acting under a government, either de jure or de facto, cannot be guilty of treason or rebellion, because those things are not possible. They are, therefore, talking about what they do not know, and it is mere gabble; that is the truth of it. A great many people, who talk about defending sovereign rights and rebellion and treason, are not ready to resist their right; are simply indulging in common; they do not know anything about what they are talking of; and they do not intend to do anything when the emergency arises.

Well, Mr. President, I have wandered so far from my subject that I have not time to come back; but I was on the homestead bill, I know, [laughter], and I am coming back to that. This Government being established on these principles, and it being a Government of the kind I have described, the question results, has this Government a right to exercise its powers over the people of the homes? and after that is settled, as I said before, I will introduce the other proposition, whether we should not furnish rations to the negroes, in order to work the lands? You must understand why it is that I have gone into these preliminaries. It is to establish the fact that the lands do not belong to the individuals living in the United States; that they do not belong to the individuals as one political community; that there is no such political community; that the legal title to the lands is in the individuals living in the United States. The Federal Government is itself a trustee, and that the cestui que trusts are not the individuals living in the United States, but the States themselves, who are the parties to the contract. If it be conceded that the premises are correct, and that the legal title to the lands vests in the United States Government, and that the equitable title is in the States, that the States are the cestui que trusts; and if it be also conceded, (which I suppose will be doubted or denied,) that there is a tenth amendment to the Constitution, which declares that the powers not delegated to the Federal Government by the Constitution are reserved to the States, "and you can find no delegation of power to provide homes for the homeless, and land for the landless; and if you cannot find among the enumerated powers of this Government, among other purposes, after stating that the States are to have a voice in the union, and to secure liberty to ourselves and to our posterity, and insure domestic tranquillity, and provide for the common defense and general welfare, that this is also an elementary establishment to take care of the widowed and the orphan, and found there, then I think my premises will follow; and what are they? That the lands belong to the States; that they are a Federal fund; that the money in the Federal Treasury belongs to the States; that that is a Federal fund; that every single article of property belongs to the States, the legal title vesting in the Federal Government; and that the lands and the money, and every other single article of property of value are held by the Federal Government as a trustee, the States being the creditors. That being the case, they must be administered for the common defense and general welfare, and cannot be distributed among the people as individuals.

I take it that I have established the proposition that there is no such political community as the people of the United States; that these States, having confederated together and agreed to exercise some of their sovereign powers conjointly, through the Federal Government, and the Federal Government having the right to hold the legal title to the lands and the money, the Federal Government can distribute the money as easily and as constitutionally as it can the lands. This being the case, I do not understand how it is that my friend from Tennessee can discuss this question except as a party question; because I understand that all Democrats believe what I believe. This is my understanding. I think I am one of the straightest of the sect.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. By permission of the Senator from Texas, I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. WIGFALL. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I desire to ask him whether there is any principle involved in the homestead measure that has not been recognized by laws passed in every Administration from the days of Washington down to the present time?

Mr. WIGFALL. I will answer as far as I know. This fact is, that I do not know, and it would not make a particle of difference to me if I did. There is nothing from the days of General Washington down to the present time that cannot be explained by precedent.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I was proceeding on the idea that the gentleman's proposition was a legal one, and that precedent would have its due influence with him; and I simply refer to the precedents of the Government from General Washington down to the present time; and I thought perhaps they would be entitled to some consideration from the gentleman.

Mr. WIGFALL. Whether I have a legal judgment, or not, is a question that my clients have decided upon. I decided upon it, and I think it would not be due to delicacy for me to say whether I knew much law or not; but I understand that political questions and legal questions are very different; that whilst you can quote upon courts their own decisions, and insist that they shall regard them, though courts very frequently do not; the powers of this Government depend upon the compact between the different States in the organization of the Government, and I have not yet seen anybody except an old and dyed-in-the-wool Whig, who ever talked much of those precedents. Did not General Washington recommend unanimity? Is there one of the fathers who did not recommend something that no Democrat would touch with a forty foot pole? I do not except Mr. Jefferson from himself. During his administration was not one of the great innovations of the Government for the public lands for internal improvements? Why, sir, we have reached a queer point of progress if this Democratic party is to be held down to precedents. I take it that we have reached a point in time, it is necessary to have a new understanding of the bargain.

Toryism has had its day. The humbuggery of the sacredness of the Union has had its day. I do not believe Sir Robert Filmer would ever have been an anti-Mason or a Free-soiler. He was a man of unimpaired mind, a man of high birth, and well bred. Sir Robert Filmer is dead, and his doctrine with him. The Declaration of Independence lives as far as it has a meaning; further than that, we need not own it. It says that every people have a right to establish their own governments; they have a right to live under such institutions precisely as suits them; and if the people of these different States desire to-morrow a monarchy, say they have a right to have it; but this Federal Government has no right to establish one over them; and if any one of the States were to demand the intervention of the other States through the Federal Government to secure to them a republican form of government, these States are obliged to each other to do it. But the right of self-government is one that is inalienable, and the only one that is. Individuals have no inalienable rights. It is a fallacy that had its origin within the last century, when Montesquieu and Madison, and every other man, and disorganism of every kind had its origin. Every people have a right to live under such a form of government as they see fit, and when a people choose to change their institutions they have a right to do it.

As to the thing of precedents, I am surprised that any one who calls himself a Democrat should talk to me about precedents. If precedents are to govern, then a tariff for protection is constitutional; then a bank of the United States is constitutional; then internal improvements are constitutional; then any thing that has ever been done is constitutional; and if that is the doctrine, I shall introduce a resolution here proposing, by the authority of the Congress of the United States, to declare that the Commemoration of Joseph Story be, and is hereby, the laws of the United States until we have time to make better ones, as they said in Connecticut, I believe, when they adopted the laws of God. I am shocked that a man pretending to be a Democrat talks in that way. Democracy in this country means one thing, and in Europe means another, and quite a different thing. Democracy in this country does not mean wearing a dirty shirt; it does not mean being unwashed and uncombed. I never saw a Democrat in this country who denied that a man had a right to associate with anybody he pleased.

I never saw a Democrat here who denied that every man's house was his castle. I never saw a Whig who would have abolished the writ of habeas corpus or the right of trial by jury. We did not differ from the Whigs upon questions of social equality, but we differed upon two questions of the construction of the Federal Constitution. The Whigs adopted the doctrines of General Hamilton, Mr. Story, Mr. Clay, and Mr. Webster. The Democrats have adopted the doctrines of Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Calhoun, the great exponents of the South, and the great expounders—Calhoun the commentator, and the commentary better than the text. That is the difference between the parties. The Democrats have adopted the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions, and the resolutions by the Virginia report, that this is a Federal Government, and that no State has the right to judge for itself of the infraction of the compact and the mode and measure of redress. Beyond that, I do not understand Democracy to go.

This matter of constituting this Government a sort of hospital for the indigent, the lame, the blind, is a thing that never entered into the contemplation of its framers. The States that established this Government established what Mr. Jefferson gave it its proper nomenclature. He called them confederates. These States were confederated together, because neither one of the States was strong enough to defend itself against foreign aggression. They established this Government so that they might unite their forces to resist foreign aggression; and all domestic matters, they left each State to judge for itself. That is the history of the matter, and it is the philosophy of it; and if we had attempted anything else it would have been a failure; and it is because I believe that this Government is the best that has ever been devised by the human mind, that I am a Union man. But when I say that I am a Union man, I do not mean that I am a consolidationist; I do not mean that my happiness depends on our being united to New England. The fact is, that New England has been rather a nuisance.

Let our Army and our Navy be formed, and we have found a very uncomfortable partner. The snakes let a porcupine once into their place—not meaning to say that we are the snakes, or New England the porcupine—but when the porcupine got in he told the snakes to leave if they wanted to live. We have found a very comfortable partner. This Government, as far as New England has been concerned, has been a cow, as some one has said, in homely phrase, with its mouth to the South. We have been feeding the beast, and New England has been milking it; and it is our political history since the Union was formed. We would not have complained about that, because I am charitable, and I like to feed those who are hungry. Providence did not provide well for these people; but they have waxed fat, and are kicking at their feeder; that is the difficulty. [Laughter.] Providence made man that country at first, putting the stone on top and the soil at the bottom. They found that the soil was not good, so they dug it up in order to plant it. Hence it was that by Federal legislation, calling it national, they have been able, without work, to get rich, whilst we have been getting poor.

It is all twaddle and nonsense to talk about fighting and the cost of the cost of the dissolution of the Union. What would be the effect of a dissolution of the Union? Their apoplexies would cease to turn; their looms would cease to move. Their ships would be laid up to rot in their wharves when the navigation laws were repealed. Their operatives and their sailors, turned out to starve, or to starve, or to burn, would turn upon them; and when they gathered together in the town of Boston, to say what should be done for their starving families, the Senator from New York who talks about the "irrepressible conflict," and the other Senator, who seems very happy and contented—the Senator from New Hampshire, who has done all this wrong, and who is passing round now to see what is going on—would have their heads taken off close to their shoulders; they would be snuck on poles, and their bones would be scattered about. I believe there is a God in Heaven. No, air, there is nothing for these men to understand, for they dare not; they are not going to coin their hearts, and drop their blood for drachmas; not they; there is nothing for them to understand but that the South is right, and that they are wrong. They have told the northern people that what the Democrats have told the northern people is true—that there is a possibility of a dissolution of the Union—to make them turn pale at the prospect.

Sir, that is the truth, and they know it. They do not dare say it, and they are not going to starve if they did. They know it. But they are going on blindly, supposing that, as one of the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. WILCOX] said, this was a farce that they were playing. Farce! Tell you that they are past when farces are played. The players have passed and the farce is over; and now it is a tragedy. I rise here not to make any threats; and the clock indicates to me that I have spoken at least an hour and a half longer than I intended; but, as I am up, I believe I will continue; for I may just as well tell the whole story, and I am as much in the humor as I ever shall be again. ["Go on!"] These people of the North have been misled, and those who have misled them do not believe that we are in earnest. I should be recreant to my duty if I were not to stand up and say that I do not desire to acquire experience and upon my heart, that a Black Republican can never be inaugurated President of these United States. Now cut your leashes; turn loose your terriers, and take in your rat-killers; and if we do not go into Boston, into winter quarters, before you ever get into Texas, you may shoot me.

I should like to know how you are going to conquer the South. You conquer the South! Why, sir, I look around me and I see only one man on the other side of the Atlantic who has seen the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PRECH] who has ever seen the flashing of a gun. I do not like to speak of gentlemen in their presence, but there is a man, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. DAVIS], who has given a name to one of the arms that is used in our Army, and I have seen him, and I have seen before me the man, [pointing to Mr. LANE]—he hangs his head, but not for shame. I think God, I see around me every where here, such men. There is the Senator from Texas [Mr. HEMPHILL] he and I ate hard bread and salt pork in Texas, and I would like to see him on the day the battle of independence was fought in Texas. I look on this side, and I see everywhere men who have seen service, and who understand it; on that side I see none.

You going to conquer us? Blood is a very common fluid, and it costs very little. A man is killed; it does not amount to much; it is really a matter of small consequence to him, to his family, or to the country. Occasionally a man occupies a position, such as Louis Napoleon, that if he were to die at the wrong time it might create a convulsion; but so far as the masses are concerned, it is matter of very little consequence. If I were to die to-day, it is a mere question whether I cry for my wife or she cries for me. The country or the community are not involved in the question—really not; and I am speaking seriously. As to wars, the military chest is the question. You are going to conquer us. Well, if you are going to get the money? The Union being dissolved, and your ships knocked out of the carrying trade, we can then put our cotton, our rice, our tobacco, our sugar, and our molasses, upon any bottoms that will carry them cheapest. The Senator from Rhode Island over there, [Mr. Sissowas], I should like to know what he is going to do with his calico. Who is going to buy it? We would not. We could get it cheaper elsewhere. Your manufacturers would be broken up. If they were not, to whom would you sell? Your only market is in the South. Well, if you cannot sell to us—and surely you could not tell the Union was dissolved—how are you going to make money? How are you going to get any money under custom-house taxation? What are you going to ship abroad? Cotton, for instance. Well, if you are there is no trouble about it. But perhaps you will say that you will blockade us. In the first place, naval officers like to have a little pay now and then, if only to buy grog with. You cannot keep them in service unless you pay them. How are you going to pay them unless you have your people? Your operatives will have nothing to do; your capitalists will be broken; and whom are you going to tax?

How do you stand? We have our cotton, and Europe is obliged to buy it. You might cram the granaries of England to bursting with the supply of cotton for one week, and she would be starving. Queen Victoria's crown could not stand on her head a week after the supply of cotton was exhausted, nor her head upon her shoulders. You would not catch our cotton in England, would you? I expect it would travel under the Union-jack, and a tolerably safe flag it is. Then I am a traitor, because I suppose England would not be starved out: I am talking about a confederacy with England, am I? Well, before God, I would not as soon confederate with England as I would with you. They are our own blood. I am an Englishman. You are Englishmen. All of us are Anglo-Saxons. We happened to settle in different colonies. We happened simultaneously to throw off the dominion of the Crown of England. We have confederated for certain purposes, and you have broken your bargain; and then you come in here and impudently bring in the word of God and his authority to oppress us, and tell us that this Union is of Divine origin. You falsify history, and you pretend that this Union is cemented with the blood of your ancestors. What drop of blood was ever shed for the Union? No, sir; it was for liberty that our fathers fought. For seven long years did they fight for liberty, and three years after that liberty was achieved, and after George III. had been deposed, the independence of these thirteen different colonies; did they agree, for the common defense and general welfare, to subordinate the Government of the Union for the old Articles of Confederation; and yet you falsify history, and come here and say that our forefathers were fighting for the Union—that the Union was cemented with the blood of our ancestors.

This sort of twaddle did at another time. The people of England were kept quiet by the torism of Sir Robert Filmer for a time. The people of the South were kept quiet for a time by the supposition that General Washington, or General Jackson, or the Almighty, had some time or other formed this Union, and that King George had come over here with some Hessians and tried to break it up. [Laughter.] This was the general impression, and that for seven long years they shed an immense quantity of blood for this Union, and that they whipped old George out. But you have forced us to consider two questions: first, whether slavery is morally, socially, or politically evil; and in the next place, whether this Union was actually cemented with the blood of our ancestors, whether it is treason to consider whether the people live under a good form of government.

We have come to the conclusion at the South that we are living under the very best form of government that was ever instituted by man; but that it was only instituted by man. We have come to the conclusion that the States have the right to legislate on all subjects of domestic interest, the Federal Government being the organ through which the States arrange all their foreign relations. It is the best balanced Government that has ever existed. Extending through many degrees of longitude, it is the only Government in the world thirty-three different sorts of governments, they would each have been powerless to protect themselves against foreign aggression, and they might have got to fighting each other. Had States been obliterated, and the States governments abolished, and a central consolidated Government formed, that Government would have fallen into the hands of the majority interests and have been pressed on the minority interest; but as things are balanced, the rights of the States, their boundaries, their jurisdiction, being maintained, it is the best Government that has ever existed.

When, sir, I recently came to the seat of this Federal Government, having been absent for a long time, and living upon an extreme border; when I saw this Capitol with its decorations, and the various improvements in gunnery, and went to the different Departments and looked about there and saw the power and the wealth displayed, I reflected that Texas has a part in this—my own State; this is the agency through which she and the other States exercise their sovereign power. I see the power of these States; I see not the power of the Federal Government; and as I said to my friend from Mississippi, walking along the other day—the thing flashed on me in an instant—it reminds me of Rome, vulgar called the burning glass; it holds it before the sun and the sun concentrates its power, but I have no particular admiration for the glass; it merely concentrates the rays. It is the great luminary of heaven, the bright eye of the universe that you have your admiration for; you have your admiration for the sun, and thus when I see the powers of this Government here, in Washington, I have no jealousy of it, but am proud of it; I have no terror of it, for I feel that this Government is but the lens through which the powers of the different States are concentrated; and I would be brought to it.

I am no disunionist. I wish to God these thirty-three States might exist for all time; and if we could teach the Black Republicans a constitutional idea; if we could get them to read or understand or comprehend the history of the country; if we could make them understand anything, there would be no difficulty in administering the Government; it is as to make it a blessing to everybody; but the ox knows his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but that people do not understand, and New England will not consent. There is no great difficulty. They insist upon considering us one people, and this as one political community, and this Government as a consolidated democracy. In the first place, it is not a democracy; it is a republican form of government. In the next place, it is a consolidated democracy, and the people do not live together for a day. In New England, where they really are dependent upon some other people, and they live merely upon charity, and must always live so, mere pensioners, this Government has thwarted the will of Providence; and as long as the Government can be kept together, the will of Providence will be outraged; but cut you off, and you starve. A sea-gull cannot live in New England. It is utterly impossible. It is said they are everywhere; but it is a fact that can be demonstrated. If they cannot live in New England, if one could be found there, I have no doubt Barnum would have it in his museum, and he would have the skin stuffed. The New England men know as well as I do that they could not live out of this Union. They cannot live without our States, yet they cannot live with us, but they must be interfering impudently with everybody else's concerns. It is the character of the people. They left England in quest of liberty. They went over against the Dutch, and the Dutch let them alone; but the Dutch would not allow them to interfere with anybody else, and consequently they came over into New England.

Now, you dare not deny that your ancestors went among the Dutch, and the Dutch let them alone; but the Dutch would not allow them to persecute anybody else, and to persecute was the only happiness they knew. They came to New England, and there they ran poor old Roger Williams and all the Baptists out into the Seekonk river, and he and somebody else baptized each other; and they persecuted the rest of the preachers, and from that time you have been propagandizing and persecuting. You think your form of government is the best; we think ours is. Do we publish pamphlets about you? Do we go into New England to make speeches to your strikers? Do we attempt to interfere with your institutions? Ours are infinitely better than yours, and can be so explained. You call us the slave States; you call yourselves the free States. We could with propriety call our States the free negro States, and ours the free white States. Where I live every white man is the peer of every other white man. I should like to see one of the gentlemen sitting over on that side try to get a white man in Texas to block his boots, or carry his horse. He might get carried himself. [Laughter.] But where you live I can hire a white man to do anything. He wears my livery. If I am entitled to a coat-of-arms, I have nothing to do except to put it on a button, and he wears it; and you are not free to do anything. You are free white States, where every white man, thank God! feels that he is the peer of any other white man. Where you live, every free negro feels that he is the equal of every white man; and the white man, who has not money, feels that he is the equal of the man who has money. There is no difference. It is so, and you dare not deny it; you cannot deny it.

But, "to return to our mutton." I started off on the homestead bill, and it has got to be four o'clock. My friend from Tennessee wants to give homestead to his slaves. I don't want to know, why we can do it and how—for what purpose? The Senator from New Hampshire entered into a defense of it. I saw sometime ago a review defending Nero, and attempting to prove that he was very good man. Finally I saw that I heard the Senator defend the agrarians of Rome for the first time—I will not say it was the first time; for sometime ago I took up Niebuhr's Rome, a book of high authority, and saw that he attempted to defend the agrarians, but it passed me by. I have a very good mind to do something about agrarianism; and I heard the Senator from New Hampshire to-day say the agrarians were the friends of the people. Well, I sent to the Library for an authority. I do not know that I have the strongest passage upon the subject, but I will have one from Cicero. I ask it that the fathers are good authority on certain subjects, though I am not over fond of the fathers. I have not very great respect for the fathers; but I like it, when a man has lived at the time when things were going on, and has an argument for or against that measure, his argument may be considered a pretty good evidence of what the measure was. Cicero, in his Offices, book two, chapter two, uses this language about the agrarians. He says:

Those men who wish to make themselves popular?"

Of course the Senator from New Hampshire is not one of those—oh! no; nor my friend from Tennessee either.

"Those men who wish to make themselves popular, and who, for this purpose, either attempt agrarian laws, in order to drive people from their possessions; or who maintain that creditors ought to forgive debtors what they owe, undisturb the foundations of the State; they destroy all credit, which cannot exist where money is taken from one man to be given to another; and they set aside justice, which is always violated when every man is not suffered to retain what he has."

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me answer him in a word right there?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator give way to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WIGFALL. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I simply want to say right here that I know that it is the libel that has been written upon that very class of men from the time of Cicero down; but that lately the investigation of modern history has shown that Cicero and that class were wrong, and that the money-lenders and patriots, and if the Senator will read Niebuhr and the modern writers on Roman history, he will so find it.

Mr. WIGFALL. That is a personal affair between Cicero and the Senator from New Hampshire. [Laughter.] I saw the other night some Roman citizens, one named Sannini and another Terminus, and looked at them and reflected, and asked myself whether they could possibly be the descendants of Scipio Africanus and Pompey the Great. I do not know; but they are Roman citizens; they are here, and if it will not put me to too much trouble, I shall probably inform them of the fact that the character of Cicero has been assumed here as a libeler; and if these Roman citizens have the pride which Romans once had in saying, "I am a Roman citizen," probably the Senator from New Hampshire will have to answer them. [Laughter.] But, sir, I shall leave it to the friends of the Senator. Cicero, I do not regard those agrarians as a set of people who were attempting really to distribute the property of the rich amongst those who had none, and it has been by common consent the accepted opinion and the admitted doctrine for two thousand years. Niebuhr, a few years ago, started a new theory, in which, I think, he is not sustained except by the Senator from New Hampshire.

But admit that it is all right: the question is, whether this Federal Government has a right to act on agrarians or not. What was the object of the Government? Why was it instituted? What powers has it? I say this—and I defy any Senator here to answer me—that if we have the right to distribute land, we have the right to distribute money. Land is property. The other Senator from Tennessee (Mr. CLEVELAND)—I did not hear his speech read the other day, because I do not like to hear speeches that are read; I intended to read it some time or other, but I have not had time; and I was betrayed to-day into this discussion through what the Senator from New Hampshire said, for as soon as he got into defending agrarianism I sat for the book, and I really got up to answer him, and have been led off into a speech on the question generally, which I am very sorry for, but, nevertheless, it is done—the Senator from Tennessee is not the other day read a speech here, in which it seemed to me he went into a constitutional argument to show that the object of the Federal Government was to acquire territory in order to establish new States, and those States to be admitted into the Union. He said that there was one Federal purpose, and that is, if there is a policy that has ever existed upon Tennessee, in which a Tennesseean has ever indulged—and it is saying a good deal for him, for they have been terribly loose in their construction of the Democracy of that State [laughter]—and as to the party, never splitting tickets, but generally terribly unsound in theory—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WIGFALL. Truly.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Before he answers my colleague's speech, I think it would be best for him to read it; and in the next place, so far as Tennessee is concerned, in reference to her loose construction, she is prepared and willing to comply with Texas or any State in this Confederation.

As to the question of loose construction, I understand that the Senator concedes the power on the part of this Government to grant land for the construction of roads, and to appropriate money, which would involve the expenditure of the public money to which he has alluded. I think before the Senator makes such broad strikes and deals such indiscriminate blows, he had better define distinctly and definitely his own position.

In true, to-day he has made quite a miscellaneous collection. He discussed the subject of agrarianism, things that were in connection with the homestead, and many others that had no more connection with it than the moon. Many things he has said to-day have not had the slightest bearing on the homestead proposition; and I do not think it kind or exacting, legitimate, either, in a senatorial or other discussion, to arraign a State and its citizens, and that, too, upon a speech before it has been read, and when he who makes the attack has himself offered a proposition that cannot be defended on principle.

Mr. WIGFALL. Well, Mr. President, of the railroads, I have simply to say that the Senator has mistaken me. I deny in toto the right of this Federal Government to build a railroad, or charter an incorporation to build one, or to aid a company in building one: enough for that. I believe the Federal Government has the right to contract for carrying the mails, munitions of war, naval and military stores; and if the bill that I have introduced does not come within that boundary, then I will vote against my own bill: enough of that.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. With the leave of the honorable Senator, I ask him if he did not say to himself that provides for precisely that thing?

Mr. WIGFALL. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if I did not tell him that I would not vote for the bill I introduced, and that I had a substitute which embodied my views?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If the Senator told me he would not vote for it, very well.

Mr. WIGFALL. Exactly. That is the fact; but go on a little more.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I only wish to say that I would not introduce a bill that I would not vote for.

Mr. WIGFALL. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. IRELAND] the other day introduced a bill and voted against it himself. I have high authority. I introduced one here, and intend to amend it.

The Senator will be obliged to be careful to criticize a speech before I have read it. I think it is a most monstrous thing to read a speech here. If it had been delivered, I should have listened to it. I will read part of it. I was speaking merely to what I understood to be the purport of the speech. I made no imputation upon it. It is known to everybody that the Tennessee Democrats are rather loose in their actions. [Laughter.] They have not stood with Virginia; they have not stood with Alabama or Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator; but as he seems to be in a very happy humor, and very ready in repartee, I would like to know how long the Senator has been a Democrat?

Mr. WIGFALL. Me? Since 1849, I voted for Van Buren, and have supported the nominees of every Democratic convention from that time down this far President; and if I can get forgiveness for having done all of it, I shall be very lucky. [Laughter.] But, sir, I did that because I found that party always, objectionable as its certain number of members have been, and its action. They, at least, professed what I believed; the others had the honesty to come out and confess to the truth that they were for administering the Government as I believed they were not authorized to do under the Constitution. I never split tickets either; nor do I ever bolt a nomination; but I have supported the Democratic party on general principles that it was better to get half a loaf than none. I think it better to have a half Democrat than a whole Whig. I knew that there were a great many so-called Democrats in whom I could smell the wolf all the time; they were not Democrats; and I knew they did not believe a word I believed. I knew that they believed everything old Story had ever written; I knew that they dealt with bitterness; they denied as Peter did that he had any fault with the South, Kentucky and Virginia resolutions, as construed by the Virginia report; they had the hands of Esau, and it was the voice of Jacob. I knew that; but what was the use of voting against them for those who had the advantages of being honest, and saying what they would do? In addition to that, I always knew that if the Democratic party got into power, whilst the nominees might not be exactly up to my standard, the majority of the party was; and I hoped, by one influence or another, to get into the Government, and to stay there for the next four years. Besides, I have already stated to-day that I thought hunger would tame the wolf; and the Opposition would break up if they could not get power, and we would get back things right.

The Senator from Tennessee says I have been a little wandering in my speech to-day, and have talked about things generally. Well, sir, I would say this: so far as that old Whig party is concerned, I think it is not very much to blame. It began a theory that was very good, and it secured the opportunity of trying the theory. We kept them out of office all the time. If they could have been put in for about eight or twelve years, and worked the thing out, they would have found the impossibility of working the machine with their notions; but they were just in the condition that old Samuel Pepps and the Royalists were during the time of the Stuarts, after the protectorate was over and Charles II. was inaugurated. His government was a failure, almost as great a one as that of 1842, when the omnibus turned over and split the entire Whig party. [Laughter.] Sir Samuel Pepps was writing his memoirs, and he said that Royalists had been driven by Cromwell and his people from England, not out of the continent, and they lived there for such a number of years that they knew nothing of English manners and customs and habits, or the English constitution; and when they came back, Charles II. was obliged either to take Cromwell's people into his Government, or to go back to England and take gentlemen who had been educated on the continent, which he was obliged to do; and it was not owing to any deficiency in their sense, but they did not understand the English constitution, and, therefore, the whole government of Charles II. was a failure. I have, in charity, always supposed that if the Whigs had a fair chance, and had ever held this Government more than four years at a time, they would have found out that their theory was wrong, and they would have altered and have rectified it; they never had the opportunity. We always put them in the awkward squad, where they could not keep step, or get the touch of the elbow. We never gave them a chance.

Now, the Senator from Tennessee has brought up this matter of Tennessee. I simply say that they are not and have not ever been considered among the straitest of the sect. I have not read that argument of his colleague; but I shall discuss it as I understood it; and it was that, this Government was constituted for the purpose of admitting new States into the Union; and that being the case, the public lands were to be used with a view to creating new States, and not as a fund. I deny that, in toto. I deny that you can extend the area of freedom, so far as these States are concerned. I deny that you can extend the area of freedom, and all that sort of thing, in the general acceptance of the term. I ask the Senator from Virginia, who sits before me, [Mr. MASON], how is it that he proposes to extend the area of Virginia? Virginia is a State; how meta and moranda; there is a term and there is a rectitude; living the old Virginia has a government; they have the writ of habeas corpus; they have the right of trial by jury; they desire to be allowed to till their own farms; they do not expect to live except by the sweat of their faces; but they do expect to be not meddling in their pockets that they get from the sweat of their faces, except what is necessary to defray the necessary expenses of the Government. That is what they expect. Now, sir, if you were to annex Prussia, Russia, England, and France, to this Government, would the people of Virginia have any more the right to the writ of habeas corpus, or the right of trial by jury, any more the right of the proceeds of their own industry, than they have now? Then, would they be benefited? If the people of Virginia would not be benefited, what would they be protected themselves against foreign aggression, then there would be reason why they should confederate with other people. It would simply be because they were not able to defend themselves against foreign aggression—that is the only motive. If they were able to defend themselves against foreign aggression, they never would confederate with anybody else, and never would have done it, and would not have done it now, and would break up the Confederation in a day. If, then, they felt that they were not strong enough to defend themselves against foreign aggression, they would confederate with other States, so that they and the other States together would be able to protect themselves; and, having accomplished that object, why do they want to extend the Confederation?

The Senator from Tennessee supposes that we have a sort of blithering Americanism that is going to spread over the whole continent, and cross the Pacific, and take in the Sandwich Islands; and that, in the area of freedom, were going to take in the whole world, and be a truly magnificent thing. The whole of that is a false doctrine. I think it is a doctrine that no Democrat should ever entertain. It is a doctrine that we ought to expose here on the floor of the Senate. We ought to begin to teach, to preach, and practice pure Democracy; that is, the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions; as construed by the Virginia repealer. We ought to begin and repudiate and trample on this national idea. Nationalism was taken by the nose of the neck and kicked out of the convention that drafted the Constitution. Mr. Eliworth, from Connecticut, I believe, moved that we should not do this. He should be "expressed." That was the word—"expressed." They did not intend to adopt a national government. These States, confederated together for the purpose, I have said, are living together; we are representing them, and these States act through us. But feel as you feel, per se. The States are doing through us, and therefore are doing by themselves. There is no doubt about that. They are acting here together.

I want to know why we want any additional territory. What for? There is Rothchild. He has an immense capital that he is operating, and he has his brothers in partnership with him. Why would he admit new partners? If they could bring capital in, and he wanted more capital, doubtless he would take them in. But suppose he were to say to a person who has some land, "I need just a little more capital as I need now; I am now Jew to the kings, and have just as much money as I need for that; whenever I want to be King of the Jews I may want a little more; but I rather think I would prefer to be Jew to the kings than King to the Jews." I am now Jew to the kings, and have just as much money as I need for that; whenever I want to be King of the Jews I may want a little more; but I rather think I would prefer to be Jew to the kings than King to the Jews. If Rothchild were to admit any man into his firm who had as much money as he had, he would be doing an act of supererogation; there would be no necessity for it. If he let in anybody else who had lost his means by his own imprudence, he would be damaging the credit of his own firm, and ought not to do it as a prudent man.

I say that these States are the parties to the compact; that there is no such people as the people of the United States; that there is but one single idea; we can act upon, and that, is, there are thirty-three sovereign, equal, and independent political communities; that, having confederated for certain purposes, having an agency for certain purposes, and that agency having the entire power to protect them against foreign aggression, and each one of them having the right to acquire territory as it deems necessary and proper for the protection of its own citizens, the question arises: do we want other States annexed to us or admitted into the Union? If not, why should we acquire additional territory? There is the question that it seems to me the Democracy have done so seriously, or have forgotten. Why do we want additional territory, and what do we want it for?

The Senator from Tennessee says we want it because we are bound to make new States, and admit them in, or something of that sort, and that their public lands are owned by the Federal Government, not because of their value, but for the purpose of making new States of them. I deny it in fact. I doubt very much, as Mr. Jefferson said, whether this Federal Government ever had the right to acquire one foot of territory. If it had the right to acquire one foot of territory, it could acquire it only as property. If we went to war, we would take what we could find, if it was money, if it was territory, if it was any other sort of property, and hold it by the title of the sword, and after the war was over and we were free from any foreign Government the territory which it had held, we would distribute it and sell it out; but this Federal Government certainly never was formed with a view of colonizing other countries. This combination and compact between the States was certainly never formed with a view of colonizing and extending the area of freedom, and all that sort of thing. It is an after-thought; it is Red Republicanism; it is Federalism; it is nationism; it is an ignoring of history; it is pursuing such a course of argument as is going to lead to no good, but is going to produce a result that those who advocate it do not dream of.

Mr. GREEN. Will the Senator allow me to make a motion to adjourn? It is very late, and the Senator can finish to-morrow.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will come now, with the consent of the Senate, and that is merely for the purpose of winding up. I have stated, I believe, all that I have to say on the subject. I believe that from the form of Government we are living under, this Federal Government holds the territory as property; it has no power—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. A single question to the Senator from Texas. If he desires to go on, I will not interrupt him. I simply want to ask him a question. I understand he assumes that this Government has no power to acquire additional territory outside of the territory settled in 1781, and says that that was Mr. Jefferson's opinion. He is going on to say that it is the Democratic doctrine, what is the Democratic idea upon that point. I merely wish to ask the question of the Senator, if it has not been the policy of the Federal party, from the origin of this Government to the present time, to oppose the acquisition of territory?

Mr. WIGFALL. Yes, sir. It has been a very sensible thing they did, and one of the few sensible things they ever did. Mr. Jefferson himself, the father of Republicanism or Democracy, from whose brain sprang construction of the Constitution sprang, like Minerva, armed and equipped to defend the Constitution of the country—Jefferson denied, or at least doubted, the power of the Federal Government to acquire territory; but if we had the right to acquire it under the war-making or treaty-making power, I say that when we acquired territory, we acquired it as property; and he had read the history of this country to very little purpose who supposes that the Federal Government was ever instituted for the purpose of establishing "God and liberty" all over the world. This Government was established for the purpose of securing liberty to ourselves, and to our posterity, and it was vested with certain powers which are to be exercised in the name and for the benefit and the use of the States; and if this Government has a right to acquire territory, as it beyond doubt has a right to acquire money by taxation, that money or that territory is property; the legal title vested in the Government, but the States being the cestui que trust, and they having the equitable title; and this Government cannot distribute or distribute either the money or the territory (that is the land) except for Federal purposes. I deny most emphatically that this Government is an eleemosynary establishment. I deny that it has a right to distribute land or money amongst the individuals of the United States. I deny that there is any such thing as the people of the United States. I believe that there are thirty-three different sovereign independent nations confederated together, who have established a Federal Government, of which we are a part.

I will now conclude, having spoken much longer than I intended to do, and without any preparation whatever.

Mr. GREEN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. I intend to speak on this subject.

Mr. PUGH. Allow me to move the postponement of the subject. I was one of the committee that reported the bill, and I want to speak on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. GREEN. As I have the floor, I wish to say that I desire to speak, and I intend to keep the floor. I intend to oppose this proposition, and I desire to reply to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, rose.

Mr. GREEN. There is another Senator besides you. I hope you will not consider yourself the only Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Not at all. I am the Senator who reported the proposition, and the only Senator from Tennessee present.

Mr. GREEN. I would like to postpone the subject to a future period. I have no particular desire as to the time. ["Monday."] I will say Monday.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. At one o'clock. Mr. WADE. And make it the special order. Mr. DOOLITTLE. I presume there will be no objection to the Senate bill and House bill coming together as one order for Monday next. ["No objection."]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I think we had better take things in the order in which they stand. The House bill is not before us. It is on the Calendar or the Calendar. I think we had better go on with this bill and reject it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved and seconded that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Monday, at one o'clock, and made the special order for that time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 22, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Fryer by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. STROCKEN. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

COURT OF CLAIMS BILLS.

Mr. WINSLOW obtained the floor.

Mr. NOELL. I do not wish to interpose any objection to the resolution which the gentleman from North Carolina desires to introduce, but I desire to give notice that I have a privileged motion which I desire to be heard upon when the gentleman from North Carolina yields the floor.

Mr. GROW. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. WINSLOW. It will be recollected that, under the amendment of the rules adopted by the House a few days since, all bills reported from the Court of Claims are ordered to be placed upon the Private Calendar; but there are a number of bills heretofore referred to the Committee of Claims, for which the committee on rules made no provision, nor could they have made any. I ask leave to introduce a resolution to meet that case.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows: Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of all bills reported from the Court of Claims, and the same be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, in accordance with the rule recently adopted by the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object to that resolution. Let the Committee of Claims act upon those bills, and bring them before the House.

Mr. WINSLOW. Pass the resolution, and they will be acted upon quicker. The resolution is only designed to carry out the intention of the House and of the special committee on the rules.

Mr. GROW. I call for the regular order of business.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT OSWEGO.

Mr. LEE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution providing for expending the balance of appropriation for repairing the light-house at Oswego and building connected therewith; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NEW ORLEANS CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have the Committee on Commerce discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of merchants and other citizens of New Orleans, relative to the new custom-house, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

RESOLUTIONS OF CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE.

Mr. BURCH. I ask leave to present to the House several resolutions passed by the Legislature of California—

Mr. GROW. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BURCH. I desire to present these resolutions simply for the purpose of reference.

Mr. GROW. I must insist on the regular order of business.

EXCUSED FROM SERVING ON A COMMITTEE.

Mr. BONHAM. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to what I conceive to be a privileged question. The committee referred to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOWARD] was appointed yesterday, as I learned last evening. It consists of Mr. HOWARD, Mr. CASE, Mr. BURNHAM, Mr. DIMMICK, and myself. I wish to ask the House to excuse me from serving on the committee.

The question was taken; and Mr. BONHAM was excused.

POLYGRAPH IN UTAH.

Mr. NOELL. I rise to a privileged question. I call up a motion made by myself the other day to reconsider the order of the House referring to the Committee on Territories a bill to amend an act establishing a territorial government for Utah. I presume that that is a question of privilege.

motion to reconsider. I want the vote reconsidered in order that I may offer the following amendment to the bill:

Strike out after the word "assembled," (in the second line, and insert the following:

"That the third and fourth sections of the act entitled "An act to establish a territorial government for Utah," approved 24 September, 1850, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

I object to the withdrawal of the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri had a right to withdraw the motion to reconsider, and he has withdrawn it.

Mr. COBB. Then I renew it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the gentleman from Missouri had no right to withdraw the motion to reconsider, if I objected. If he had the right, I renew the motion.

Mr. McCLEARNED obtained the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. COBB. Do I understand that the gentleman from Missouri has a right to withdraw his motion to reconsider if objection be made?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had the right to withdraw his motion to reconsider.

Mr. COBB. I then renew the motion to reconsider; and now I offer this amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not in order. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. COBB. Very well; I then give notice that if the motion to reconsider is carried, I will offer an amendment.

Mr. BRANCH. I rise to a question of order; I submit that this bill, having been presented on the day before yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri, by unanimous consent, with the express understanding that it was only for the purpose of reference, it is not in order to bring it back before the House by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. COBB. I suppose it is too late to make that question of order.

Mr. BRANCH. If the Speaker decides that my point of order is not well taken, I give notice that I shall object in future to the introduction of any bill by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If that was the understanding when the bill was introduced, the Chair thinks the point raised by the gentleman from North Carolina is well taken.

Mr. GROW. That was the statement made when the bill was introduced, that it was for reference only.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will rule that the motion to reconsider cannot be received.

Mr. NOBLE. I will say that my only object in making the motion to reconsider was to secure the opportunity of making the remarks which I have submitted, and I have myself no desire to renew the motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. McCLEARNED. I rise to a question of order. I ask if the Chair did not recognize me as entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. McCLEARNED. I desire, then, to address some remarks to the House upon the motion to reconsider, made by the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois; but there was nothing before the House upon which he could speak.

Mr. McCLEARNED. The gentleman from the whole point. The Chair says I am entitled to the floor; and I now renew the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that motion to be out of order.

JOSHUA EDDY.

Mr. BUFFINTON, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Eddy; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

NEBRASKA RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the bill of the House (No. 110) granting lands in the Territory of Nebraska to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein; the pending question being on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands; upon which the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. DAVIS) is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order. I submit that when the committees were last called for reports, a bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, upon which a motion to recommit is pending, and the previous question demanded. I think that the business first in order, and that the Nebraska railroad bill, which came up when that bill has been disposed of, it having been postponed to a day which has already passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that the Nebraska railroad bill was set down for a day which has passed.

Mr. GROW. And therefore loses its place.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. This bill having been first reported, the Chair thinks it is entitled to priority. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. DAVIS) is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McCLEARNED. I supposed that the Chair conceded the motion to reconsider to be in order, from the fact that the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. NOBLE) addressed the House upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The point was not made until the gentleman from Missouri had concluded his remarks.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I now ask for the consideration of the Nebraska bill.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if it is his intention to ask for a vote of the House upon this bill to-day?

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. That is my intention.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I wish to ask if it is the gentleman's intention to offer the Kansas bill as an amendment to it?

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. It is.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I wish to ask the gentleman further, if the modification yesterday made by the Committee on Public Lands is in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. It is not.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. Then I ask if it is the gentleman's intention to have the bill postponed for the further consideration of the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I have no objection to postponing the consideration of the bill until some future day, if such is the wish of the House.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit me, I will offer an amendment to the bill; and I am willing that a vote shall be taken upon it without debate, and at once. If the gentleman will permit me, I will have it read for information.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amend by adding the following as an additional section: "That if it further enacted, that the lands hereby, granted to the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas alternate sections of the public lands, to the same extent, and in the same manner, and upon the same conditions and restrictions in every respect, as are specified in the preceding sections of this act, in aid in constructing a railroad from Fort Kearney, in Nebraska Territory, via Marysville, to the town of Ellwood, in Kansas Territory."

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I will ask for a vote of the House upon that amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I have been instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report an amendment to the amendment which is already pending to the bill. I presume that an amendment in the third degree will not be admitted, and without the consent of the committee, I cannot assume the responsibility of allowing the gentleman from Missouri to offer his amendment. Of course that amendment meets my approbation; but I am here, in reference to this bill, as the organ of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I will say, if the gentleman will allow me, that the Committee on Public Lands did hold a meeting, at which the gentleman from Indiana was not present, being, as I understand, too unwell to attend, in which a modification of the amendment was made, and the amendment which the gentleman now holds in his hand is not, therefore, the expression of a majority of the committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. In order to settle this matter, if it meets the unanimous consent of the House I will make a proposition that this bill be further postponed, in order to give the Committee on Public Lands an opportunity to act definitely upon the matter; for there seems to be some misapprehension as to what has been done by the committee. This bill will take up some time; and not desiring to be in the way of other business before the House, if it is the unanimous wish of the House I will now move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Tuesday day next at two o'clock. If that postponement take place, other business can go on this morning.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I am willing that the further consideration of the bill should be postponed; but I put it to the gentleman whether we had not better put the bill in a position where it can be amended? I understand, from the colloquy which has just taken place between the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CRAIG) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. DAVIS), that there is now an amendment pending to an amendment; and it is not clear to me how this can be done under the rules of the House; so that, if the previous question be moved, other amendments which gentlemen may desire to present and have the House act upon will be excluded. It may be possible that my friend from Georgia, who moved in a motion of this kind a few days since, may desire to get his amendment upon this bill. If the gentleman from Indiana will move that the bill be recommitted, it will answer the purpose I have in view. All I desire is that the sense of the House may be taken upon the various amendments that gentlemen may desire to present.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I can make no such bargain. I intend that this bill shall be put upon its passage. I wish to be very frank about it. I am perfectly willing that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Tuesday day next, at two o'clock; that is, if the House is of the belief that it ought not, for this day, to be in the way of other business. If the House is ready to have the question at once disposed of, so am I.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, it is in order, and I will move that the bill be recommitted, that this bill shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? Or, will the gentleman allow the motion to recommit to be entered?

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I am not willing that the bill shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; for, as is known to every gentleman acquainted with the practice under the rules, that will be the end of it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not think so. If the friends of the bill are in a majority, they can reach in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as well as in the House. There are various amendments which gentlemen wish to offer to this bill; and if the gentleman from Indiana, and the friends of the bill, will not afford an opportunity for the expression of opinion, and if they will by reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or the entering of a motion to recommit to the Committee on Public Lands, I hope that the motion to postpone will be rejected, and that the bill will be put in a condition where it can be amended and perfected. Let the House take charge of the bill itself.

Mr. GROW. I will suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that, under the amendments to the rules lately adopted, he can call for the previous question on the motion to postpone, and the decision will not operate upon any question but the motion to postpone.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I wish to say a word further. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to be courteous to every gentleman upon this floor, and I believe that I have endeavored to be so; but I cannot allow the previous question to be called when I am upon the floor. Now, what will be the condition of this bill if the motion that its further consideration be postponed be voted down? Would it be entitled to the floor, in order to move that the bill be recommitted?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would be entitled to the floor to make that motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. Then I am willing that the question shall be taken at this time upon the motion that the further consideration of this among facts were brought to the notice of the committee, the application of Mr. Campbell was refused, and the report of the majority was sustained.

In the case of Newland vs. Graham, referred to on page 7 of the report of the committee, Hon. Lynn Hoyd, of Kentucky, in making the report of the majority of the committee, said:

"The committee, after hearing the arguments of the sitting member and the petitioner, rejected this application. They could find no precedent in which an application of a similar kind, even if made at an earlier period, had been made; but several in which, under the influence of more favorable circumstances, such applications had been rejected both by Committees of Election and the House. Without very strong reasons, showing the necessity of further proof, (which the committee did not see in this case,) they considered that the right of contesting a seat in Congress could be asserted and supported by the petitioner and protracted appointments for taking additional evidence after the meeting of Congress should be allowed when the parties had already had the same time to take their positions, and, as appeared to the committee, a sufficient time."

I might adopt the language of Mr. Boyd, and incorporate it into this report, and say to the House that it would be useless and nugatory for the contestant to proceed in any case, if, after the lapse of more than a year, these frivolous applications for continuance could be entertained by the committee. I desire to avoid this, and to actually prevent our progress, and the term would expire before the rights of the constituencies and the rights of the respective parties could be determined. There must be a time when confusion and dilatory pleas shall terminate, and when certain and definite conclusions shall be reached.

I will refer to the action of this House yesterday to show why the present application should not be entertained. In the case of Williamson vs. Sickles, time was granted for a special reason. Why? Because the case was not within the provisions of the act of 1851. I wish to call the attention of honorable gentlemen to the fact, that the case of Williamson vs. Sickles presented a strong case, in which alleged extensive frauds, bribery, and corruption, were properly brought to the notice of the House. Whether they had any existence or not, in fact, it is for the future to determine. By all the members who argued the case, it was admitted that, if that case came within the provisions of the act of 1851, further time ought not to be allowed to the contestant, Mr. Williamson. The prayer for his continuance would be rejected by the House, because he did not come within the provisions of the act of 1851. There had been no legal determination of the result. He was clearly outside of the act; and the whole argument, on both sides, proceeded upon the admitted basis, that, if Mr. Williamson came within the provisions of the act, he was not entitled to further indulgence under the circumstances of the case. If he was without that act, this House felt it due to their dignity, as well as to the rights of the parties, to inquire into the allegations contained in the memorial and the affidavits presented. I say, Sir, that case sustains this, and strengthens the position which we take here. We claim—and it is admitted by all parties—that this case is within the act of 1851; and it has proceeded under the provisions of that act up to this time. On the other hand, the case of Williamson vs. Sickles was not within the provisions of the act of 1851; and so the House decided.

Mr. STEWART, of Maryland. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. With pleasure, Sir.

Mr. STEWART, of Maryland. I understand that the gentleman is discussing the question of the construction of the act of 1851. I have looked over the reports in this case and read the evidence, and I wish to submit a question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I understand that in the case of 1851, the party against whom it is proposed to take testimony, is entitled to at least ten days' notice. The notice given by Mr. Howard to Mr. Cooper, in relation to the testimony taken on the last day, was given on the 16th of March, and the testimony was taken on the 26th of March. I submit the question, whether, under a fair construction of the act of 1851, all that testimony would not be ruled out by a court having competent jurisdiction, because there were not ten days between the 16th and the 26th of March. Has the contestant then, complied with the act of 1851?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure, for I think I can satisfy him that the law has been strictly complied with, and that there is any hardship in the case, it is on the part of the contestant. The act of 1851 requires that the contestant shall give notice to the sitting member of the grounds on which he intends to contest his right to a seat. Mr. Howard, proceeding under the letter and spirit of the law, gave specific notice that he would attack the poll, for reasons set forth in the notice, of the second ward of the city of Detroit, at least sixty days before he proceeded to take any testimony whatever. I say, then, first, that Mr. Cooper had ample notice that his seat would be contested, for grounds and for reasons which were fully set out in the notice, and that it was his duty to fortify himself with proof to resist the attack and to sustain his own position.

The second branch of my answer is this: that on the 14th day of March, ten days before the expiration of this notice, Edgar's testimony was taken; and by all the rules of legal computation, from the 16th of March to 26th of March is ten days. The 26th being the last day on which Mr. Howard took testimony, Mr. Cooper had ample notice of all the testimony to be taken; and it was his duty to have procured testimony to rebut Edgar's statements, if such was his intention. He failed to do so, and he is the loser of this witness. It was the duty of Mr. Cooper to exercise due diligence. The laws are made for the diligent; they are not made for the negligent. It was his duty to have procured evidence to impeach the character of Edgar, or any other witness, if he believed it to be necessary. I say, Will any gentleman, as a lawyer, contend that, because a party ascertains that a witness has testified to facts against the interests of his client, he is, therefore, entitled to delay? that he has a right to have the cause postponed, because the other party has not testified to suit him? Yet, Sir, this case has not even that much merit in it, for Mr. Cooper had ample notice of the witnesses who were to be examined, and ample time to have ascertained the character of Edgar, or any other witness, and might have taken the necessary testimony. But did he make any attempt to do so? On the contrary, he expressed himself perfectly satisfied with all the evidence, and took no steps to impeach the character of Edgar, or any other witness. Mr. Cooper was present when the testimony of Edgar was taken; Mr. Howard's testimony was present by his counsel, a gentleman learned in the law, perfectly able to advocate and protect all his interests; and he cross-examined Edgar, and all the witnesses; but expressed no intention to impeach the character of any one of them. Then, Sir, I have pointed out the broad distinction there is between this case and the Williamson and Sickles case; that case being clearly outside of the law of 1851, and this being as clearly within it.

But, Sir, I hasten to the conclusion of my remarks. The second proposition contained in the report of the minority proceeds upon the ground that Mr. Cooper shows his ability by these affidavits (which set forth the reasons upon which his application is based) to impeach the testimony of Edgar, and to prove the truth of his own testimony.

Now, my proposition is that if you allow Mr. Cooper to take the testimony which he desires, it would not touch the merits of this case on any vital point. It would be totally immaterial if you gave him testimony the whole length and breadth of that which he claims for it. It is no witness touches the strength of the case which is presented for the consideration of the committee. It is conceded, upon both sides, that if these affidavits do not go to the merits of the case on one side or the other, so as to procure a different result, or so that the decision of the committee will be different, the merits upon one side or the other, then there is no ground for the application, and no use in consuming further time by going into a new investigation of facts.

Now, Sir, the testimony of Edgar goes to the merits of the case. If you believe the testimony of Edgar, it has that belief, and no more. It would affect the votes of nine persons given for the sitting member, and no more. Now, the majority of the sitting member, as returned, is 75; the contestant, by his testimony, attacks 539 votes given for the sitting member. He attacks votes given at the different points, as follows: Grose Point, 162 votes; fourth ward, Detroit, 362; second ward, Detroit, 76; fifth ward, Detroit, 17; Van Buren district, 10; and from 25 to 40 Canadian votes—say 25, and they will make 592 votes. The evidence of Edgar, as I have already said, which is sought to impeach, refers to nine votes only.

Now, Sir, the affidavits in reference to the other branch or point made by the minority of the committee, are that of J. Logan Chipman, a candidate for the Senate, and the affidavit of the attorney of the sitting member, who was called upon for the purpose of rebutting the testimony of four witnesses, (not two, as is inaccurately stated in the report of the minority,) to wit: the testimony of Larned, Stebbins, Hornbeck, and Jackson, all relating to the conduct of parties at the second ward of the city of Detroit. But, if you will, I will call the testimony of these four witnesses, still the testimony of the contestant attacks, by other evidence than the four witnesses named, some sixty of the seventy-six majority given for Mr. Cooper at that ward, leaving but sixteen votes, and add to this nine votes, the nine votes testified to by Edgar, and you come to the result, to wit: that the whole testimony sought to be taken by Mr. Cooper, and for which purpose delay is asked for, extends to twenty-five votes out of some five hundred and fifty-two votes. It has to further extend, as I have already admitted all the sitting member proposes to prove, it would not relieve the sitting member in the slightest degree. His application is to take evidence that is wholly immaterial in the case; and the committee, bearing in mind that fact, and in view of the lapse of time which must be taken, if they granted the motion, did not think the application should be granted.

I have now brought to the notice of the House the facts of this case. The object of the Committee of Election was to proceed fairly and intelligently in determining this case, and to bring it before the House within a reasonable time, and they came to the conclusion that, inasmuch as this application of Mr. Cooper is based upon his own negligence, it was unfair and unreasonable, as well as the extension of time, which would be asked for, to reopen the case, and allow these parties further time to take testimony, which will throw the final adjudication of the case over to the short session. They believed that, under these circumstances, it would be against right and against justice to allow the motion, and they have therefore so reported the resolution which is now before the House.

Mr. MILLISON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania upon what points the contestant makes application to take further testimony?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is all embraced in the two memorials of Mr. Cooper and the affidavits printed with the reports of the majority and minority. He asks for further time to take the evidence embraced in these affidavits. I submit the case for the present.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, the contestant is the son of William A. Howard against Hon. George B. Cooper, now representing the first congressional district of the State of Michigan upon this floor, came before the Committee of Elections of this House, of which I am a member, and the contestant asked for a continuance of testimony, asked, as a preliminary motion, for further time to take proof for the purpose of rebutting certain depositions taken by the contestant in support of his claim. The majority of the committee report a resolution refusing that indulgence, and the minority a resolution that it be granted.

As one of the minority of the committee, I desire, Sir, to state briefly the ground upon which the minority thought the sitting member was entitled to a period of thirty days for the purpose of rebutting the testimony of the contestant. I have read the report of the majority, and listened attentively to the views presented this morning by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] in support of the views of the majority; and I have also listened to the views of that gentleman, I think I might safely appeal to every legal mind within the hearing of my voice, to say whether the arguments adduced in that report justify a refusal of the indulgence asked for, or if the arguments offered in its support will bear the strict test of truth and are sustained by the precedents in similar cases, which run through the official proceedings of this body?

What is the ground alleged in the majority report for refusing this extension of time? Is it because justice and the substantial rights of the parties do not demand it? No sir! It is, as stated, because fourteen months have elapsed since the answer of the sitting member was filed, and he has taken no proof in support of his title to the seat he holds. In ordinary cases, this might be deemed lazier, but it does not necessarily follow. Indeed, I confidently submit to the impartial consideration of this House, sitting as a judicial tribunal upon the rights not only of the contestant and of the sitting member, but as impartial jurors upon the rights of the suffragans of the first congressional district of the State of Michigan, whether, when they shall have heard and understood the particular facts of this present application, the minority are not justified in alleging, as they have done in their report, that no authenticated case can be found where a similar privilege was, under like circumstances, ever denied.

The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania asserts that the refusal of the majority of the committee is based wholly upon their construction of the act of 1851; that the contestant and sitting member both constructed the act in the same manner, and that by its terms and provisions the case must be determined. I might safely agree to this assumption, and yet deny the justice of the resolution reported by the majority. Mr. Cooper took no proof under the act. The act of 1851 allows sixty days for the taking of testimony, and it provides that after those sixty days no proof can be taken upon either side, without the permission of this House. It is, however, admitted by all, and well settled by a series of precedents under it, that the statute is only directory. Its express provisions look to an extension of time for taking proof beyond the limitation prescribed by the letter of the act in every case where the protection and purity of the ballot-box require, or the substantial rights of the parties demand it. The sitting member imposed no such arbitrary and popular rights of those whose Representative he is, not less than his own, require that further time be allowed him to rebut certain testimony taken by contestant. Is he entitled to the indulgence asked? To solve this question, the particular facts and circumstances under which the testimony is made must be fully understood and carefully weighed. Let them be considered, free from party bias, as by a judicial tribunal.

The principles of law are simple, readily comprehended, and of easy acquisition by the most ordinary memory; the difficulties occur in their application. To apply these abstract principles safely, properly, and truthfully, in separate cases, and under a complicated state of facts, variant in each case, and yet upholding the principle itself, constitutes the highest merit of a legal mind.

Now, sir, what are the particular facts upon which this application is based? I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that both parties had the right to go on and take proof the same time, within the limits prescribed by the act, upon the merits of the case. The sitting member had the right to expect that the contestant would take his proof first. The sitting member had the certificate as member elect, and prima facie was entitled to hold a seat here until the contestant disproved his right by competent legal evidence. The onus was upon the contestant, and the sitting member would not, (although he was authorized under the act of 1851 to do so,) commence to take proof until some had been taken by contestant.

When did the contestant commence to prepare his case, and when did he give the first notice? The first notice of the contestant to take testimony in support of his claim, bears date February 21, 1859, and notices the sitting member of the proposed examination of four witnesses in Detroit, upon the 4th of March, 1859, which was just twenty-two days before the expiration of the sixty days authorized by the act of 1851. No proof was taken under this notice. It does not appear that the parties met, or that any subpoena was ever issued for the attendance of the witnesses. No reason appears, and the failure to examine the witnesses on the 4th of March is not accounted for in the record. A second notice is served on the 11th of March by the contestant, containing the names of certain witnesses proposed to be examined by him in Detroit on the 21st of March, and also a notice for other witnesses served on the same day, on the 23d of March.

The first proof taken by the contestant, and the first testimony taken in this case, was upon the 21st of March. That was but five days before the expiration of the sixty days allowed either party to examine witnesses. On that day, but one witness was examined by contestant. On the 23d, 24th, 24th, and 25th, several other witnesses were examined. On the 16th day of March, the contestant served a fourth notice upon the sitting member, that he would, on the 26th of March, (the last day for taking proof,) take the evidence of certain parties named. It might be a pertinent question to inquire why the contestant did not include the names of all his witnesses in the notice of the 11th of March, for examination upon the 21st, 22d, 23d, and 24th of March, instead of serving a separate notice on the 16th of March for witnesses to be examined on the 26th? Why did contestant wait until the last day of the sixty for the taking of the most important testimony upon which he attempts to oust the sitting member, and to secure for himself a seat upon this seat?

It is worthy of remark, that in the two notices of the contestant, under date of March 11, the name of his important witness whose testimony was proposed to be taken upon the last day—the name of Edgar—whose testimony it is proposed to take, does not occur. Is such a course of procedure usual? Is it not somewhat remarkable that notice of the examination of that particular witness—Edgar—should not have been given until the 16th of March and the examination postponed until the last day authorized for the taking of proof, and when, in consequence of the letter of the statute, the sitting member was deprived of the opportunity of impeaching this witness and rebutting his testimony? The statute of 1851 requires a notice of ten days to be given to opposing party for taking testimony. It is manifest the time for service of notice of different rules probably exist in different States. The rule established by judicial precedent in my own State is always to include one and exclude the other. It is a safe exposition, and in Kentucky is applied, that it does not occur in such a course of all judicial process. If this rule of estimating the time be correct, the notice here would seem to have been defective, as suggested by my friend from Maryland, [Mr. STEWART] because not served within the ten days.

It is asserted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] that the service of the notice by contestant the sitting member to take proof on the last day on which either party could take proof, affords no ground for the proposed indulgence. If, however, the point that the notice was not served in time be well taken by my friend from Maryland, the depositions taken under that notice are not legally taken, and should be excluded.

Mr. GOOCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. STEVENSON. Certainly.

Mr. GOOCH. I merely wish to ask the gentleman whether he excludes both the day on which the notice was served, and the day on which the depositions were to be taken, or only one?

Mr. STEVENSON. Only one.

Mr. GOOCH. Then how many days does that leave?

Mr. STEVENSON. Nine.

Mr. GOOCH. I think the gentleman is mistaken. He will find it to be ten.

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, it may be so. I took it for granted that the gentleman from Maryland, who suggested the point, was correct in his estimate of the time which the application of the rule of excluding one day and including the other would require. This point is not relied on by the minority in their report.

I come to another point. The notice of the contestant to take the testimony proposed to be rebutted was served on the sitting member on the 16th March, and the witnesses were to be examined on the 26th.

Mr. STANTON. The gentleman says that in Kentucky one day is included and the other is excluded.

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

Mr. STANTON. Then I would inquire, if the opposite party appears and cross-examines, does it make any difference whether the time is, or is not, computed with exactness?

Mr. STEVENSON. No, sir.

Mr. STANTON. Did the opposite party cross-examine here?

Mr. STEVENSON. Probably there was a cross-examination. The gentleman, however, mistakes the facts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] insists that the service of the notice on the sitting member by contestant, on the 16th March, for depositions to be taken on the 26th March, afforded the sitting member ample time to rebut his proof by counter testimony on the same day. The same gentleman argues that the moment the sitting member received such notice on the 16th for depositions on the 26th, he should have immediately served a notice on the contestant for his rebutting proof, to be taken on the same day, namely, the 26th March. Now I put it to the statute legal mind of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] himself, or to any other lawyer on either side of this Chamber, to say whether such diligence has ever been required, or whether a deciem can be found in any well-authenticated legal authority in support of such a rule? In cases of notice, arbitri jura—as, for instance, in notices of protest upon bills of exchange—that party has always until the succeeding day after receiving notice of protest to notify a prior indorser.

It is an extraordinary as novel, that the stringent rules of commercial law, as applicable to negotiable paper, shall be applied by the honorable gentleman [Mr. CAMPBELL] to the notices required by the statute of 1851 for taking proof, to be used in contested elections before the tribunal. Upon what authority does such a posture rest? If every indorser of a protested bill of exchange is allowed until the succeeding day for service of notice on a prior indorser, the sitting member, [Mr. Cooper], on receiving notice on the 16th, would have until the day following for giving notice to take counter and rebutting testimony. This would have put the proof thus taken beyond the sixty days allowed by law, and the testimony thus taken could not have been read.

Again, the law never divides a day; and there is no proof at what period of the day on the 16th March this notice was served by contestant on the sitting member. No presumption therefore arises, or can arise, as to the exact hour of the day that the service of the notice took place. It might have occurred at any hour of the day, or want of time, to deprive the sitting member, under the stringent rule attempted to be established, of giving a counter notice. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] deny to the sitting member any inquiry into the facts by which to rebut the testimony of contestant taken on the 26th? It must be remembered that the statute of 1851 requires that the notice for the taking of depositions shall specify the names of the witnesses. The contestant's notice was not served until the 16th of March, and it seemed to me a singular pretense. How could the sitting member, without inquiry, have ascertained the names of the witnesses by whom he could have discredited contestant's witnesses? And yet the names of these witnesses would have been required to be inserted in his notice. It seemed to me a singular proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as to the diligence required of the sitting member, carries its own refutation with it.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] argues that, as the notice of the contestant for taking his proof contained the names of all the witnesses proposed to be examined, it was the duty of the sitting member, so soon as the contestant had served such notices, to have made diligent inquiry as to the character of all the persons whose names he had given, and to have given notice for the taking of such testimony. I have endeavored to show this was impossible as to the notice served on the 16th; and it was in this notice that Edgar's name was contained. It is his testimony particularly that the sitting member denies, and is now capable of successfully rebutting.

It is palpable that it was out of his power to do so, for reasons already stated. As to the other witnesses named in contestant's notice served on the 11th, I beg leave to say that these notices contained the names of some seventy-five witnesses, of whom but fifteen were to be examined.

Was Mr. Cooper to inquire into the credibility of all these witnesses? If so, then the time—from the 11th to the 16th, the only period in which he could have served a notice—was insufficient. If he was not to inquire into the character of them all, how many and which of them were to be omitted?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He might have looked over the list, and have selected his attack against every witness upon that list whom he believed unworthy of belief, just as in any other proceeding.

Mr. STEVENSON. He might have picked out sixty names in those notes of contestants; have made inquiry as to the proof by whom they could have been successfully impeached, and the contestant might not have examined one of them. It turns out that sixty were never examined whom he named in his notices.

I am amazed at the position assumed that it was the duty of the sitting member to presume that the contestant's witnesses would perjure themselves, and that it became essential as a rule of diligence on his part, to have taken testimony impeaching their statements before they were given. It is the first time, before any tribunal, that such a doctrine was seriously put forth. I had always supposed that no party was permitted to impeach a statement under oath, until such statement was sworn to; and that every party had a right to presume a witness would testify truly until the contrary appeared.

I maintain that no statement can be impeached until given; and had the time been allowed under the rules to discredit contestant's witnesses in advance, by proving bad character, it was easy for them to decline testifying, and the testimony would have been useless. I regret—deeply regret—that in a tribunal like this, such positions were put forth as precluding in any legal tribunal in Christendom. The sitting member chose to begin his testimony on the 21st of March, but four days before the day on which all testimony was to close. Upon that last day, testimony was given by witnesses on behalf of the contestants, and the sitting member proposed to impeach. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to tell me before what tribunal, and by what law, the sitting member was required, even though he knew this witness Edgar was a man of bad character, to presume that Edgar would not be impeached, and be bound to such a presumption, and as the contestant placed it beyond his power within the sixty days to disprove such statements, and as he shows he can successfully impeach such statements, should he not be allowed to do so?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] seems amazed at the position assumed by the minority in their report, that it is a novel and extraordinary legal proposition that a man must anticipate the perjury of an opposing witness, and be prepared to rebut it in advance; and the case of Mr. Campbell, Vallandigham is cited as analogous to this position.

I was a member of the committee who joined in the majority report in that case; and I am sure a careful examination of it will show me conclusively that the ground I occupied does not occupy them. I will read my own remarks in the discussion upon that report.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman will not pass by the point I have made. I called his attention to the point, and I referred to the gentleman himself as authority to maintain that point.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the gentleman will allow me to go on. I understood the point the gentleman made; and I admitted, at the outset, that both parties had the right to take proof within the sixty days. That is the gentleman's point.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is not the point I made.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let us hear what the point is. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman should state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman attacked the position taken by the majority of the committee in these words:

"It is claimed, however, on the other side, that Cooper should have served a notice on Howard, and gone on with the trial after the testimony of the witnesses. It is admitted that such testimony could not have been read without the contestant's consent. No substituted case is proposed in support of this position, and it is difficult to imagine the reasons on which such a rule could rest."

That was my point; and I referred to the report signed by the gentleman in the case of Vallandigham against Campbell.

Mr. STEVENSON. I so understood it. The gentleman did not quote the report fully, or he did not understand it after he had read it. Now, I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the point, as presented by him, does not arise in that report. The Committee of Elections in the Thirty-Fifth Congress did refuse Mr. Campbell further time, it is true, but it was on the ground that he was not with this! The gentleman will not pretend to say so. The majority in that case said it was Campbell's duty to go on and take testimony upon the merits. I said that if Campbell had brought affidavits—yes, sir, even ex parte affidavits—successfully impeaching Mr. Campbell's testimony, which he did not have been impeached within the sixty days, I would have given him time. Here are my remarks, and I will read them to the House to show that I am disposed to do in this case what I was disposed to do in the case of Campbell and Vallandigham. Here what I said:

"Why did not the sitting member do what he proposed to do? Why did he not prevent to the committee this proof? Then he might have said, 'Here is the substance of what I intend to do, from which I can cut by my own impeachment of this act.' Although the sitting member said he intended to make that proof, he did not take it; he let it go, and he did not even make an effort to impeach the names of half a dozen witnesses by whose evidence he could change this result. Why should he not come up with the rules of diligence applicable to judicial proceedings? A court has always the right to postpone a case upon just and reasonable grounds shown, and where due diligence has been made to have it tried. Here this appears by the minority report above, even now, by the affidavits, half a dozen, or even five witnesses, by whom this result could be changed. No act, nothing of that sort. There is nothing specific, but he comes in and indulges in general statements of a belief that he could show that he was legally entitled to."

I desire to apply to this case the rule which was attempted to be laid down by a majority in the case of Vallandigham and Campbell. Now what did the gentlemen on the other side say in the case of Mr. Campbell? How did gentlemen then vote? Of course the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] vote?

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEVENSON. With great pleasure.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to a part of the speech from which he has been reading, and to the fact that, in that speech, he took the position that it was the duty of Mr. Campbell to have given notice to Mr. Vallandigham, and then gone on and taken depositions of the witnesses on the part of Mr. Vallandigham to cross-examine his witnesses, and that if he had come in with these depositions, they ought to have been received. I will read from the gentleman's speech.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the gentleman will not take up my time to read my speech. He can do so when I have done. I cannot undertake to make a legal argument if I am to be interrupted every moment by questions. I said in the Vallandigham and Campbell case, and I say now, that Mr. Campbell ought to have taken proof because he had given Mr. Vallandigham notice that he intended to go on, disregarding the law. But he did not go on; and I said, in my argument of that case, that, as he did not take the depositions, he ought at least to have brought the affidavits of the witnesses themselves by whom he could have established his case. On either horn of this dilemma, I am consistent in the position which I occupy to-day. It is the same test of diligence which, as a lawyer, I desire to apply to Mr. Cooper in the present case, that I then desired to apply to Mr. Campbell. It is this: If a party is guilty of perjury, which he is not under oath, and is prevented by the limitation in the statute from doing so, in consequence of the late day at which the contestant takes his proof, he should do so. He should, after the sixty days has expired, notify the contestant, and go on with his testimony, or if he cannot, or if he is unable to, he should bring the affidavits of the witnesses, showing the testimony untrue, and that he has not been enabled earlier to take proof. He is not obliged to incur the expense of depositions, unless the contestant consents; affidavits are sufficient, if he so pleases, by this rule.

Mr. William A. Howard, the contestant, puts off to the last day the taking of important testimony, although he had an opportunity of taking it before. When he served his first notice, he had not included among his list of witnesses the name of this witness Edgar, but on the last day of the sixty days, when it was not in Mr. Cooper's power to disprove the statement of the witness, or to show his general bad character. It was out of his power to disprove this testimony on account of the late period at which it was taken. The question now is: Is he able to disprove that testimony, taken at the last moment, by which his seat is to be taken from him? What is the fact? He brings in here seven or eight affidavits of respectable men to show that the man Edgar, who was examined upon the last day, is unworthy of credit, and that he should not be believed. That witness, as I have here before me, is a convicted felon, the State penitentiary of the State of Michigan.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Kentucky is laboring under a mistake. It is one of the witnesses by whom Edgar's character is sought to be impeached that is in the penitentiary.

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, I am not mistaken in the fact that an indictment is pending against Edgar, which may or may not be disposed of.

Mr. DAWES. The difference is, that the affidavit of the witness who is in the State prison is brought in to impeach the testimony of the man Edgar.

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, throw his affidavit out. [Laughter.] The gentleman will not deny that there are eleven or twelve affidavits of respectable men—some a sheriff, and another a justice of the peace—showing that Edgar is not worthy of belief, and ought not to be believed under oath.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman will permit me a word here. He says there is an affidavit of the sheriff to this fact. Now, I will say that the man who signed the notice on the 16th, and who was present at the taking of Edgar's testimony on the 26th, with the attorney, is one of the men who now makes this affidavit. If he knows now that this man's character for truth and veracity is bad, of course he knew it at the time, and of course the attorney knew it, and all parties knew it.

Mr. STEVENSON. But there was no time to serve the notice, unless perjury was anticipated on Edgar's part. I have shown the law requires no such presumption. I repeat, then, there are seven or eight affidavits of respectable men to show that Edgar would not be believed on oath; and the gentleman admits this. They are bound to hold up their hands and say that the testimony of Edgar is proved to be unworthy of belief; and yet, without allowing Mr. Cooper to show that fact, they want to bring in Mr. Howard as a member of the Thirty-Sixth Congress upon the testimony of a felon who is unworthy of belief. If Edgar is not a convicted felon, he is at least a quasi felon. Any man incapable of telling the truth under oath is a moral felon.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman says certainly. The gentleman admits that Edgar is a moral felon; he assents to that. Now, I ask him, would he bring any member into the House on the testimony of a convicted felon, when the other party had not an opportunity of contradicting him? That is the point I make.

Mr. STANTON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky answer me one question right here?

Mr. STEVENSON. Not now—not at this point.

Mr. STANTON. It is at this point I want an answer.

Mr. STEVENSON. Not now; the gentleman will excuse me. Gentlemen seem disposed to interrupt me. I will not make any further argument, and they must pardon me. The gentleman from Massachusetts says I am mistaken about Edgar being a felon. I did not think that I was mistaken. I suppose the report of the majority of the committee will be conclusive upon that point. Now, I wish to ask the majority here to introduce here an affidavit to show that Edgar is under indictment for felony. I will read the affidavit:

State of Michigan, County of Wayne:
Julius B. Bloodgood, being duly sworn, says that he is twenty-four years of age and now residing in the city of Detroit, in said county, during the past four years, and during that time has been a deputy sheriff of said county; and that he has known Andrew K. Edgar, who has been known and Edgar for about three years; and that he knew said Edgar on the 26th day of March, A. D. 1858, and that he is well acquainted with said Andrew K. Edgar's character for truth and veracity in the neighborhood where he resides; and that said Edgar's character for truth and veracity was, on each above mentioned date, bad, and from such general bad character for truth and veracity this deponent would not believe him under oath; and further, that soon after the above mentioned date said Edgar arrived on a charge of larceny, and that said charge is still pending against him. And this deponent further says that said A. H. K. Edgar has been a resident of this city and its vicinity during the past three years. And further deponent saith not.

JULIUS S. BLODGET.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 1st day of March, A. D. 1865.

W. CHAMP,

Notary Public, Wayne county, Michigan.

I said that he had been arrested, and that there was an indictment pending against him. But the gentleman said I was mistaken. Now, I say it is he himself who is mistaken; not I. The laugh is now upon the other side.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him?

Mr. STEVENSON. Not now; you can reply to me when I have done. Here is the report, showing that I was correct in my statement. Edgar, if not convicted, is indicted, and taken in proof of the testimony as to bad character, is corroborative of all I have said. But I say that the testimony on this unworthy witness dated Edgar arrived on a charge of larceny, and that said charge is still pending against him. Here we come to that point in the esteem of honorable and high-minded men on either side of this House, that party bias is to be allowed to blind our eyes, and that we are to refuse to be present at the privilege to permit the truth to be ascertained and perjury and fraud exposed?

Mr. STANTON. I would ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether there are any affidavits which disprove the facts to which Mr. Edgar testifies?

Mr. STEVENSON. There are; and I am coming to that point. I was first putting Edgar upon his general bad character. But, outside of this general bad character, there is a witness who disproves his statement, saying that there is not a word of truth in the statement which Edgar made that he brought thirty voters from Canada, who voted for Cooper. Here is the affidavit of Orris himself, who is charged by Edgar with bringing these thirty voters from Canada, denying the charge, and the sitting member asks time to consider if there is any truth in it. I ask you, Representatives, in the name of justice, are we sitting as a judicial tribunal to trample under foot all the well-regulated rules of judicial procedure, and refuse the sitting member an opportunity, which has never been refused him, of disproving the evidence of this man Edgar, by which it is attempted to deprive him of his seat? Will you exclude the popular voice of the first congressional district of Michigan from this Hall upon testimony of this character, and through party bias refuse to give the sitting member six days to prove its falsity? You had better give him ninety or one hundred days, than that any man should be admitted to a seat upon this floor who has not been fairly and legitimately elected.

Mr. Speaker, this case presents the point not presented in any of the cases which have hitherto occurred here and are referred to as authority. The application of the sitting member is not to take testimony on the merits of his case. That it was his duty to do within the sixty days. He is willing to surrender this testimony of the contestant if you will expurgate the false testimony, or allow time to rebut it. All he asks is an opportunity to show that Edgar and one other witness are unworthy of belief. If you will allow him this privilege he is willing to stand upon the testimony taken. Where is there a reason on record where such a privilege was refused? The gentleman from Pennsylvania cites me to the case of Newland vs. Graham, in which Hon. Lynn Boyd presented his report against a similar application. That case occurred before the act of 1851 was passed; yet the question was the same. The argument upon the fact that these parties had commenced proceedings under the act of 1851, and he is for holding them to it. The logical sequence of his argument is, that as the case cited occurred long before the passage of the act of 1851, I cannot assume authority in its construction. The basis of this indulgence asked for here are frequent. Against the precedent I might cite Vallandigham vs. Campbell, the Nebraska case of Chapman vs. Ferguson, during the same Congress, where time was given for the taking of further testimony upon much slighter grounds than those presented in this application.

Mr. Speaker, there are but two simple questions in this case: First, has the sitting member been guilty of any larceny? I say that he has not. If any larceny has occurred, it is attributable to the contestant, who ought not to be permitted to avail himself of his own wrong. I will not impugn any improper motive to the contestant for the late day fixed for his testimony; but I will say, it should not hurt injustice against popular rights. Is it not a remarkable fact, that a seat should be desired on this floor upon the testimony of a witness who is proved so clearly by the affidavits in this record to be unworthy of belief, under indictment for felony, and his testimony taken at a period so late as not to be rebutted? Is it not still more remarkable that the sitting member, with this evidence of Edgar's character, should be denied the privilege of impeaching, by the popular branch of the American Congress?

On yesterday time was given Williamson in his contest with Sickles, although not a requisite had been complied with and to-day similar indulgence is to be refused because he had not taken testimony which would be of great aid to the case. A greater diligence than is required by the holder of protected commercial paper. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] said yesterday, in favor of giving time:

or he failed to understand that we put this case upon the fact that it was impossible for the contestant to obtain process of court? Does he not understand, at this late day, that we put this upon the ground that the respondent answered his complaint under oath and believed, and lawyers to this day believe, that they could not be brought into court to be impeached?

He could not get legal process? Neither could Mr. Cooper. If that position was true yesterday, it is equally so to-day. There is another point in this case which the majority of the committee seem to have overlooked. The statute of 1851 requires that subpoenas shall be issued five days before the day fixed for the taking of testimony, and shall be returned with the depositions. These notices of contestant were served on the 11th and 16th, for the 21st and 26th. If the sitting member had desired to impeach any of this testimony, he could not have done so until the 16th. If he had waited five days would not have elapsed after the taking of such testimony and the 26th March, when the time expired. Cooper could have gotten out no process to rebut testimony taken on the 23d, 24d, 34th, 25th, or 36th, even if Howard had waited five days.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the gentleman to say that there is a point which the majority of the committee seem to have overlooked. It is this: that inasmuch as the statute of 1851 requires that subpoenas shall be served five days before the time of taking testimony, and this notice of Mr. Howard to take testimony was given on the 16th, and five days from that would have been the 30th, there would not have been time for the sitting member to take rebutting testimony.

Now I wish the gentleman to answer me this question: The sitting member, who took the oath and made this affidavit, served the notice upon Mr. Cooper's attorney, that Mr. Howard was going to take, in eleven days from that time, the testimony of Edgar, what hindered these men from thereupon giving Mr. Howard's attorney notice that they would take the testimony of Julius S. Blodget, that Edgar was not a man of truth and veracity, upon the very same day, and for five days after that, serving a subpoena upon Blodget, who would then have had five days before he appeared?

Mr. STEVENSON. I answer the gentleman that I have already attempted to show that he could not anticipate that Edgar would be examined, much less that he would swear falsely. If the contestant declined to examine the six witnesses named, there was no reason why he should. What witnesses would be examined? How could he pick them out? I put the same question to the gentleman that I put in the minority report: under what rule of law can a party anticipate false testimony?

Mr. DAWES. There were four witnesses in this case. How could he anticipate that any of them would be examined? He must therefore wait to see who would swear; and if any swore falsely, to impeach them. This he could not do, because there were not five days for the depositions; and what the gentleman said yesterday, as to Williamson having no legal process, applies more strongly to Cooper to-day.

If Cooper had discredited Edgar, some other witness might have been examined in his place.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. Hickey, their Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate had passed an act (No. 362) providing for a reduction in the prices allowed for the publication and printing, and providing for the binding of the public documents, reports and Journals; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate have passed a bill of this House (No. 19) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels," approved March 3, 1855, for the better protection of female passengers, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that they had passed without amendment a bill of this House (No. 331) to repeal the third section of an act entitled "An act to increase and regulate the terms of the circuit and district courts for the northern district of the State of New York," approved July 1, 1854.

Also, that the President of the United States has informed the Senate that he did, on the 22d instant, approve an act (S. No. 239) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Pearson, deceased.

Also, that the Senate have ordered the following documents to be printed:

Resolutions of the Legislature of Virginia, concerning revolutionary and other claims against the United States.

Message of the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the marble columns for the Capitol extension.

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a statement of the trade and commerce of the United States with the North American Provinces annually since 1850.

Message of the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, further correspondence in relation to the hostilities in the Republics of Nicaragua and Guatemalan, and the citizens of Washington and Georgetown, praying for authority to construct a railroad from Georgetown along Pennsylvania avenue to the Navy-Yard, in Washington.

MICHIGAN CONTESTED ELECTION—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, one word more, and I have done. I have attempted to show that the sitting member has been guilty of no larceny. I have shown that he is able to rebut the testimony taken by contestant. It is clear that, in consequence of the late period fixed by contestant for taking testimony, the sitting member has not been able to rebut it; but can, if time be allowed, disprove it. It now remains to be shown that this testimony sought to be rebutted bears materially on the issue. I will just refer to the testimony of a distinguished professor in the State of Michigan, taken at the instance of the sitting member. This is the affidavit:

State of Michigan, County of Wayne:

I, Charles J. Walker, of Detroit, being duly sworn, depose and say that I am by profession an attorney and counselor at law, and am a law professor in the University of Michigan; I reside in the seventh ward of the city of Detroit, and have for many years; at the State election, November 4, 1856, I was constant in the polls, and took the entire day at the polls, and mostly at the seventh ward; I was for a short time at the polls, and was at the seventh ward precinct, which was for most of the day, it was an interested and careful observer of the manner in which the election was conducted; I especially noticed the conduct of Thomas Horrigan, who acted as a Democratic challenger; I can say with great confidence that I never saw a Democratic challenger in any case so conducted more civilly; there were no threats nor violence that could or did deter any voter from depositing his vote; the voters were all treated with civility and respect; the polls were so high to be reached from the ground, and a dry goods box was placed in front of the window upon which voters got when they voted.

At an early hour in the morning the Republican challenger, Sylvester Larned, Esq., took his position inside of the room where the polls were conducted, and so placed himself that no Democratic challenger could find or get a position there, and consequently they had to be outside; there was no other place they could occupy but the grandstands; here, for the most part, Mr. Howrigan was stationed; the box was quite too small for a convenient platform, and towards the close of the day there was some jostling upon it, and, naturally, inevitably some pushing; but there was much less than I have usually seen, and no violence and no difficulty in voting; I do not believe that any voter lost his vote, either from violence or fear of violence, or from any real difficulty in getting to the polls; there was, of course, some rudeness of speech, and some struggles to get uncertain voters to change their votes, but less than is usual in elections; several pains had been taken to impress upon Democratic challengers that quiet and order must be preserved, and it was done to a remarkable degree; Sylvester Larned, the Republican challenger, expressed himself very strongly at the close of the poll in relation to the peaceable character of the election, and especially as the peaceable manner in which Howrigan had conducted himself.

C. J. WALLER.
Henry R. Mizzner.
Henry Public, Wayne county, Michigan.

Yet this man, Larned, is a witness who has testified to improper conduct on the part of Howrigan, and is one of the witnesses relied upon to sustain this poll; though here is the unimpeachable testimony of a professor in the University of Michigan, directly in contravention of the testimony given by Larned in behalf of the contestant. Now, if it is true that this testimony is true, it could not have been contradicted at the time it was given; that Mr. Cooper, the sitting member, could not have anticipated that Larned would swear falsely. After Larned gave his testimony, there was not time for the notice of issuing subpoenas, which the act of 1851 required. If, therefore, he had had it in his power to disprove Larned's statement, and had called upon a justice of the peace to issue subpoenas, the justice would have refused, because there was not the time remaining which the law required.

Now, if the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Dawes) was right yesterday in his position that Williamson had not in his power the right to have subpoenas issued for witnesses, he must certainly come upon the same ground to-day, or I must concede that he has adopted the rule of the Williamson case and another for the Cooper case.

But, Mr. Speaker, here is the testimony of the district attorney, a high officer in the State of Michigan. He states—

"That he was at the polls of the second ward in said city frequently during the election, and that he saw no violence or disorderly conduct at said polls; that he was at said polls during the last hour or two before they closed; and that, though there was a great deal of laughing and joking, he neither saw nor heard any violence, or attempt to prevail upon voters from voting."

Yet when these affidavits of witnesses going to disprove the credibility of the witnesses examined on the last day are presented, and when it was out of his power to have legally taken rebutting testimony from the majority of the Committee, and the gentleman alleges that Mr. Cooper ought to have gone on against law, and taken this testimony; that he ought to have incurred all the expense incident thereto, when the contestant had the right to exclude it by objection.

But gentlemen say that we have no right to suppose the contestant would object. Sir, I think we are very strongly fortified in the inference that he would have objected, because he refuses now to let these affidavits come in. And it seems to me that in every aspect in which this case can be presented, it is entirely fair to suppose that the rejection of an application to take rebutting testimony where one man has taken testimony within the last five days of the sixty days, and is met by the allegation and proof that the testimony thus taken is untrue. I know of no case similar to it. Therefore it becomes important to the contest to know whether a people entitled to be represented upon this floor are to be shut out from an equitable construction of law, and shut out in direct antagonism to every judicial decision hitherto made and known. The sitting member of the court takes his testimony at the time stated. He says that it is important to a proper decision of the merits of this case that the character of contestant's testimony should be exposed. Shall we give him further time, in which, it is shown, it can be taken? I think, sir, that we should.

Mr. HOWARD, (contestant.) I am not against this application was that his affidavit in its support were taken out at a late day. Every affidavit was taken before the application was made. He is not responsible for the non-organization of this House during the first sixty days of the session. He was ready at the commencement of the session. I know of no rule of law that undertakes to refuse a continuance absolutely necessary to the substantial rights of a party when there has been no laches. Can any lawyer show me any precedent by which the merits of the application are to be refused because these affidavits were taken either the night before or upon the morning of the application? By all the precedents known to us, it seems to me a stronger case can never occur in this House than has been made out upon the present application.

Mr. HOWARD, the contestant, took the floor during the resolution of the House allowing him the privilege of speaking to the contested-election case of which he is a party.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With the permission of the committee, I will now give notice that I will call for a special session of the House for the Committee on Elections in this case, at four o'clock this afternoon; and that, if it is the wish of the House, I will ask that the question be terminated and disposed of.

Mr. HOWARD, (contestant.) Mr. Speaker, I do not have the least availed myself of the privilege extended to me by the House, had not some extraordinary features been developed in these reports and the argument of counsel. It appears to be charged that Edgar is a perjured man. Strictly speaking, we cannot go outside of the record; and yet, there are one or two facts known to me outside of the record, that I feel called upon to state, not with a view that they should have a bearing upon this case, for I care not what becomes of Edgar or his testimony, so far as that is concerned, but to set right gentlemen who have been misled.

It is assumed in the minority report that these impeaching affidavits are made by respectable men. With the permission of the House, I will state one fact, upon information which I believe to be true. The justice of the peace who makes one of these affidavits, in the month of December last, as I am informed and believe, entered upon his docket a false and fictitious case, with false and fictitious names, spread upon the record a great mass of story represented to have been sworn to by Edgar, and then called in sundry persons, and by their testimony contradicted what they supposed Edgar had sworn to. They did that for the express purpose of impeaching Edgar's testimony here; but the thing was found out, and it exploded itself as soon as it was exposed to the January, and heard of these facts. Every one of these impeaching affidavits is sworn to either by that justice of the peace or by one of his co-conspirators. I do not care whether the statement has any effect upon the case or not; I know that the record must determine the case; but, sir, when a man is impeached by such means, I will proclaim the infamy of the conspiracy by which it is done. Now, this seat is nothing to me or to the sitting member; but I will not allow such things without stating the facts. As late as the 1st of December these affidavits were taken, and the sitting member was a member were beleaguering Edgar to get him to make an affidavit softening down this very testimony, and when they could not get that done by terrifying him, or by any other means, they exploded it through this conspiracy; and when that failed, they turned round and charged his character for truth and veracity was laid.

I do not care whether Mr. Edgar's testimony is in or out.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that he ought to confine his remarks to the record, and not state facts outside of it.

Mr. COOPER. I never heard of this man Edgar's testimony until November, when I returned to Detroit, and then I also learned that he was in jail. On inquiring of a detective policeman, in reference to the present matter, he told me that I could get Edgar to sign and swear to anything for five dollars. That shows his general reputation.

Mr. HOWARD, (contestant.) I admit the criticism of the gentleman from Mississippi. I believe it is entirely correct. I am aware that there are outside of the case, and which will have no bearing upon it. I think it is right I should say as much as I have, because much has been said outside of the record upon the other side. I know nothing about Edgar's testimony, or Edgar himself, further than that he is a resident of the fifth ward, Detroit, and that he is represented as being a Democrat. I do not know that I ever saw him until some time during the election. I have not seen much of him since. I do not care, I repeat, whether his testimony is in or out. It does not affect the merits of the case, as made out, one way or the other. But, sir, I will never consent to its being thrown out until that man is met face to face by his accuser. If he be impeached, after he has had a fair chance, I would myself be the first man here upon this floor to ask that it should be struck from the record. I do not want a seat upon the evidence of such a man, if his character could be impeached.

Much stress is put upon the fact that he could not be impeached at the time. Sir, he could have been impeached at the time, if at all, under the law of 1851. The time of taking testimony expired on the 27th of March. The 27th of March was Sunday, it is true. If a notice had been served on the 17th of March—the day after I gave the notice—for taking Edgar's testimony, I aver that, under the law of Michigan, or of any other State, that testimony could have been taken on Saturday or Monday. In our State, where notes fall due on Sunday, they are required by law or custom to be paid on Saturday. In other States, they are required to be paid on Monday. I do not believe that the law of Michigan would require that testimony could not be paid on Saturday or Monday. This notice was served on the 16th, and instead of containing the names of seventy-five witnesses, it contained the names of only four. There were but four witnesses noticed to be examined on the 26th.

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not see the notice of the 16th contained the names of the seventy-five witnesses; but that all the notices together contained that number of names, and that but fifteen were examined.

Mr. HOWARD, (contestant.) The statement I made is that the four witnesses noticed to be examined on the 26th, and there were less than that number examined, because some of them were absent; and I maintain that under every rule of law, notice should have been given for impeaching Edgar, and that they could have been examined on Saturday in our State.

But I aver further, that no man ever dreamed that Edgar's testimony was false. The very first thing which occurred after he left the stand, was for him to go with his brother Democrat, the attorney of the sitting member, to an oyster saloon to talk a dial of oysters, and I went with them. The attorney and I talked about the testimony, and this particular point was raised, that—

Mr. BARKSDALE. The gentleman is stating facts not contained in his record. Now, I must insist that he confine himself to the facts stated in the record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. COLFAX in the chair.) The Chair would remind the gentleman from Mississippi that the House authorized the gentleman to be heard.

Mr. HOWARD, (contestant.) I will confine myself to the record.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I am aware of what the Chair states; but the gentleman is stating facts not contained in the record, and which are calculated to prejudice the case; and I appeal to the courtesy of the House, and the gentleman has admitted the correctness of the point I made. He has a right to come in upon the facts in the record, but not upon facts not contained in it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question for information. It is, whether he does not remember that, when the Nebraska contested-election case of Bennett and Chapman was before the House, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Stephens, read and commented upon ex parte affidavits before the committee, and the whole question was decided upon them? And I presume that the gentleman from Mississippi voted entirely on that question upon testimony not before the House.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to say that I have no recollection of that case.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The gentleman will find that it is so.

Mr. BARKSDALE. My point is, that the gentleman from Michigan has no right to speak of facts in the case which are not contained in the record. While he is speaking under the permission of the House, he should confine his remarks to the matters I have indicated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The House granted the privilege to the gentleman from Michigan of making any comments he pleased upon this case.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The gentleman has not the right to go outside of the record and state facts not in the case. That is the point I make.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I raise this point: when the House, by its resolution, agreed to let the contestant speak in this case, as a matter of course it was the case reported by the committee; and that case is contained in the respective reports of the majority and minority of the committee. He has no leave, under that resolution of the House, to range outside, and speak of facts not contained in the case.

Mr. GOOCH. I wonder that this point did not occur to gentlemen yesterday when newspaper articles were read by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SICKLES.]

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides, upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri, that the House having granted permission to the contestant to be heard, as long as his remarks are germane to the case under consideration, gentlemen cannot call him to order. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HOWARD, of Connecticut. The gentleman has been made to the case which was discussed and decided yesterday. That was an application for further time. So is this. In one respect they are alike.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to make this remark to the gentleman from Michigan: that he has been allowed to address the House upon this case, and not to give testimony in the case.

Mr. HOWARD, (constant.) I am not giving testimony in the case.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I understand the gentleman to be stating facts and giving testimony in the case, for that is the effect of the gentleman's speech.

Mr. STANTON. I submit to the gentleman from Mississippi that the gentleman from Michigan is stating an argument in reply to what has been said.

Mr. BARKSDALE. But he is stating facts not contained in the record, and testifying in the case.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has made his decision in conformity to the action of the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a point of order. I understand that the gentleman from Michigan is proceeding to make statements of facts which he says are within his own knowledge, but which he acknowledges are not within the record.

Mr. HOWARD, (constant.) I said no such thing; but I have long since passed that point.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Very well, then, I have no objection to his proceeding.

Mr. HOWARD, (constant.) I was saying that the case decided yesterday, and the case now before the House, were alike in one respect, for both are applications for further time. In every other respect they are unlike. Nearly the whole of the debate yesterday was upon the point whether the action of the board of canvassers of the State of New York put that case under the law of 1851. It was conceded, on all hands, that, if it was put there by the action of that board, it remained there; and the limitation of that act applied to it, and there could be no remedy. My learned friend from North Carolina, [Mr. GILMAN], the chairman of the Committee of Elections, took the view of it that the action of the board had put that case under the act of 1851; and he was indignant that a case should be brought here in which the law had been so great. Others took a different view, and thought it ought to be considered in the present case. In that case, the law was never under the law; and therefore the limitations of the law never applied to it. Now, sir, it is conceded, on all hands, by the sitting member and by myself, and by the majority and the minority of the committee, that this case was always under the law. The law commenced running, with its limitation; and it continued to run till the limitation expired. There is no dispute about that. Now, sir, I do not believe that there are twenty men in the House who would have voted to give Williamson the time asked, if they had believed that his case was fairly and squarely under the law. If the State canvassers had determined the election, and issued their certificate, then the law would have run against Williamson; and his application would have been refused on account of facts. It would have been monstrous to allow this case to the House to have done otherwise than refuse it.

Now, sir, the election in New York and the election in Michigan were held on the same day. I state a fact. Whether it is outside of the record or not, I suppose it must come before the committee. The elections were held on the same day, and yet this application of the sitting member was not made until weeks after Williamson made his. The law is greater in this case than it would have been in Williamson's, even if Williamson's law was applied to be under the law.

Mr. COOPER. I made the application the first time that the case was called on.

Mr. HOWARD, (constant.) The sitting member made his application on the 5th day of March, 1861. I do not know what day Williamson made his application. But I do know that the sitting member from New York [Mr. SICKLES] filed his answer on the 21st of February, two weeks before. There has been laches enough, since the Committee of Elections was appointed, to cut off the sitting member in this application. He has been sitting down in New York since that case occurred before the passage of the law of 1851, but that makes it all the stronger. If, when the law left the matter altogether uncertain, and at the discretion of the House, the House would not grant time, will it do so here, and override the law? All the authorities, in all the cases where applications were refused before the passage of the law, are stronger under the law than they were before.

Now, then, I have this point to make. I wish to put it to gentlemen, how can any one of the sixty-four men who voted yesterday against giving Williamson time, vote to-day to give Cooper time, while Cooper's application was made only at several weeks after Williamson's was, and while both elections took place on the same day? I beg me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the application which he refused to grant time to Williamson, under the belief that he was under the law, do otherwise than refuse to grant time to Cooper, when they admit to be under the law, and whose laches outruns Williamson's by several weeks?

I beg me call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to a single point in the minority report. It is the one alluded to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMPBELL.]

It is claimed, however, on the other side, that Cooper should have served a notice on Howard, and given his proof after the expiration of the sixty days, although it is admitted that such testimony could not have been read without the committee's consent. No gentleman was found in support of such a position. The law never requires any intimation to take testimony which is incompetent without the consent of the committee. The authenticated case can be found in support of such a position.

What position? The position that he ought to have served notice after the expiration of sixty days, and gone on taking testimony, and come here and asked to have it received. They say no authentic case can be found for that; and yet in the Vallandigham case, the majority of the committee used the precise language; the committee were called upon the opinion that—

"If either party to a case of contested election should desire further time, and Congress should not be then in session, he should give notice to the opposite party, and proceed in taking testimony, and preserve the same; and ask that it be received, and, upon good reasons being shown, it doubtless would be allowed; but it seems too much to grant in this case, for either of the reasons stated."

That is the exact point raised on the 35th page of the minority report. The fact is, that the gentleman who signed the minority report in this case, signed the majority report in the Vallandigham case, with this precise language in it; and I believe that three of the honorable gentlemen who signed the minority report here voted in the House to sustain the majority report in the Vallandigham case.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask the gentleman whether Mr. Campbell did not inform Mr. Vallandigham by letter that he intended to take testimony beyond the sixty days.

Mr. HOWARD, (constant.) I think he did; but that has nothing to do with this point. Now, in the minority report in this case, the objection is stated in almost the same language as it was stated in the majority report in the Vallandigham case. I have every confidence, and I repeat, for, every one of these gentlemen, but I have not quite so much respect for their accuracy in this particular case as I should wish to have.

I do not say that their opinion or their action is at all influenced by the principle shadowed forth in the Vallandigham case. I do not say that they do not say that, by any possibility, it makes a difference with any one of these gentlemen as to whose bill it was, or whose ox it was; but I do say that no man can read those two passages, the one from the minority report in this case, and the other from the majority report in the Vallandigham case, without remembering that fable, if he ever read it. The fact is, that one of them is twelve-dice, and the other one is most essentially twelve-dice. I again appeal to gentlemen to compare these cases. They are alike in one respect, for they both ask for time. Williamson asked for time on the express ground that his case was not under the law. But in this case the laches would have been worse than that, even if both were under the law—worse, by several times.

Now, how can any one of the sixty-four vote to grant time in this case, where not an intimation was ever given by the sitting member that he wished the privilege of anything, except the cross-examination of my witnesses? I am informed that Mr. Cooper's application was filed on the 9th of February—the day the committee was appointed—while this application was not made till the 5th of March, nearly four weeks afterwards. If the sitting member had moved in this matter the day the committee was appointed, he could have had his thirty days, and we could be arguing this case now on its merits, to say nothing about the laches that had occurred before.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the language of the report of the majority. They say:

"Mr. Cooper presented this application on the 5th of March, and he has not served a notice until the election was held, and more than fourteen months after notice of contest; more than thirteen months after his answer had been served upon the committee; more than five months after the time for taking testimony under the law had expired, and after one half of the time of the service of the Committee of Elections had expired. He has not intimated any witness or taken any testimony in his own behalf, or given any notice of his intention to do so. And yet it appears he has presented by counsel, more than three months before he made this application, at the taking of all the testimony, the evidence of every man of the committee's witnesses, and offered none of his own."

"If this does not present a clear case of laches on the part of the sitting member, he never had a right to ask for such a considerable state of facts would make one."

I wish now, sir, to pay my respects to a point which is pressed here with great earnestness, viz: the fact that Edgar's testimony was taken on the last day of the sixty, or the last day that testimony could be taken; and it is contended that an application should be made for a continuance. I wish to call the special attention of the minority of the committee to one point. In the case of Vallandigham v. Campbell, the allegation was, that Vallandigham had not only taken testimony, important testimony, on the last day; but he had taken testimony on every one of the days; or, at least, that his notices covered every one, and he had so laid them upon another that they actually covered sixty-six days instead of sixty, and yet the committee refused to extend the time.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to be obliged to interrupt the gentleman, but I had intended, before the close of this case, to correct the gross misstatement made by the Committee of Elections, which he has just quoted—a misstatement, of course, unintentional, and from an imperfect examination of the case in which it is made. The charge, it is true, was set forth in argument two years ago, and was transferred from that argument to the views of the minority of the Committee of Elections; but it never had any foundation in fact, and I regretted very much to find it repeated in the report and again placed upon the record, in the case it relates to the contestant in that case the “trickery,” of which he could not be capable and never was guilty, of attempting to extend the time for taking testimony beyond the sixty days authorized by law. It all grew out of a mistake, which was corrected promptly at the time. A notice was given to take testimony, which was discovered, subsequently, to be irregular, and was abandoned, absolutely abandoned, in that case; and no testimony was taken, except within fifty-five days after the error, and so that it makes no argument two years ago. I took testimony upon the last day; and upon the day previous to the last, testimony was taken also by the sitting member.

Mr. HOWARD, (contentant.) I take my statement from the minority report in this case. I know nothing more of it. But the gentleman's own explanation, and it makes that case altogether stronger than this, because in that case he took testimony on the last day; and he not only took testimony on the last day, but, as the gentleman says, on fifty-eight days prior to the notices covered fifty-eight days; whereas in this case all the notices covered but twenty-two days.

Now, sir, the minority of the committee divide their case off into two parts: first, the impeaching affidavits as against Edgar, which they place under the head of impeaching affidavits; and second, six affidavits impeaching Edgar, and but six, although I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] stated that there were eleven. My impression at the time he spoke was, that there were but six, and I said only six here. That, however, is altogether immaterial.

Now, sir, as I have already said, the whole testimony of Edgar relates to the exclusion of nine votes returned for the sitting member. The testimony in the case directly attacks and bears upon the hundred and fifty-two votes returned for the sitting member. His majority in the district was seventy-five. If the case were made out, and these nine votes were left in, it would only make the difference in my majority that much. If five hundred and fifty-two bad votes for the sitting member are proved by the present testimony, then, of course, it would leave me a majority of four hundred and seventy-seven, or thereabouts. If these nine votes were still counted for the sitting member, my majority, instead of being four hundred and seventy-seven, would be four hundred and sixty-eight.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman pretend to say that I received that number of illegal votes?

Mr. HOWARD, (contentant.) I pretend just what I say—no more and no less. That is the truth of the case, and the testimony does establish that. It is not for me to say whether it establishes it or not. But I say this: that by no possibility could the case turn upon those nine votes; and I would ask myself to have them excluded from my case, but for the reason of the unfair way in which the witness's case had been attacked. If he be impeached, then his testimony should be excluded. If he cannot be impeached, he ought not to be assailed in this way by ex parte affidavits taken nearly twelve months after the case was tried. And, by the way, these affidavits were taken three days after the case was postponed, as we supposed, for the purpose of a hearing. Now, it makes no sort of difference whether those nine votes are in or out.

Appendix No. 3 contains two affidavits that go to show the legal character of the proceedings in the case of Walker and Chipman. Chipman was the attorney for the sitting member when this testimony was taken. They both of them swear that they were at the polls in the second ward more or less on the day of the election, and that they saw the whole, that everything was pretty quiet. That is the drift and effect of their testimony. The minority of the committee state that two witnesses have testified that there was so much disturbance there that the voters could not vote. I wish, for the sake of accuracy, the number had been stated correctly, although I do not believe for a moment that any member of the committee would knowingly withhold an important circumstance, much less would misstate any matter having an important bearing upon the case of one or the other. But, sir, it would have been more accurate if they had said that the testimony of four witnesses bore testimony upon the fact which those affidavits intend to disprove—the testimony of Larned, Hornbeck, Stebbins, and Jackson. The testimony of all four of them bears directly upon that point. But, sir, it is immaterial to the issue that is to come before the House, whether this poll be sustained in gross or not. If it be retained, it gives the sitting member seventy-six votes, which was his majority in that ward; if that ward be thrown out, of course it takes these seventy-six votes from the number counted for the sitting member. But, sir, in that ward there are some sixty votes for the contestant, so that it makes only a difference of about fifteen or sixteen whether the poll be accepted or rejected. If it be thrown out, the difference in my favor is seventy-six; if it be retained, sixty votes are attacked in detail, leaving a difference of sixteen more in one case than in the other.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the whole case. The minority of the committee rest their case upon two propositions: first, upon the ability of the sitting member to impeach the character of Edgar, whose testimony relates to nine votes; and second, upon his ability to prove the regularity of the election in the second ward, which gave him seventy-six majority, which, if thrown out, would reduce his majority seventy-six; but, as I have said, if retained, sixty votes are reduced by the number attacked; and, if he have been sustained, the difference is illegal. The minority of the committee refer for their proof to appendices Nos. 1 and 2, the result of which I have given. Suppose, then, this application is granted, and the sitting member proves all that he alleges: what is the result? No, sir, the sitting member has twenty-two votes, giving a total of twenty-five votes out of the five hundred and fifty-two that are attacked. That is all the sitting member proposes to accomplish in the rebutting testimony that he has been able to do. The sitting member waited four months for the notice of contest, and three months after the meeting of Congress. I repeat it, sir, the proposition he makes is to sustain twenty-five votes out of the five hundred and fifty-two I have attacked.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this case is without parallel in the history of a legislative body. Never before did a man wait for fourteen months, admitting himself that under the law he was required to act within sixty days, and then come to the House three months after Congress meets, and say that he has been sustained in his testimony taken in reference to twenty-five votes out of five hundred and fifty-two—or, in other words, of one out of twenty-two—asserting that he can disprove the testimony in reference to one, but asking the House to doubt the other twenty-one. There is never such a case of laches? Was there ever a case so utterly without excuse? Was there ever a case where the proposed showing was so utterly frivolous?

Now, then, as to the point on which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] indulged in so pathetic an appeal. He says, and they say in the minority report, that this is a peculiar case, because it proposes to impeach witnesses that were sworn on the last day, and that Mr. Cooper could not impeach them because he could not give ten days' notice. If, now, sir, if you consider that every single case would have the same peculiarity, because all either party would have to do would be to get some ex parte affidavit going to impeach some one of the witnesses sworn sometime within the last day. He would then have the precise case that is presented here.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask the gentleman if the sitting member could have legally examined witnesses to impeach the testimony given within the last two or three days of the time allowed for taking the case. If I ask him if a case ever occurred in which permission was asked to impeach the veracity of witnesses who were so examined?

Mr. HOWARD, (contentant.) Any witness examined the last nine days before the time of taking testimony expires might be attacked in the same way, and that made the excuse for further continuance. Now, then, suppose this case should be opened; suppose that after the thirty days which the sitting member asks for, we were called here and should think on the whole that the testimony was rather against me, and should say to the Committee of Elections, “one of the witnesses examined about five or six days before the thirty days is now shown to be a liar, and I can impeach him. I will not undertake to contradict him, but I say, but I will prove that he has character for veracity is bad,” and the House give me thirty days, and so on; do not gentlemen see that the controversy would never come to an end? There must be a last word somewhere, and sometimes I insist, that to open a case upon such a showing, where there is nothing but laches from beginning to end; where there is not one solitary excuse, where there is no sort of importance to what is proposed to be proved, where the allegations which are made are so utterly and utterly frivolous, only attaching to one out of twenty-two of the votes I have attacked, would be such a case as was never heard of. I submit that the peculiarities of this case are three: that there are grounds for laches that are attached to any case coming before this body; that it is a case entirely without excuse and without reason; and that the proposed showing is more utterly frivolous. And again, I submit to gentlemen that if this case is to be opened because the witnesses were examined on the last day, why should the witnesses be examined on the last day, why should the witnesses be examined on the last day, but on almost unanimous votes, would have rejected the application of Mr. Williamson, had they believed him to be under the law of 1851, how shall they open this when they admit that it comes legitimately under the law, and when the laches which gentlemen claimed in his case is not in this case? Is it not four or five years later? I ask if the sixty-four members who voted against his application yesterday will now vote for opening this case?

Mr. Speaker, I have already detailed the House have heard of this case, and will yield the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will yield to any gentleman on the other side who may wish to speak to the resolution.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Speaker, there are certain general principles applying to cases of contested elections that should always be observed by the House. In every case that has come before this body, my own course has invariably been controlled by them, whatever may have been the nature of contest, and whether they applied favorably or unfavorably to any political friend or political opponent. It was because of the application of these principles that I felt myself constrained to vote, at the last Congress, against the claim of my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. VALLANDIGHAM], and I shall apply those principles to the decision of the case now under consideration.

There are, I think, Mr. Speaker, only two modes of election in any of the States of this Union: first, where the votes are given in secret, and each voter discloses his choice; and next, where the election is made by ballot, and the elector's vote is not known. Let me say a word in reference to the rules which govern the decisions of cases where the election is in secret. A man who proposes to contest the seat of a member must give him notice of the ground of objection. If it be the fraud of the returning officer, he must give the fraud. If it be the violence and tumult prevailed at the election, the particulars of time, place, and circumstance, must be alleged. If illegal votes were received, then I hold it to be the duty of the contestant to give the names of the illegal voters. If it be the ground of complaint that illegal votes were received at the election, and he must then give in detail the name of each voter whose right to vote is denied. If a man knows that illegal votes were given, he knows, or ought to know, by whom they were given, and he has no right to say that they were given, he has no right to aver that they were given at all; for votes unchallenged on the poll must be received and treated as legal votes. These illegal votes may be such, either by reason of some disqualification in the elector, or from the want of qualification. The one is affirmative; the other negative. If the elector be disqualified by reason of infancy, or want of citizenship, or the commission of some infamous crime, which deprives him of the right of suffrage, then the contestant must prove that John Johnson was not a citizen, or because he was not twenty-one years of age; or because an alien, and not a naturalized citizen; or because infamous and disqualified from voting; and these being affirmative averments, the contestant must prove them. But where he alleges that the defect is in the want of qualification, he simply says that John Thompson is not legally qualified to vote, according to the laws of Wisconsin or Michigan or Virginia; and then the party who claims his vote must show its validity. No man can prove a negative; and if you throw the burden upon the contestant to show that the party is not a legal voter, he may introduce every man in the world but one, and they may be all unable to state the qualification upon which the man voted; while the man himself may be enabled to prove affirmatively his right to vote. All the rest may say that they saw nothing of his right to vote, and he may be a legal voter nevertheless.

This, then, is the rule which should apply to all cases where the vote given by the elector is known and recorded. But it does not the less apply to those cases where the vote has been by ballot.

And now, sir, I come to the consideration of those contested-election cases occurring in States where, under their constitutions, the vote is a secret one. I do not know how far my argument upon this subject will be acceptable to the House. The principles I am about to announce have always controlled my own votes here, in every case of contested election. I think, with all deference to others, that they are sound and just. Judging, however, from the course of decisions here, I have no reason to believe that they are very generally entertained.

I will not allow any contest respecting the legality of any particular vote, once recorded on the poll, in a State which allows this secret ballot. Where a vote is given by ballot, it is given under a guarantee of the elector, that the State will guarantee that that vote shall be secret, and that it shall not be inquired of. It is not his right to break the seal of secrecy. It is not the personal privilege of the voter; it is an institution of the State. I think it a very bad thing, but nevertheless, where the State, in the exercise of its sovereignty, determines that a voter shall vote by secret ballot, there is no power upon earth that can inquire for whom the vote was given, except where provision is made by the law of the land, as has been done in some of the States of the Union, for the contingency of contested-election cases.

Are you to ascertain for whom any elector voted? Are you to receive the declarations of the voter, made at the time, or before the time, or after the time? What are these declarations? The object of the law is to secure independence in the elector. In other words, the object of the law is to induce a man to vote one way, and to say that he voted another. If that be not the object of the law, then tell me how in this boasted independence secured? If it is intended that the man should speak truly of his vote, or that others shall give testimony concerning his vote, how are you to secure this independence?

You then encourage in these men a deceitful, hypocritical, fraudulent, and unscrupulous vote to Brown, and to hold out to the world that they voted for Jones. This law intends this result. The law invites a man to utter a falsehood, and then, according to your practice, you make this falsehood the evidence of the truth, in the subsequent inquiry as to what the elector voted. Sir, I will allow no such thing. I will not allow evidence to be taken of the confessions of a man, which confessions are, by the law itself, intended to be deceptive and fraudulent. Sir, I will not allow such inquiries, under a law which, professedly designed to secure the independence of one employed under a master, encourages that man to avoid the consequences of a vote given in opposition to his employer's wishes, by saying that he had given it in conformity with his wishes.

But admit that the vote given by an elector involves only his own personal privilege, and that he may disclose his secret at pleasure; still, he cannot be drawn that it was the object of the law to secure him the privilege of secrecy; and though one man may waive it, a thousand may not. Tell me, then, what will you do with those persons who have never broken the seal of secrecy? If, among thousands of voters, a single elector has been bold enough, or honest enough, or fraudulent enough, to say that they voted for a particular candidate, what will you do with the eight thousand others who have not made any such confession? You do not know how they voted. Then there is that upon the commission of two thousand out of ten thousand, you will go into an inquiry; and if you find that a majority of the two thousand voted for the contestant, you will give him the seat, though you do not know, and never can know, how the eight thousand voted. I hold that no court, no legislature, no jury, no human tribunal, would ever consent to enter upon an inquiry for truth, when they knew, beforehand, they never could arrive at the truth. You cannot know, you are prevented by the law from knowing, how the eight thousand voted; and then there is that upon the commission of two thousand disclosed their votes for A or for B, you are to give the seat to that one of the two candidates who appeared to have a majority of the two thousand, without inquiring, without knowing, without the possibility of knowing, how the others gave their votes. It is just as absurd as if an accountant should undertake to strike a balance of numerous dealings of two merchants, upon the inspection of three pages out of twenty of the debtor and creditor account; and gravely report that A appeared to owe B, or that B appeared to owe A, any particular sum of money, because, upon three pages of the account, not connected with the rest, he found that the items preponderated in favor of one or the other.

Now, sir, I have said a great deal more upon this subject than I intended to say, and I am sorry to say, that I am not in a position to make any statement of my position upon this case. I would not grant any time for the taking of testimony to a party who stated his own case so vaguely as not to entitle him to an investigation. This, I think, is the case with the contestant, will give you the specification in his notice; and that at the election in November, sundry ballots were cast." Again: "Sundry ballots were counted by the judges." Again: "Sundry persons were permitted." Again: "Sundry persons were refused votes for homicide. Now, surely no legislative body should institute an inquiry upon such allegations as these. If the names of the voters had been given, it would have been incumbent upon the gentleman from Michigan, the sitting member, to take testimony to prove that they were legal voters.

If the application were now made by the contestant to take further evidence, I certainly would not feel disposed to grant it; because I should consider that his notice was so vague and indefinite that no evidence ought to be allowed to be taken upon it.

I do not mean to say that this objection applies to all the specifications in the notice, because four or five of them may have been reasonably certain; though even in the case where I think there is a reasonable minuteness of specification, the ground of objection to them is that they are insignificant in point of law; as where he alleges, for instance, that the inspectors of election in some cases were not sworn, which could hardly be a ground for throwing out the votes received by them.

I will not myself construe the notice yesterday against the application of the contestant for the city of New York; because, admitting the general correctness of everything stated in his notice of contest, I would not have gone into any inquiry at all, because the complaint was altogether too vague and indefinite. I would not have allowed the sitting member might properly have demurred. Now, while I would not and could not grant time to the gentleman from Michigan to take evidence to contest the seat of the sitting member, the House will readily see that, after the votes had been taken for the County of Erie, if the House had gone on to consider such evidence, and held it proper to be received under the notice of contest, it becomes a question whether the sitting member shall take further evidence, which, if he were the contestant, I would refuse him, but which cannot be refused the sitting member unless the House is ready to say—not that I presume they are not ready to say so—but they would exclude all the evidence taken under this notice.

As he has not had an opportunity to furnish such evidence, I say I would vote to give him time; and that, too, without the slightest inconsistency with any rule of the House to-day. I refused to vote for time yesterday to one petitioner. I should refuse to-day to vote for time to the other petitioner. I would not allow a man to take advantage of his own wrong. I would not allow a petitioner to give a vague, indefinite notice of contest, and to make that an occasion for desiring further time to take evidence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me a moment? He is laboring under a mistake. The committee has not decided on the testimony submitted by the parties. This is a mere preliminary motion. Whether the evidence will be received or rejected depends on future action. We have not yet decided whether there is any competent evidence; or whether it is all competent. We have had no action yet.

Mr. COCKER. Here is a remark which was inserted in the other side's report.

Mr. MILLSON. It may be true, Mr. Speaker, that the committee has not yet come to any conclusion as to the character of the evidence; but the very failure of the committee to report back the previous notice of contest, and to make that be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, shows that they are entertaining it. Why report this preliminary resolution against taking further evidence? If they regarded the evidence of the petitioner as insufficient to found a claim upon, or if they had not reported that fact to the House, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject? I infer, therefore, from the circumstance, that they have made no such report, and have not asked to be discharged; that they are proceeding to consider this question as they have reported that on that notice; and therefore I will not by my vote deprive the sitting member of the opportunity of collecting such testimony as he may be able to produce in answer to the complaint of the petitioner; because, although I might not deem it necessary that I should give such evidence any, yet I have no right to substitute my individual impression as to what should be done, for the deliberate judgment of this whole body.

Now, sir, I think that there is a very strong case made out for the sitting member. The sitting member states that he desires to confute and contradict certain statements made by one witness in particular, whose name has been referred to as Mr. Edgar; and it has been asked why he did not implicate that man on the reception of the notice that his evidence would be taken? That question was very fully and conclusively answered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON]; but I desire to make an additional answer. It is, that I never heard of any proceeding to impeach the veracity of a person on the receipt of a notice that his evidence would be taken; a controversy that that person would be examined as a witness. And I do not think I hazard much, as a lawyer, in saying that any man who should venture to take testimony impugning the character of a citizen as unworthy of credit, in a case in which he had never been sworn as a witness—in a case where, perhaps, the person himself might never choose to be sworn as a witness—would perhaps expose himself to an action for slander or libel, as the calumny may have been oral or written.

In this case, Edgar might never have chosen to go forward as a witness. What right had Cooper, the sitting member, to conclude that because the contestant, Mr. Howard, gave him notice that Edgar would be a witness, therefore Edgar would be a witness? I do not think so. I would not make a witness; and that, as such witnesses, he would commit perjury? It might have been that Edgar, from his own knowledge of his bad reputation, might have refused to subject himself to examination; and it would be altogether premature in the other side to say that he would be a witness, or anticipated statements, or to blacken the character of one who was a mere possible witness, and who never had been examined in the course of any judicial investigation. He must, moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNULLMENT OF MORMON LAWS.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for an order to print an amendment I propose to offer to the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, in reference to the suppression of polygamy.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object.

RESOLUTIONS OF CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE.

Mr. BURCH. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present certain joint resolutions of the Legislature of California, and to move that they be referred to appropriate committees, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection; and the resolutions were received, ordered to be printed, and referred as indicated below:

Joint resolutions of the California Legislature, relative to mails between Orville and Quincy, in the State of California—to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Joint resolutions of the California Legislature, asking a two-thirds vote of the Senate, and of four batteries of light and four of heavy artillery—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Joint resolutions of the California Legislature, asking a further extension of the preemption laws to the State of California—to the Committee on Public Lands.

Joint resolutions of the California Legislature, asking the right of way and other aid in the construction of the Placerville, Humboldt, and Salt Lake line of telegraph—referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PROTECTION OF FEMALE EMIGRANTS.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. A House bill is upon the Speaker's table, which was returned by the Senate, and from the importance of its provisions, it ought at once to be attended to. It will take but a moment. It is House bill No. 19, and is in reference to the protection of female emigrant passengers. There is but one amendment proposed to it by the Senate, and that is in regard to the corroboration of the evidence of the female. It is in fact nothing more than the reduction to language of a legal principle. If the amendment should be read from the desk, I am sure the House would pass it at once, and thus dispose of the bill.

No objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and read by its title, as follows:

An act (H. R. No. 19) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels," approved March 3, 1855, for the better protection of female passengers, and for other purposes.

The amendment of the Senate was reported, as follows:

After the word "act," in the last section, insert the words "on the testimony of the female seduced, uncorroborated by other evidence, nor unless the same shall be found within one year after the arrival of the ship or vessel at the port for which she was destined when the offense was committed."

That no conviction shall be had under the provisions of this act on the testimony of the female seduced, uncorroborated by other evidence, nor unless the same shall be found within one year after the arrival of the ship or vessel at the port for which she was destined when the offense was committed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN SUPERINTENDENCY.

Mr. STOUT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide two additional superintendencies of Indian affairs for the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ROGUE RIVER INDIANS.

Mr. STOUT, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill to provide for the payment of the award of commissioners appointed under the third article of the treaty of September 10, 1853, with the Rogue river Indians, in the Territory of Washington; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to introduce a bill, merely for reference.

Mr. PETTIT. I object.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the gentleman will not object. It is a local bill.

Mr. McKNIGHT. We have made numerous efforts to introduce local bills, and gentlemen on the other side are objecting.

And then, on motion of Mr. ELY, (at five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 23, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GRILEY.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CALIFORNIA OVERLAND MAILS.

Mr. GWIN. I ask leave to lay on the table, and have printed, an amendment that I propose, in the way of a substitute, to the bill reported by me under instructions of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a few days ago, for the purpose of establishing overland mails to California. I move that it be printed, as I intend to call up the bill to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the bill No. 259. I do this because I have sole charge of the bill, and I doubt very much whether any Senator of my committee has given this bill sufficient attention to be able to afford the Senate information enough about it that it may be passed here in time to pass the other House. I am very anxious to leave the city, and I am only detained here from my sense of duty in regard to this bill, which is of the very highest importance. It is a bill to increase and regulate the pay of the Navy. I am satisfied, if I introduce the bill, we can pass it this morning. All the amounts have been fixed in round sums, as required by the resolution of the Senate. It shows on the face of it what the pay of each grade is proposed to be; and I doubt very much whether the bill will meet with any opposition. I think the Senate may now take up the bill and consider it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senate will not take up that bill this morning. It has been reported but a very short time ago, a day or two since; and I never obtained possession of it, or knew its contents until reported, until yesterday. I obtained the bill yesterday, and have examined it in part. Instead of its being without objection, I may say to the honorable Senator from Florida that I think there are very serious objections to the bill. I shall take exception to it; and I think I shall draw up a substitute for it, which I shall move as an amendment. I have had no opportunity to do so yet; but I am at work on it, and shall do it as soon as I can; and I shall be prepared by the beginning of the next week. The bill is not satisfactory to me, in its present shape, it is anything but satisfactory to me.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I submit the motion to the Senate. I regret to hear the Senator say that the bill is unsatisfactory to him in its present shape. The bill is more satisfactory to me than any other bill I have given it any serious attention—than in any shape it has been in yet; and I think it will be so to the Senate. I deem it my duty to submit the motion. If, however, it shall be the general sense of the Senate that they have not had an opportunity of looking at the bill, they can vote down my motion. It puts in dollars and cents, with very slight variations, the pay proposed in the bill that was reported week before last.

Mr. CAMERON. I believe it is usual to allow the bill to rest a few days.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must put the motion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask that the question be put.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I hope the Senator from Florida will not press his motion. I will go with him for his bill so far as I am at present advised; but we are notified on the other side that there will be amendments offered, and it will lead to debate. We have had several Fridays taken away from private business, and I think this day ought to be devoted to it. We may take up the bill on Monday, thus giving the Senator from Maine time to examine the subject, and to prepare a substitute, if he means to offer one. I will aid the Senator from Florida, with pleasure, to pass the bill on a proper occasion, but I really think to-day ought not to be taken for it.

Mr. CAMERON. I am disposed to go with the Senator from Florida, but I think he will not benefit his bill by pressing it now, so as to exclude the morning business.

Mr. MALLORY. It was only from the urgency of the case that I made this proposition. If I can get the bill taken up in the fore part of next week, I will waive my motion now. It was in order that the bill should take precedence of vote bills that I made this motion. I think it far more important than any private bill on the Calendar; much more important to the country than any private bill; but if it can be understood that in the early part of the week—say Monday—I can get up this bill and have a vote on it, I shall waive the motion now, if the Senator from Maine will give any sort of assurance that he will take measures to have it taken up then.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly I shall have all the work I propose to do done to-morrow morning, if necessary, however, to print the substitute.

Mr. MALLORY. With the earnest hope, then, that the bill may be taken up and considered on Monday—and I shall have very little hope of its passage this session unless it be taken in the early part of next week—I shall waive the motion for the present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented two petitions of citizens of Schuykill county, Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the tariff; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Gallia county, Ohio, praying a modification of the tariff; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PUGH presented a petition of Thomas B. Davis and others, citizens of Vinton county, Ohio, praying the establishment of a post route from McArthur, in Vinton county, to Vinton Station, on the Marietta and Cincinnati railroad, which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

He also presented the petition of John Gander and others, citizens of Putnam county, Ohio, praying the establishment of a post route from Faughtonsville, in Putnam county, to Pleasanton, on the Dayton and Michigan railroad; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

He also presented the petition of William German and others, citizens of Ohio, praying that bounty lands may be granted to the heirs of militiamen and volunteers in the war of 1812 and in the Indian wars; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying the enactment of a uniform bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Sylvester Gray, a man of color, praying that a patent may be issued to him for land settled and improved by him under the provisions of an act which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LATHAM presented a resolution of the Legislature of California in favor of the establishment of a daily mail from Orville to Quincy, from June to November, and semi-weekly for the remainder of the year; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN presented the petition of the president and directors of the Ship Island Railroad Company, praying a grant of aid to aid in the construction of that road; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KENNEDY presented a memorial of a committee appointed at a meeting of the Association of the Defenders of Baltimore in 1813, praying the enactment of a law granting pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1813, and to the widows of those deceased; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DURKEE presented a petition of James Watson Webb and others, citizens of New York, praying Congress to pass a law to prevent all further traffic in, and monopoly of, the public lands of the United States, and that they be laid out in farms or lots for the free and exclusive use of actual settlers; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. HARLAN presented the petition of J. W. Roan and Ann Mathieson, praying the right to purchase the lands settled by James H. Matlock and Robert Mathieson, who were murdered by the Indians at Spirit Lake, in Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARLAN presented a petition of Martin Bumgardner and others, citizens of Iowa, praying the establishment of a post route from Forest City, via Bristol, to Russell, on the State line in Hartland, via Steven's Corners, to Ottumwa, in the State of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. LANE presented papers in relation to the claim of John Carter, who lost an arm by accident while in the military service of the United States, for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WADE presented a petition of citizens of Lawrence county, Ohio, praying a modification of the tariff; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PAFERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of John Gordon, a messenger in the Post Office Department, praying additional compensation for services performed on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PUGH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 365) amendatory of the act entitled "An act to establish a territorial government for Utah," approved September 9, 1850; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. RIGLER. I have charge of a very important public bill—a bill amending the patent laws—which ought to be considered.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope the Senator will wait until we get through with the reports.

Mr. RIGLER. I had expected to have this bill considered this morning; but I have discovered, on the motion of the Senator from Florida being made, an indisposition to take up any bill to interfere with the private bills to-day. I therefore content myself with asking the Senate to take up this bill, and make it the special order for one o'clock on Wednesday next. It is a very important measure which ought not to be neglected. I do not think it will take much time. I submit that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

JAPANESE MISSION.

Mr. MASON. Yesterday, before I came into the Senate, a communication was presented from the President, sending certain documents in response to a resolution of the Senate, relating to a mission from Japan, and there was an order made that they should be printed and laid on the table. I have that they be taken up and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of George O. Foote, praying the right to locate certain land scrip, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of S. Eastman, of the United States Army, praying a restoration of the copyright of his pictures, used in illustrating the Government work on the history of the Indians, and signed by him, was accompanied by a bill (S. No. 308) for the relief of Seth Eastman. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Charles J. Swett, praying compensation as purser, during the time he acted as such on board the San Jacinto, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 309) for the relief of Charles J. Swett. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

HOUHAS LAND GRANT.

Mr. TOOMBS, from the select committee to whom were referred a memorial of settlers on the Houmas lands in Louisiana, praying indemnity for losses sustained by them in consequence of the passage of the act of June 2, 1858, and for the investigation of certain abuses connected therewith; a memorial of residents and owners of lands in the parishes of Ascension and Iberville, in the State of Louisiana, praying the repeal of the "Act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Louisiana, and for other purposes," approved June 2, 1858; and a petition of owners of land under the "Houmas grant" protesting against the repeal of the second section of the act of June 2, 1858, and praying for the repeal of the joint resolution of March, 1859, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 307) to repeal the second section and other portions of an act passed the 2d day of June, 1858, entitled "An act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes," and also to provide for the final settlement of certain private land claims in the State of Louisiana. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move that the report be printed.

Mr. PUGH. Before the motion to print is put, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that there was a report made by Mr. Clifford, while he was Attorney General, containing a number of original documents of which the committee had but a single copy. It is a long time since those documents were printed. I think those documents should be printed as an appendix to the report of the committee, and I move that the report of the Attorney General made in 1845, and the documents contained in it, and the decision of Judge Campbell be printed as an appendix to this report.

Mr. TOOMBS. I accept that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It occurs to the Chair that that motion would have to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PUGH. I have no objection to its going there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia, to print the report.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGIA AND FLORIDA BOUNDARY.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the expediency of quieting the titles of such purchasers of lands from the United States as may fall within the State of Georgia, under the adjustment of boundary between the two States, and also of grantees under the State of Georgia, where lands may fall in Florida, reported a bill (S. No. 306) to settle the titles to lands purchased by the United States in the State of Georgia and Florida; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is a matter about which there is no question whatever; and I ask, as it will cause no debate, that the bill be put on its passage. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which I send to the Chair, may be read.

There being no objection, the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior, whenever the dividing line between the State of Georgia and Florida shall have been finally surveyed, approved, ratified, and confirmed as the boundary between those States, to adjudicate, upon principles of equity and justice, all claims, in Florida, which may fall within the limits of lands which may fall within the State of Florida; and all claims which may be approved by him are by this bill ratified and confirmed; but the State of Georgia is free to ratify and confirm all sales and grants made by the United States of lands in Florida, which may fall within the limits of the State of Georgia, under the final adjustment of the boundary line.

The Secretary read the following letter from the Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

WASHINGTON, February 28, 1860.
SIR: I have the honor to receive the resolution of the United States Senate of the 13th ultimo, directing the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into the expediency of quieting the titles of such purchasers of land which lie near the line of boundary between the States of Georgia and Florida, and to report by bill or otherwise.

The enclosed is a letter of this Department, addressed, under date of the 14th ultimo, to Hon. R. TOWNS, and of a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the 17th ultimo, together with the documents it said report mentioned, will furnish to you all the information upon the subject that is deemed important.

I entertain the opinion that any legislation by Congress, to amend the order proposed, will be necessary and proper; and I therefore approve the draft of a bill which accompanies the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

J. J. SPENCER, Secretary.

Hon. R. W. JOHNSON, Chairman Committee Public Lands, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN DEFECTIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LATHAM. I offer the following resolution, which I think should be considered at once. It is a mere resolution of inquiry:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish the Senate with a report of the superintendent of Indian Affairs, or any other public officer, in California, as to depredations committed by Indians in Santa county in 1859.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MASON. I do not object to the resolution, provided the Senator will strike out the word "requested" and put in "directed." That is the usual phrase.

Mr. LATHAM. I am perfectly willing to agree to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That change will be made by unanimous consent.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

CESSION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting to the States, respectively, all the public lands within their limits which have remained, or shall hereafter remain, unsold for four years after the price has been graduated to the lowest standard.

LIGHTS AND BEACONS ON LAKE SUPERIOR.

Mr. BINGHAM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill making appropriations for the survey of Sturgeon's Rock, Lake Superior, with a view to ascertaining whether a light or beacon is best adapted to guide vessels clear of the danger from that dangerous reef; also, into the expediency of establishing ranges of lights and beacons to mark the Copper harbor, Michigan; and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

PEAY & AYLIFE.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. If there be no further petitions and reports, I ask the Senate to take up the bill reported by the Committee on the House of Representatives, and is now on the table of the Senate. It is a small private bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 328) for the relief of Peay & Aylife. It concerns the Eastern States, and to adjust the accounts of Peay & Aylife, late contractors on mail route 7503, in Arkansas; and if it appears from evidence produced by them, or on the files of the Department, that they, in consequence of the weight of the mails, were compelled, before the 1st of July, 1854, and the 15th of June, 1857, to perform extra services not contemplated in or covered by their contract, then to cause their accounts for such extra service to be audited and paid at a fair rate of compensation.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Has this bill been reported by the Committee on the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the bill was read twice, and laid on the table.

Mr. HALE. I hope it will be committed. I move that it be committed to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. It was reported by a committee of the House of Representatives, and passed that body without debate, on the merits of the question; there being no difference of opinion, except as to the amendments which were adopted in the House, and which make the bill unexceptionable. It was reported by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PUGH], from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the Senate, on the 3d of March last, and has, since, received the assent of the committees of both Houses, and has now passed the other House without any question as to its merits. The whole discussion, which I have now before me in the Globe, arose upon amendments to the bill in the House of Representatives to place it in a perfect form. I hope, however, inasmuch as there is no objection in referring it back to the same committee that once reported it, it may be allowed to pass.

Mr. HALE. My reason for making the motion is this: there are a great number of claims of this character before the committee now, and there has been a communication addressed by the chairman of the committee to the Postmaster General on this class of claims, and an answer has been received from the Postmaster General. Besides, I notice a plurality of the bill similar to one that was in a bill passed a year ago, under which very large sums were taken out of the Treasury, limiting the discretion of the Postmaster General, because he is directed to settle according to certain evidence on file in the Department. I think it had better to refer it to the committee.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Private Calendar in its regular order.

Mr. GREEN. I offered a resolution the other day which was objected to, and now lies on the table. I move to take it up. My object is to refer it to the committee.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has moved to proceed to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. GREEN. The morning hour has not yet expired, and I think he will postpone that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. What does the Senator from Missouri desire? I did not hear him.

Mr. GREEN. To take up the resolution on the subject of adjournment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I think that resolution will lead to debate. I prefer referring to my motion to take up the Private Calendar.

Mr. GREEN. The morning hour has not expired, and I think it rather unfair to consume the morning hour by the regular orders. I think we ought to have the morning hour for incidental questions. I move to take up that resolution.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The other motion is before the Senate, unless the Senator from Louisiana withdraws it. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to—yes twenty; noes not counted.

GEORGE FISHER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. No. 8) relating to the claim of George Fisher, late of Florida, deceased, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR. Friday last, to add to the end of the resolution:

And that not exceeding the sum of $5,000 shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SIMMONS. The amendment would defeat the whole purpose of the joint resolution. The amount already allowed exceeds that sum, and it is to be credited to these parties. It has not been drawn. The object is simply to correct a misapprehension of the Secretary of War. It seems that a joint resolution passed Congress, directing the Secretary of War to investigate and receive testimony that was rejected for want of authentication. This resolution merely provides that that testimony shall be received, it having been since authenticated by the Governor of Alabama. In the account some portions originally allowed were struck out by this title to be held in Mississippi. I understood, from the tenor of the report, that this missionary society has fulfilled all the functions of its mission, as far as this site is concerned, the Indians having been sent away. I have objected to the land being sold for the benefit of the society; but I should be against giving them a title to hold it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will say to the Senator that I had not the report before me when I was up before; but the facts are now recalled entirely to my recollection. This missionary society, with the sanction of the Secretary of War, entered upon a small piece of ground of ninety-two acres, and established upon it a firm and a school, a church, and other buildings, for the teaching and education of the Indians. They continued in successful operation there, having expended $9,000 in these buildings, until the Indians were removed. They now desire to follow the Indians into the Indian country, and continue their charitable mission. For that purpose, they desire to get back the value of the buildings they have put on the land; but they cannot sell the buildings separately. There are only ninety-two acres of the land. They want a title to it, in order that they shall sell the land and buildings together. There is no danger whatever that they will remain upon the land.

Mr. MASON. If the Senator will be security that they will not stay there, I shall cease any opposition.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I cannot be security for that. I cannot see any object they would have in remaining there. They have abandoned the mission; they have gone West with the Indians; and now want to sell the land and the buildings. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MASON. I think it would be safer to guard the bill so as to take care that the land shall be sold. I will not interpose any objection to the bill being passed; but I think that it be laid on the table until I can suggest the form of amendment that the title be given to them for the purpose of selling.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CHENEY in the chair.) The Chair does not understand the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MASON. I move that a proviso be put into the bill, that they shall have authority to enter the land, provided their title shall cease unless they sell it within five years.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be in order.

Mr. MASON. It is to add:

Provided, That the title to the land shall revert to the United States, unless the same shall be sold and conveyed by the said society within five years after the passage of this act.

The amendment was rejected.

DE BONNE AND DE REPENTINY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 92) authorizing the courts to adjudicate the claim of the legal representatives of the Sieur de Bonne and of the Chevalier de Repentiny to certain land at the Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan. It proposes to give the said legal representatives of the Sieur de Bonne and of the Chevalier de Repentiny to present their petition to the United States district court for the district of Michigan, setting forth the nature of their claim to certain land at the Sault Ste. Marie, in Michigan, under an alleged grant, in 1750, from the Governor and Lieutenant General, and from the Intendant General of New France, now Canada, with evidence in support of their claim, stating the names, as near as may be, of all persons claiming adversely, and praying that the validity of the title may be inquired into and decided under the laws of nations, the laws, usages, and customs of the country from which the same was derived, and the treaties and laws of the United States; and the district court is to examine the same, and, in adjudicating the question of the validity of the title, to apply the laws of the United States, to be governed by the laws of nations and of the country from which the title was derived, and also by the principles, so far as they are applicable, which are recognized in the act of Congress approved May 26, 1824, "enabling the claimants to the validity of the title of against the Masonry and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of the same;" and the district attorney is to proceed, in defense of the interests of the United States, in all things as

The Secretary read the following report made by Mr. BENJAMIN on the 56th of January:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, in whom was referred the memorial of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and also petition of the said society, and twenty-four others, praying for the confirmation to the above-named society of its title to a certain tract of land in the State of Wisconsin, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to make the following report:

That in the year 1826, as petitioners state, the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, by permission of the Secretary of War, entered upon lot No. 18, situated on the Fox river, near Green Bay, in the State of Wisconsin, and established there a mission and school among the Menomonee and other Indians in that vicinity. The memorial of the society alleges that the mission continued in successful operation until the removal of the Indians to the west of the Mississippi, and that upwards of nine thousand dollars have been disbursed for improvements made by it on said land. The society, in order to indemnify itself as far as possible, as well as to carry on missions elsewhere, has petitioned Congress to pass an act which it is to enter said land on the payment of the usual price demanded of the Government.

Your committee can see no objections to the prayer of the petitioners being granted, and a bill is accordingly reported, which is recommended, authorizing said society to enter, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, the tract certified by it, and known as the Mission Farm, and containing nine hundred and thirty acres of land.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I have always been opposed to granting land to religious institutions or corporations for the purpose of letting them hold it and retain it, unless it be actually necessary for their proper purposes, and I should not have been so ready to grant it, had I not, as I understood, from the tenor of the report, that this missionary society has fulfilled all the functions of its mission, as far as this site is concerned, the Indians having been sent away. I have ob-required and directed by the act of May 26, 1824. Suit is, however, to be instituted by the claimants within two years from the passage of the act, and an appeal may be taken, either by the claimants or the United States, to the Supreme Court within one year from the date of the rendition of the decree of the district court.

In case of a final decision against the validity of the claim, or of the failure of claimants to prosecute it within the period specified, it is to be held forever barred, both in law and equity, but in case of a final decree in favor of the validity of the grant, it is not to be construed to affect, or in any way impair, any adverse sales, claims, or other rights which have been recognized by the United States within the limits of the claim, or which, under any law of the United States, may have heretofore been brought to the notice of the land commissioners or of the land officers in Michigan, or any of the land granted to the State of Michigan, or occupied by it, for the Sault Ste. Marie canal, its tow-path and appurtenances; but for the area of any such adverse claims the legal representatives of the United States are to receive from the Commissioner of the General Land Office warrants authorizing them or their assigns to enter any other lands belonging to the United States, and subject to entry at private sale at $1.25 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THESSA DARDENNE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, next proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 31) for the relief of Theresa Dardenne, widow of Abraham Dardenne, deceased, and their children. It proposes to authorize Theresa, widow of Abraham Dardenne, to enter, in legal subdivisions, at any land office in Arkansas, free of cost, the quantity of sixty hundred and forty acres of any unappropriated land belonging to the United States subject to pre-emption, entry, for sale and benefit equally of herself and her children, by her husband Abraham, as an indemnification for losses sustained by them on account of an erroneous sale of land made to Dardenne by the land officers at Little Rock, on the 20th day of January, 1836, as per certificate of the land officers Nos. 1132 and 1133; and the acceptance of six hundred and forty acres of land, free of cost, by Theresa Dardenne, it to be deemed and held to be a full release to the United States of all claim on her part, and that of the other heirs of Abraham Dardenne, deceased, growing out of this erroneous entry of lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSS WILKINS AND OTHERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 66) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior, Ross Wilkins, James Withersell, and Solomon Sibley. It is intended as a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Ross Wilkins, judge of the district court for the State of Michigan, and to the legal representatives of James Withersell and Solomon Sibley, late judges of the same court, such amount as may be due them for services performed in the capacity of a land board, at the same rates as were allowed to William Woodbridge and their associates on the same land board.

BENJAMIN. There is an adverse report from the Judiciary Committee on that bill. I move that we concur in the adverse report.

MR. CHANDLER. I hope not. That is the precise bill we passed at the last Congress, and it has passed the Senate several times before. It is essentially a just bill, and I hope in my hand a report made by Mr. Williams, at the last session of the Thirty-Third Congress, showing that this precise compensation has been paid in every Territory that has been organized, where similar duties have been imposed. I do not wish to go into a discussion of the question, but I believe that this report shows some twenty or thirty cases where the same compensation has been paid, and this is the last of the class. The other judges who acted in the same capacity in the Territory of Michigan have received this compensation. The judges of the other Territories have received the same, and it is but a simple act of justice that these, the last of the class, should receive the same compensation that all the other judges of all the other Territories have received heretofore. I hope the bill will be passed in opposition to the adverse report. It is the first time this claim has ever been reported in this manner, and I believe several reports in its favor. I hope the bill will pass.

MR. PUGH. This question has been before the Committee on the Judiciary at various times for the last four years. It was also very fully discussed in the Senate about four years ago, upon a proposition to make certain additional allowances to the judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the State of California, on account of alleged extraordinary services in the decision of land grants. The Senate, after that discussion, rejected the proposition upon the ground that it was a violation of the Constitution of the United States, because the salaries of the judges were required to be fixed by law, and it was not intended to be within the discretion of the legislative body to increase or to diminish their compensation. If we go on, for instance, and give to the judges of the district or of the circuit court of the United States, either in the States or in the Territories, an additional sum of money for a particular class of judicial services, and then refuse it to another judge, we really draw within ourselves the system of double salaries in the payment of judges; we destroy the independence of the judiciary. That, I say, was the opinion of the Senate in the case of the California judges, after a very elaborate debate four years ago; it was the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Now, when this particular case came up before the committee it was considered, and the committee were unanimously of opinion that the claim ought to be rejected; and they instructed the Senators from Kentucky [Mr. Powell] to make an adverse report, which, in my judgment, states the sound, safe principle derived from the Constitution; and I certainly shall oppose any attempt to pay any judge an additional compensation for judicial services. I am willing, if his salary is increased, to raise it, but I will not vote for these claims, and I think the question important enough for the Senate now to set upon this case as a precedent. It may be, that in former times, without proper consideration, Congress has granted to one or another judge a gratuity. On the other hand, Congress may raise it in its general course of action during the last three or four years. In my judgment, it ought never to have been granted in any case.

MR. CHANDLER. This is clearly outside of the Senator's support of the case. MR. CRITTENDEN. Will the Senator allow me for a single moment? I wish to know how the case of Mr. Daimes has been passed over. I have been watching for it all the morning.

MR. CLARK. That is the next case. We have not yet gotten to it.

MR. CRITTENDEN. According to my count, it is above half a dozen that have been passed.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CHANDLER.) It is the next on the Calendar after this case; it has not yet been reached.

MR. CHANDLER. In this case, an extra allowance of labor was imposed on the judges. They were constituted a land board in addition to their judicial duties. Wherever and whenever these additional duties have been devolved on the judges of a territorial government, in every single instance the precise compensation which is here asked has been awarded to the judges for that duty.

MR. PUGH. In every case?

MR. CHANDLER. In every instance.

MR. PUGH. The Senator is mistaken.

MR. CHANDLER. Here is a report showing it in Louisiana Territory, Missouri Territory, and in Louisiana Territory.

BENJAMIN. Will the Senator allow me a word of explanation?

MR. CHANDLER. Certainly.

BENJAMIN. The Senator is totally mistaken in these cases, where the law which imposed the duties on the judge fixed an additional salary for those duties.

MR. CHANDLER. Precisely.

BENJAMIN. In this case the law imposed the duties and allowed no additional salary. MR. CHANDLER. Precisely; and now as a simple act of justice, they come and ask the same compensation that you have paid to every other judge of your territorial courts for similar services.

MR. BENJAMIN. If the Senator cannot see the difference between passing a law requiring judges to do a particular duty, and providing payment for that duty, and a law requiring a judge to do duty without giving payment, I cannot make him understand it.

MR. CHANDLER. You have, in every other case where you have imposed these duties, allowed additional salary for their performance. In this case, you have paid three of the judges of the Territory of Michigan for these additional duties; and now, when these other three gentlemen come and ask simple justice—just what you have paid the judges of every territorial court, in Missouri, Louisiana, Indiana, and every other Territory—you object that it is conferring an additional salary on your judges. It is no such thing; it is paying for extra services. But I do not wish to enter into the discussion. I have here a report made, as I said before, by Mr. Williams, at the last session of the Thirty-Third Congress, going fully into the merits of the case, and citing twenty instances where this extra compensation has been allowed. I simply ask for a vote. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate.

MR. LANE. I ask that the report be read. MR. CHANDLER. I will be glad to read that other report be read at the same time.

MR. BENJAMIN. Let that report be read first; we had that before us when we made this.

MR. MALLORY and others. Read the adverse report first.

The Secretary read the following report made by Mr. POWELL on the 26th of January:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill to authorize and direct the settlement of the accounts of Ross Wilkins, James Withersell, and Solomon Sibley, report:

That by the act of Congress of the 21st April, 1826, "we provide that the judges of the district courts of the Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes," the duty and responsibility of its execution devolved on George Moore, then and now acting judge of Michigan, to whom a further specific duty was assigned by the act of the 26th May, 1830.

James Withersell, and Sibley were judges of the said Territory of Michigan, and the said Wilkins and the legal representatives of Withersell and Sibley, as judges of the said Territory, were appointed and confirmed in the capacity of a land board, in pursuance of the acts of Congress aforesaid.

That the judges are fixed by law. They accept their positions with a full knowledge of the compensation they are to receive. If additional duties are imposed upon them, no extra salary is allowed by law. They discharge the duties, knowing at the time the compensation they are to receive. In no event should a judge be allowed a greater compensation than that fixed by law. The assumption of a different policy would be contrary to the genius of the Constitution and destructive to the independence of the judiciary.

It would be a severe blow to the independence of the judges to make them dependent upon the coordinate departments of the Government for their pay for services rendered. Had it been the intention of Congress that the judges were to make such a demand, it would have been provided in their salaries for the services to be rendered as a land board, provision for the same would have been made by law in the act of Congress which authorized the services. As it is now stated, the committee are of the opinion that the bill should not pass.

MR. CHANDLER. I now ask that the former report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. Williams, of New Hampshire, at the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of James Withersell, late judge of the Territory of Michigan, praying compensation for the services of her legal representatives, James Withersell and Solomon Sibley, late judges of the said Territory, and of the said Withersell in Detroit, have had the same under consideration, and report:

That James Withersell and George Moore were appointed, in the year 1826, one of the judges of the supreme court of the Territory of Michigan, and continued to sit that office until the admission of Michigan into the Union, in 1836. During that period, up to September 24, 1836, as appears from the statement of A. S. Kellogg, the last secretary of the said Territory, "Judge Withersell, and his associates, in the duties of said 'board,' and was a very active and efficient member thereof. The statement of said Kellogg is hereto annexed."

At the last session of Congress the Senate passed a bill to compensate Judges Woodbridge and Chipman, who were members of the said board, at the rate of $500 per annum. The committee are of opinion that this sum is not more than a just remuneration for the services rendered by them, and they therefore report a bill allowing Judge Moore the same rate of compensation, and recommending the passage of the bill.

The principles and reasons governing the case are fully stated in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, made in the parallel case of Judges Woodbridge and Chip-that duty, and they have performed the duty. It was a part of their judicial duty. It was clearly within the power of Congress to impose it upon them, just as much as it was within the power of Congress to abolish the court of concurrent jurisdiction and to throw the whole of the duty upon one judge, and to do so without augmenting his salary. If Congress thought proper to do so, and I cannot for myself see the propriety of insinuating any system by which judges, whenever they are ordered by Congress to exercise an additional jurisdiction to that which they have previously exercised, shall come here and ask for extra pay.

The danger of reducing the judiciary to a subservience on the coordinate departments of the Government is so obvious that I need not dwell upon that consideration at all. It suggests itself at once to the mind of every gentleman. Hereafter, if precedents of this kind are established, each judge will feel an interest in so deciding as to get the favor of the coordinate departments of the Government. If his decisions be against the Government, he will fear that his claim for extra services will not be allowed; and he will be in the favor of the Government, he indulges the hope that something extra will be allowed him in addition to the salary allowed by law. The system is a dangerous one; it is an improper one. I think it not altogether creditable to the judges themselves to appear before Congress and ask for extra services performed in the sphere of their judicial duties, to ask us for additional pay. A demand for an increase of salary at the time the additional duties were imposed would have been fair, would have been legitimate. I, for one, if present, would have been willing to vote for it; but they having failed to make any suggestion to Congress that their pay was insufficient, and having failed to ask an increase of salary on the ground that these additional duties were imposed, and having performed them for the purpose of the reward provided by law, I think it would be a dangerous precedent now to increase that salary for past services.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hold in my hand a letter from General Cass, who was at that time Governor of Michigan, and in which he reads, "I will show that these services were extra-judicial, and were so regarded at the time."

The Secretary read it, as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 3, 1859.
DEAR SIR: I have received your letter of the 21st inst. within which you desire an answer to me sufficient to enable me to give you a detailed statement of the circumstances connected with the claim for extra services for the services rendered by Solomon Riley, James Withersell, and Ross Wilkins, while judges of the Territory of Michigan, performing the duties of commissioners to adjust the titles to lots in the town of Detroit, under an act of Congress. Among the records of the Senate or of the House of Representatives will be found various certificates and statements explanatory of this matter, which were prepared some years ago, and submitted upon the presentation of the claims of Messrs. Woodbridge, Chipman, and Merrill for similar services. During most of the time when these services were performed I was Governor of the Territory of Michigan, and was associated with the judges in the execution of these duties, and among the papers referred to my statement must be filed. My case was different from that of the judges, being an executive, and judicial services, and I am entitled to no additional compensation. The foundation of these claims is hereby shewn. The town of Detroit was utterly destroyed by fire in the year 1805, and an act of Congress was passed, constituting the Governor and judges of the Territory a board of commissioners to lay out new towns, and to adjust the claims of the owners. This duty was performed, and it was a heavy one, and required some thirty years before it was completed. The judges contradicted that Congress had no right to impose any other than judicial duties upon them, and that the services they rendered were extra-judicial, and that they were not to be paid for. Upon the petition of Messrs. Woodbridge, Chipman, and Merrill, the whole subject was investigated, and an act was passed for their relief, thus recognizing the fact that the judges to extra compensation for these services. I consider the heirs of Messrs. Riley and Withersell, and Judge Wilkins, in this case right, entitled to reasonable compensation for these services.

I am, dear sir, respectfully yours,
W. A. RICE, Secretary of the President. LEWY: CASS.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the friends of the bill if it be shown how many cases those judges decided, what was the amount of duty performed, and how long they were about it; and what is the increase of salary they received?

Mr. CHANDLER. General Cass says in that letter, they were thirty years performing it. They were required to plot out the city of Detroit, dispose of the land, examine titles, &c.—all extra-judicial—and it was a vast labor. They were made a land board, outside of their duties as judge

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to hear the bill for their relief read before I vote on it.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I would prefer that the bill should be put in such a shape that we should know precisely what we pay. I have no information as to what was paid to the predecessors of those judges.

Mr. CHANDLER. Five hundred dollars a year to each judge during his service. I do not know how long they were judges.

Mr. MALLORY. I have listened to the explanation of the Senator from Louisiana, and I do not see that anything he has said would justify me in voting against the bill, though I listened to him with great attention. If I am right, these judges performed precisely the duties which were devolved upon almost any territorial judge as a commissioner in the adjudication of land cases. It was so in my own State while we were in a territorial condition. Our judges all received this extra salary; and, if I mistake not, they were also allowed clerk hire. As the Senator from Louisiana correctly says, the Government was bound to develop the land, and that right is exercised very frequently in the enlargement of their districts, and in the increase of their judicial powers; and their right of compensation is recognized in the frequent increase of their salaries, based entirely on their increased responsibility and increased extra-judicial services of living generally. I do not see with what propriety you can distinguish between these parties. If there is any right to do so, I should like to hear it. That the Government had a right, I will not question, to call on these parties to adjudicate land cases, either as commissioners or judges, and that they might have refused to do it as commissioners, unless payment accompanied the requisition of the duties, may be also admitted as a fact; but if it be so that they did perform duties, and that these are the only exceptions, unless I can see that they should be they should be treated from the ordinary legislation of the country, and why they should be made an exception to the judges in my own State, an exception also to the judges in the same State who performed the same duties, I really cannot say they should not be allowed this compensation.

The argument of the Senator from Louisiana, that this might operate with the judges to incline them in their adjudications toward the party from whom they receive their salary—toward the Government—cannot have any answer. No man who would be appointed by this Government to execute the duties of a judge would ever take that into consideration. Five hundred dollars a year to adjudicate on land claims as a bribe to his judgment? I could not let that idea influence me a moment. I look alone to the fact that these parties have performed the service; that it has been the uniform practice of the Government to pay for it; and we should not refuse payment at this day because it was omitted in the passage of the act developing the duties of the judges under the circumstances. I shall feel constrained to vote for the bill, unless some further reason shall be given against it than has already been given.

Mr. POWELL. The reasons for the adverse report in this case are very fully and yet briefly stated in the report itself, which has been read. Under the circumstances, I shall feel constrained to vote for the bill, unless some further reason shall be given against it than has already been given. Mr. POWELL. The reasons for the adverse report in this case are very fully and yet briefly stated in the report itself, which has been read. Under the circumstances, I shall feel constrained to vote for the bill, unless some further reason shall be given against it than has already been given. The Committee on the Judiciary had before them the reports heretofore made by the committee of the Senate, touching the claim of the judges of the Territory of Michigan to extra compensation for services in land cases. There is, as has been stated by the Senator from Michigan, appended to one of those reports a list of some twenty cases in which the judges had received extra salaries for judges and others for the performance of additional duties; but, as has been remarked by the Senator from Louisiana, upon reference to all those cases, I believe, without a single exception, it will be found that when the additional duty was imposed, the additional salary was not given at the same act, and I think there are no instances in which that was not the case other than perhaps the cases of three of the judges of this court of Michigan—Mr. Woodbridge, Mr. Chipman, and Mr. Merrill. The committee had the matter under consideration; we looked into all these cases. We found that the cases from Michigan were an exception to the rule, and we were unanimously of the opinion that that exception was wrong, and that in no case should a judge be dependent on an increase of department of the Government for a coordinate of his pay for a particular service; and hence we unanimously reported to the Senate, as was stated in the opening of the debate by the Senator from Ohio.

If Senators will examine the list of cases appended to the report that was read at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, I think they will find that the increased salary was indicated in the act assigning additional duty. There is a very great difference between increasing the salary when an additional duty is imposed, and increasing a judge's salary for the performance of services that have already been rendered. If the policy proposed by this bill shall be inaugurated and become the fixed policy of this country, every judge who has additional duties imposed upon him by statute (and I suppose there is not a United States judge in any Territory or State of the Union that is not subject to such an increase in his additional duty) will be calling for the same thing. Frequently by statute, a judge's duties are lessened; generally they are enlarged. It certainly would be a very sad calamity and would strike at the independence of the judges, were they to come here and petition for an increase of salary for departmental services for services they have rendered. It was on that principle that the committee made this adverse report.

I would state, in addition, that there was no proof before the committee that these parties rendered services; but, however, we waited that and chose to rest it upon the principle. I suppose they did render the service. The Senator from Michigan informed me that they had done so. I told him that there was no proof of it; but the committee chose to rest it upon principle, and having been the organ of the committee in making the report, I think it proper to make this very brief statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not propose to debate this question. I submit it to the justice of the Senate. I have no claim to make. It is admitted that the judges of the different territorial courts that have been organized, who have performed similar duties, have received this identical salary. Now, I submit to the justice of the Senate, whether these men who have honestly performed the duties which were assigned to them, shall not receive the same compensation that was paid to every other judge, and there I rest the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. PUGH. I conceive that this is a question vital to the independence of the judiciary, and I ask for a recorded vote of the Senate upon it. I believe it has no precedent, except the case of the other judges of Michigan, and I desire to bring an act in precedence of a large number of claims. There is no district judge of the United States, or judge of any Territory, who cannot show that by some act you have increased the amount of his judicial duties. We passed an act but half an hour ago, to allow a salary to the district judge of the United States for the State of Michigan to settle the title to a large tract of land. Are you to have that judge here in the course of five or six years claiming that that was an extra-judicial duty? When Congress imposed a duty on the judges, it knows what their present duties are; it knows what their present compensation is; it knows what the duties to be performed are; and therefore it decides the question at that time.

If, as the Senator from Louisiana truly said, the judges do not choose to perform the duties, let him resign. In fact, Congress cannot compel any judge to discharge an extra-judicial duty. The question whether it is extra-judicial, is decided at the time, upon the circumstances. I do not know, in the case of these two other judges of Michigan, who applied long ago at some short period after the rendition of the service, what particular circumstance weighed upon the mind of Congress in making that allowance; but, as the Senator from Kentucky said, that is the exception. It is a mistake to say that that is the general rule.

he was in when found at the steps of his own door? The inference is irresistible that the two men whom Ralston saw going into the custom-house about half past eight o'clock at night, were the individuals who robbed the custom-house, and they were let in by this man McAllister, the watchman on the outside.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to make a suggestion? The Senate is hardly competent to sit on such questions of testimony. The Committee on Claims has reported this bill unanimously; and I suggest to him, and to the Senator from New Hampshire, who opposes the bill, as a compromise, to accept an amendment by which we shall authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate the matter, and allow such a portion of the claim as he shall find, on examination, to be properly due. We cannot examine and determine such questions here.

Mr. IVERSON. I readily appreciate the difficulty, because the testimony is spread through a very large mass of papers, covering some fifteen or twenty affidavits, besides a very large correspondence. I will state this, however, to the Senator from Louisiana: that the Secretary of the Treasury is already engaged to do so. He has dispatched an agent to inquire into it. Mr. Guthrie, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as the circumstance occurred; sent an agent of the Department there to investigate all the facts.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That then will not injure the bill for the benefit of the country. But at the same time, if anything further occurs, which the Senator from New Hampshire, or his informant, can suggest to the Secretary of the Treasury, it gives him the opportunity to do so.

Mr. IVERSON. I have no objection to that. This bill does not propose to rest anything on Mr. Hastings. There is that much money charged to him as due to the Government, and the object is to relieve him from paying it. He has not been sued. The former Secretary and the present one are both of them so well satisfied that this is an honest transaction on the part of Mr. Hastings, and that he has been robbed of the money, that they have not sued him on his bond; they have let the case lie until Congress shall relieve him. I am perfectly willing, however, to suspend any further debate, and accept the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. HALE. The honorable Senator from Louisiana put me in a false position—but I suppose he did not mean to do it—in representing me as the prosecutor of this man. I did not mean to occupy any such position.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I did not mean to suggest that, but suggested that the Senator being opposed to the bill, if any further information came to him, he could send it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. I am perfectly willing to do that. I know nothing about this man; but let me, in justification of myself, say a single word to the Senator from Georgia, who I think has a great deal of zeal in this matter, as he has in everything he takes up, even when it appears to defend southern rights on a wrong basis. I saw this case as it was presented to the Senate; and as it was my duty to do, as a Senator, I looked at the report and was satisfied that Mr. Hastings had no case, and I so stated in my place, and it was published in the Globe. I did not know whether Hastings was a Democrat or what he was. That is an argument that the Senator from Georgia has adduced, which I shall neither attempt to controvert or deny. I never saw it breathed before in the Senate. I simply, in the discharge of my duty, as a Senator, uttered an expression of opinion that there was a fraud on the Treasury; and if Mr. Hastings has no worse enemy in the world than I am, I am certain he will go on with great peace and quiet. I have no feeling of hostility to him. All I desire is to do my duty here. I am perfectly willing that the amendment that the Senator from Louisiana suggests shall be adopted.

Mr. CAMERON. With an amendment of a word or two, I will vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana. Let him put in the words, "the money of which he says he was robbed" I will vote for that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Allow me to read the amendment. Mr. CAMERON. I have no objection.

Mr. BENJAMIN. My proposition is to amend the bill, so that it will read thus:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized—

Not authorized and directed—

In adjusting the accounts of John Hastings, as collector of the customs at the port of Pittsburg, to give him credit for such sum as, exceeding $5,000, the amount of public money which he alleges that he was robbed on the 10th of March, A. D. 1864, whilst acting in the aforesaid capacity, against the honesty of John Hastings, it may be shown to have been actually robbed from said Hastings.

That limits the amount, and leaves the further investigation of the case to the Department.

Mr. CAMERON. I am inclined to accede to that amendment. My own impression is singularly favorable to the honesty of John Hastings. I have known him a long while. He has been very unfortunate, for he has been robbed several times of money which did not belong to him. What his policies are now, I do not know. He used to be a Democrat when I belonged to that respected party; but I have very recently got a letter from a valued friend belonging to the Republican party saying that he thinks John Hastings is a wronged man—

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator will allow me to interpose a question. Does he state that Hastings has been previously robbed of money that did not belong to him? There is no evidence of that among the papers.

Mr. CAMERON. No matter. The evidence exists now. I was going on to say further, that for the purpose of benefiting myself fully on this subject, I have had more than one conversation with Mr. Guthrie, who was employed in Mr. Pierce's time as a confidential agent to the Treasury Department, and who is still acting in that capacity. That gentleman was for several years Mayor of the city of Pittsburg. He seemed to understand the subject perfectly, and from him I have had a perfect and circumstantial account of this matter. Among other things, he says that Mr. Hastings was urged to bring suit against the watchmen and great many men, so going to prove to the man Mr. Guthrie, and myself also, that he was afraid to make an investigation of that.

However, I am disposed to vote for the bill, if it be amended as proposed, on this principle. Mr. Hastings is really irresponsible; he has no property, and no money, and no friends to be made responsible for his actions. I am opposed to this whole system of receiving bail by the Government for the faithful performance of duty by its agents. I think that it ought all to be abolished. If I employ a man as my agent, or you, Mr. President, or anybody else, is responsible for his actions, and he should not this Government? I would not hold any man responsible as bail or security for any public agent. On that principle, I would vote for the bill, especially as it has been proposed to be amended by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. HIGLER. Mr. President, I shall oppose the Senate but a very few minutes. I have heard the imputations of the Senator from New Hampshire on an old and cherished friend. I can understand why his mind was prejudiced. I do not agree with him in his opinion of this man. His political biasing whatever, we can all see that communications such as that he received from Mr. Hague, were very well calculated to excite prejudices against the case of Mr. Hastings; but I suggest that Mr. Hague's character does not warrant the Senator from New Hampshire in taking any notice of him whatever. I am convinced that his testimony in that community would not weigh for a moment against those who state the facts.

As regards the merit of this case, I, in the main, do not know. I do not ask the opinion of this man or that man as to Mr. Hastings's condition. I happened to be returning from the difficulties at Erie two days after this occurrence; I think I arrived at Pittsburg two days after the robbery. I saw Mr. Hastings in his bed, and I saw the money which he had in a very bad condition. As for the marks of violence on his person, they were very obvious. He looked then like a man far straggled; and the place of the robbery is a very peculiar one. The custom-house is in the city of Pittsburg. Mr. Hastings lived in the city of Allegheny, more than a mile, I think, from the custom-house. His residence was on a prominence on the bank of the canal. That prominence was reached by a recess cut in the bank with steps, and in front of this recess was a gate. It was inside of that gate, where Mr. Hastings could not be seen from any point, that he was knocked down, and so violently assaulted as almost to destroy his life. The testimony of Dr. McCook, who I know was no political or personal friend of Mr. Hastings, I think ought to be sufficient to settle that point; and I saw him in a condition in which I am satisfied no man of sense would ever agree to place himself placed for any pecuniary consideration.

Then, sir, further, I have known Mr. Hastings from childhood; I have known him intimately; I never knew a dishonest act of his in my life. This I will say, however, and this I think is the worst that can be said, that he was a careless man; he was a man who might be deceived; he was a man who might be misled, and as likely to be ruined as any man in the community, but the last man in the world who would enter into a conspiracy of the kind now suggested.

Then, sir, I know other facts of my own knowledge. Mr. Hastings, in his efforts to arrest these robbers, borrowed money, for which his little bit of property was afterwards sold. The Secretary of the Treasury who was in office at the time, made an investigation, and he found no evidence, and decided that there was nothing in the facts to throw the slightest imputation on Mr. Hastings's character, and he retained him as collector at Pittsburg; and Mr. Hastings was retained by the Secretary of the Treasury, after a full examination of the whole case, and he did not decide to believe that there can be justly the slightest imputation upon Mr. Hastings's character, unless it be that he was a careless kind of man, not very methodical in his business; but I believe him to be strictly honest.

Now, sir, time has run by; Mr. Hastings has retired from that office; his property has been sold by the sheriff; he is living in a small town, struggling for a living by a little effort by which he can make the means of subsistence; and where is the $5,000? Mr. Hastings has no money, and no connection with this matter on the face of the earth. I have no hesitation in saying; and the honorable Senator from New Hampshire does me but justice when he says that I believe this to be a fair case; that I believe Mr. Hastings to have been robbed of money, and that I believe he has lost down his money taken from him, his watch carried off, the key of the custom-house vault taken, and the robbery committed that night, without any agency or knowledge or complicity on his part. That I believe; and because I believe that, I am perfectly willing to accede to this amendment of the Senator from Louisiana; for I would not have Mr. Hastings relieved of a farthing without a full examination of the facts. I would not release his security unless the facts warranted it. I am therefore perfectly willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, and to send this case with all the facts to the accounting department, where they can examine them closely, and decide on them as we cannot here. I hope that that amendment will be agreed to, and that that may settle the matter.

Mr. CAMERON. I cannot consent to let so high a eulogy pass on John Hastings without a word. I knew John Hastings very well. He is one of the last men in the world that I would ever have trusted with a large sum of money. He is a shrewd, watchful man in all his pecuniary and business transactions. He always provided himself unit for the charge of public or private money. I shall vote for this bill with the amendment for the reason, as I said before, that an honest and worthy man should not be held responsible for the actions of a man who is a thief, for whom he may be induced to become the surety. I think that whole system is wrong, and I hope some learned man in the Senate, on the Judiciary Committee, will, before a great while, bring in a bill annulling the whole system of taking security, and on that principle I shall vote, and I send this portion of this money can ever be got from Mr. Hastings. His sureties are men in very moderate circumstances, and if this money be taken from them, it will impoverish them entirely, and make them as destitute as I suppose Hastings is now.

In reply to what my colleague says about his not having the money, and his being poor now, I have only to say that he is the sort of man who always will be poor. He cannot keep money, where it is his own or anybody else's, unless he has changed very much since I saw him last. But I have no disposition to talk on this subject, for I have kind feeling to everybody about him. His father is a worthy and respectable old gentleman, and all his relations and associates are worthy people.

MR. CLINGMAN. I want to ask a question merely for my own information, as I should like to get at the truth, as I am voting on this case. I understood the Senator to say just now that there were other instances in which money that belonged to other people had been stolen from Mr. Hastings. He states that as a matter within his knowledge, and his colleague seems to controvert it. I should like him to specify, or refer to these cases, for I really want to do justice.

MR. CAMERON. It was, perhaps, hardly fair to bring that into this case; but as I am questioned, of course I shall reply. Mr. Hastings did borrow a sum of money for certain purposes from a bank in Lancaster. Unfortunately, that very night he was robbed, and lost his $1,500. I have heard of other cases; but those I do not now recollect. This case, however, I remember perfectly.

MR. CLINGMAN. Were there any suspicious circumstances about it? Is the Senator satisfied that that was a bona fide robbery or not?

MR. CAMERON. About that I have nothing to say. I do not desire to talk about it, but he has been unfortunate; he is a man who cannot take care of money.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized to receive the account of John Hastings, as collector of the customs at the port of Pittsburgh, to give him credit for such a sum, not exceeding $2,500, as the amount of the public money which he alleges that he was robbed, on the 10th day of March, A. D. 1854, while acting in the aforesaid capacity, as the Secretary of the Treasury may see fit to allow, to be paid to him upon proper investigation, as provided in the bill actually reported to said Hastings.

MR. DOOLITTLE. I do not intend to discuss this bill at length, but simply to say that I shall vote against it, and it will make no difference with me whether he was robbed or was not robbed, whether the robbery was a sham robbery, or, to use the language of the gentleman from South Carolina, "a bona fide robbery." The amount involved is small; but it concerns the whole revenue of the Treasury and the keeping safety of the money of the Government in the hands of all the officers of the Government. If we admit that the robbery of the public Treasury from the possession of those who hold it is to excuse them from their responsibility and excuse their surceles, I do not know where this matter will end. I am opposed to the whole system of relieving those who keep the public money, on the pretense that they have been robbed, whether the pretense be true or false. I hold that they should be responsible as insurers to the Government; and that those who become their surceles do become insurers to the Government against robbery and against theft, and that they should not be excused, whether the allegation is a mere pretense or not. I shall, therefore, vote against all such bills.

MR. IVERSON. A single word in reply to the point the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested. As a general rule it is correct. The Government ought not to release any custodian of public money unless he makes out a clear case that there was no collusion by him in the transaction; but Congress has never adhered to the general principle, and in every case looked at the particular circumstances; and if the party has made a clear case, and shown that there was no collusion on his part, and shown that he has been, in the language of the Senator, "bona fide robbed," Congress has always relieved him. Since I have been in the Senate, half a dozen bills have passed of this character. One was passed for the relief of a custodian of public money in Louisiana, but brought in by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SIMMONS] about two years ago. Another was passed under somewhat similar circumstances to this one, for the relief of a paymaster in Santa Fe, New Mexico, who was knocked down in the passage and severely beaten, and the key of his iron chest taken from him, and the iron chest opened, and money abstracted amounting to over twenty thousand dollars, if I remember rightly. Congress relieved him, and Congress always comes to the relief of a party whom it believes was robbed without any fault on his part. If he exercised ordinary diligence, and the money was taken from him without any fault of his, and the case shows the absence of all complicity on his part, Congress relieves him. Such cases are exceptions, I admit; but they have been passed on that ground.

MR. GREEN. I merely wish to make one remark, and that is: when a private claim or any other subject is before the Senate, I really must protest against individual Senators bringing their own personal character and influence to bear for or against it. If they wish to testify in the case, let them go before the committee and do so, but not get up in the Senate and bring their high character to bear for or against the case. I think it very unfair. I know nothing about this bill, but I really must protest against that conduct.

MR. HALE. I have not been obnoxious to that charge myself. I want to call the attention of the Senate, before they vote, to a single fact in the testimony that the honorable Senator from Georgia did not allude to, and then I shall leave the case—forever, I hope. By reference to the testimony of Mr. Taylor, deputy collector of this custom-house, you will find that Taylor left the building from half to three quarters of an hour after the robbery occurred, and he was not with him left Hastings and the watchman locked up in the custom-house—a pretty important fact, it strikes me.

The amendments were agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and on the question, "Shall the bill pass?"

MR. HARLAN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

MR. SIMMONS. I attended to the investigation of this case before the committee; and I doubt if there is any member of the Senate who, if he read the testimony, unless he believed the witnesses perjured themselves, would doubt the propriety of releasing this man. I had some misgivings myself about the matter, but the testimony is full and complete, and no one who will take the pains to read it can doubt that this man was robbed. If you go to the extent suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, and say that when a man is robbed of public money you must still hold him for it, that is an absurd matter; but that this man was robbed, I believe, I have no more doubt than I have that he lived, though I never saw him.

MR. CLARK. I was upon the Committee on Claims last year, when the case came before that committee. I engaged in the consideration of the case. I must confess, with some impressions against it, on account of the letter that had been received by my colleague. I examined that letter; I examined the case upon the evidence that was submitted to the committee, and I came to the conclusion—I think no man could come to any other conclusion fairly—that the evidence before the committee—that the testimony sustains the man's case and makes out the fact that he was robbed. Now, I do not know but that the evidence has been taken ex parte; I do not know that other evidence might be submitted to the committee, or submitted to the Senate by the Treasury, which would put a different phase upon the transaction; but as the evidence stood before the committee, it seems to me but fair that the whole matter should be again submitted to the Senate by the Treasury, and I am sure that under no other examination, if you choose, would the bill will pass in the shape in which it is

MR. HALE. I want to call the attention of the Senate, for one moment, to the testimony of John Taylor, the deputy collector:

"John Taylor, being duly sworn, deposed and said: As deputy surveyor, I left the office a few minutes before six o'clock on Friday evening, the 10th day of March, 1854, in company with Samuel Keller, the clerk employed in the office. I locked up the vault carefully before I left, and left behind me in the office Mr. Hastings, the surveyor, and Coppel, the watchman."

There is where Hastings was—left locked up in this custom-house three quarters of an hour after he swears he had gone home.

MR. BINGHAM. Will you read what Hastings says about that?

MR. HALE. Now, see what Hastings says. Remember, Taylor says he locked the vault and left him there at six o'clock:

"John Hastings, being duly sworn, deposed and said: As surveyor of the port and collector of the custom-house in Pittsburgh, I left the custom-house, on Friday evening, the 10th of March, 1854, about a quarter after five o'clock."

That is what he swears; and three quarters of an hour after he says he left there, Taylor says he went out of the custom-house, and left him there with the watchman. Do not talk to me about that being a robbery.

MR. ANTHONY. This report, I understand, is made unanimously.

MR. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

MR. CLARK. Unanimously this year and last year.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 98, nays 14, as follows:
YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Benjamin, Blyler, Briggs, Bright, Chace, Clark, Clingman, Davis, East, Fessenden, Fish, Ford, Green, Gwin, Hammon, Hendricks, Iversen, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Latham, Mallory, Mason, Nicholson, Polk, Powell, Simmons, and Tilden—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Doollittle, Douglas, Fessenden, Foster, Fremont, Hale, Harts, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilkinson—14.

So the bill was passed.

THE ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

MR. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. GWIN. What is the motion?

Several Senators. To adjourn to Monday.

MR. GWIN. I hope that will not be done.

Several Senators. It has been decided.

MR. GWIN. The question was not decided, was it?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question was decided.

MR. IVERSON. I move to reconsider the question. ("Oh, no.")

MR. GWIN. I gave notice to the Senate three or four days ago—

MR. IVERSON. I believe I have the floor. I tried to get the floor, and addressed the Presiding Officer; but he would not recognize me. I intended to debate the question.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Presiding Officer did not recognize the Senator from Georgia.

MR. IVERSON. I know he did not, and that is what I am complaining of. I came now to reconsider the motion by which the Senate agreed to adjourn over.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator vote in the affirmative?

MR. IVERSON. I did not vote at all, and therefore must be considered as having voted in the affirmative. I believe that is the rule.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn over.

MR. IVERSON. Now, I want to debate that question. I hope the Senate will not adjourn over until Monday. There is so much business before the Senate, that I think it necessary and proper that we should sit every day, and I trust we shall not adjourn over. I do not want to make an argument; I merely call for the yeas and nays.

MR. GWIN. I gave notice several days ago, that there were two very important bills connected with the Pacific coast that I wanted to consider to-morrow. We have special order after special order, occupying the whole attention of the Senate on every other day, and I did not wish to intrude on those cases. One special order—the homestead bill—has gone over to next week; and I wish to repeat that I do not wish to look to-morrow for the consideration of the bills to which I allude. I hope the Senate will reconsider the motion to adjourn over until Monday, and give us to-morrow for that purpose. I believe, if we shall take up this question to-morrow, we can dispose of both the bills.

MR. DOOLITTLE. I desire to ask the Senator from California what bill he refers to—the telegraph bill?

MR. GWIN. The telegraph bill is one, and the overland-mail bill another.

MR. GREEN. I like to accommodate Senators against their own will. Now, I know it is desired by all that we should adjourn over; and this making a show of a desire to sit to-morrow does not amount to much to me. [Laughter.]

MR. GWIN. The Senator is mistaken, as far as I am concerned. I am in earnest, as much as I ever was in my life.

MR. IVERSON. The Senator must not include me in that category, for I am in earnest.

MR. GREEN. Well, I exclude two, and include the remainder. I desire to adjourn over, and when we adjourn over I have more work to do than I do when the Senate is in session, and I am compelled to do it, in the Departments. My constituents send it to me, and I must attend to it on some days; and when the Senate is in session I cannot. I do not both of them shirking from responsibility in doing this thing. We can keep up with the House by adjourning over every Saturday. My whole object is to do my duty, and I have a duty outside the Senate as well as in the Senate.

MR. GWIN. I have this to say to the Senator from Missouri: he is as much interested in the questions I wish to bring up to-morrow as I am. I wish to bring up the bill in regard to establishing a telegraph, that has been reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Telegraphs, and if it is not brought up now and acted on, and sent to the other House very soon, it will be too late to commence the work during the present year, even if the bill becomes a law.

I also wish to bring up the bill in regard to the overland mail, and find that the routes for which there is a great want of legislation, and immediate legislation. If we do not do it now, it will soon be too late to put the service into operation during the present year. On the 30th of June the contract for ocean service runs out; and if we do not intend to continue carrying the mails by the ocean line, we ought to make immediate arrangements to carry them by the overland routes. There are no two questions more pressing at the present time than these; and I think they should be acted on, and sent to the other House by Representatives at as early day. I hope the Senate will reconsider the vote adjourning over, and give us to-morrow for these questions.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am very sorry that the Senator from California has found that there have been combats, so that they all fall on the 23d of March, so many matters that require immediate action or the result is inevitably to be something that is very unfortunate. Now, I must say that whilst the Senator from Missouri is looking around for, and finding, I think, I fear that he understands those who are really with him in his position, apparently occupying another position, I find myself placed in this way: I desire sincerely to adjourn over, and I do it for many reasons. If I had no committee meeting to attend to to-morrow, still I should desire it. It is hardly necessary for us to devote more than five days a week in this body to the public business. We can certainly keep up with the business of the other House without any difficulty, in consequence of the disparity of numbers between the two bodies. Five days will do here, if the whole what it will take six days to do in the other House. It seems to me nothing can be plainer than that, and every one recognizes the fact. Every member of the Senate upon the committees knows that Saturday is one of the very best days to get rid of complex, complicated, difficult, and higgous cases. My own committee is in precisely that condition, and have made an appointment to meet to-morrow to go on with business; and very much has fallen upon them within a few days past. I sincerely desire that we shall adjourn over until Monday, in order that we may have an opportunity to act on the cases that are now before there is any other thing that is pressing us to which the Senator from California asks us to sit to-morrow, other than his special anxiety, fearing that he might not get the Senate to consider his bills, which are of so much importance, on the subject of the Pacific coast. There is nothing to come up on Saturday that demands or can claim a prominence, he thinks he might get up that special thing, which he thinks of great importance, on Saturday, while he fears the Senate do Monday would not recognize it. It is not of more importance on Saturday than on Monday. I hope very much that we shall not consent to reconsider the vote adjourning until Monday.

MR. GWIN. The Senator knows that there is special order after special order on the Calendar.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Repeat them. Take them off.

MR. GWIN. I have been raising the making of them from the beginning of the session.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Let me ask the Senator if he was not one of the foremost men on all occasions to establish the precedent of special orders; and if it falls hardly on him now, ought we to suffer here on account of his own error?

MR. GWIN. The Senator knows, if he has paid any attention to our proceedings here, that I have steadily resisted it from the beginning of a session, and desired the Senate to go on with the Calendar.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. After establishing the other practice for eight years.

MR. GWIN. Well, sir, I have been attempting to move the Calendar called from the beginning of the session, and have resisted every special order. Now, sir, so far as committee business is concerned, I will say there is now more business on the Calendar than we shall ever consider.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. A great deal more.

MR. GWIN. There is undoubtedly a great deal more on the Calendar than will ever be reached; and the Calendar has not been called this session. I hope that this vote will be reconsidered, particularly as the President of the Senate is very quick in putting the motion. I have been watching all day for the purpose of resisting this motion, should it come up. I hope the Senate will at least give us a reconsideration, and see whether or not we shall sit to-morrow.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, whether the vote by which the Senate agreed that when they adjourned to-day it would be until Monday next shall be reconsidered; and upon this question the yeas and nays are demanded.

MR. JOHN CLING, of California. The yeas are taken—yeas—yeas 18, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bligham, Brown, Cameron, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Finch, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hartin, Iverson, and Nichols, Malloy, Nicholson, Pugh, Rice, Simmons, and Wright.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bragg, Bright, Chandler, Clark, Cling, Crampton, Douglas, Fox, Foster, Green, Gurnea, Hale, Hammond, Humphreys, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Kearney, King, Mason, Polk, Powell, Sumner, Tom Eyck, Toulmin, Trumbull, and Wade—29.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

A. W. McPHERSON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 110) for the relief of A. W. McPherson. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to audit and settle the accounts of A. W. McPherson for furnishing the district and circuit courts for the district of California the courts of the United States, in the city of San Francisco, allowing him such prices for the articles furnished and work done as, under all circumstances, shall appear reasonable and just.

MR. FOOT. If there were no objection, the yeas and nays among the friends I call for the reading of the account, so that the Senate may understand what they are called upon to vote. Let the report be read, in the first place.

The Secretary read the following report, made at the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, by Mr. A. W. McPherson, beg leave to report:

That on the 9th June, 1853, the Secretary of the Interior wrote to the United States Attorney of California, by which he was authorized "to procure such other accommodations (for the courts of the United States) upon the most favorable terms as the United States Attorney, and to transmit to the Department a copy of the agreement with the approval of the court of the district of California, &c."

Under these instructions, the marshal entered into a lease and agreement with prisoners for the rent of a building and for the use of the same in the city of San Francisco. The contract of lease was confirmed by the Secretary, but the account for the same was not paid until the 1st of January, 1854, by the judge of the circuit and district courts, and by the district attorney and marshal of the United States, was refused payment on that day, and the same was not paid until the 1st of February, 1854, under the act of February 12, 1853, which enacts that "a marshal shall not incur an expense of more than twenty dollars for any one year's furnishing," &c.

By the act of 30th of September, 1850, the laws of the United States were made of force in California, which was divided into two districts, and, by the act of the 24th of March, 1851, the judge of the northern district was directed to hold two regular sessions of his court in the city of San Francisco.

By the act of 3d of March, 1852, the judge of the circuit court was directed to hold a term of his court on the first Monday of July in each and every year, with power to hold special terms, and, at such place as he might deem proper, of the United States for the northern district of California, and to procure for the purpose, under the direction of said judge.

It appears that under the authority of these acts and the letter of instruction from the Secretary to the marshal, the marshal of the district of California, under the authority of his order, under an agreement to pay for the same, and the accounts for the price of the same are certified to, as above recited, by the proper officers.

These accounts are for the sums of $5,085 95 and $912 12, in the aggregate, $5,998 07. The prices charged for the articles furnished for the use of the courts are very extravagant, and they are, therefore, unwilling to reimburse the payment of the accounts claimed by the United States. Having had the use of said furniture, and are still using the same, they think that the petitioner is entitled to compensation for the reasonable value of the same, and they therefore recommend the adoption of the accompanying bill.

MR. FOOT. Now I ask for the reading of the items of the accounts.

The Secretary read, as follows:

The United States of America, Dr.
In account with A. W. McPherson, for fitting up and furnishing the district and circuit courts of the United States, in the city of San Francisco, State of California, (said rooms being secured for said court by lease dated the 9th of June, 1853, and the same being approved by the Secretary of the Interior by letter dated the 12th of September 17, 1853,) as follows:

In the Court-Room.
Making, putting up, and laying platform, rails, spectators' seats, and judge's, clerk's, and marshal's desks, with three circular tables for the use of counsel, the same being in conformity to the plan approved by the United States circuit judge, marshal, and district attorney; all of which are respectively designated on ground plan No. 1, and on drawings of elevations No. 2, by the letters A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, N, O, P, Q, R, S, T, U, V, W, X, Y, Z, and numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, Examined and found correct, and allowed.
 W. HALL McALLISTER, Judge, &c.
 San Francisco, March 4, 1860.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
 San Francisco, March 12, 1860.
 I hereby certify that the above account, in my opinion, is correct, and should be allowed.
 R. W. INGLES.

The above account is, in my opinion, correct and just.
 W. R. RICHARDSON,
 United States Marshal,
 By W. W. WATSON, Deputy.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE, San Francisco, 1860.

Mr. FOOT. My purpose, Mr. President, is fully answered in having called the attention of the Senate to this account. The reading of the account I regard as a more emphatic and a more eloquent speech against its allowance than I or any other member could make.

Mr. IVERSON. I admit, and so did the committee, and no stout every man that looks at this case, that the furniture with which the courts in San Francisco have been embellished, was of the most extravagant and princely character, such as would really have become more fitting for a prince or a king than a district court, grand jury, and petit jury, of the United States. The articles furnished were of the most extravagant character; the prices are doubtless very high; but the committee, on looking at the case, came to this conclusion, that although it was the most extravagant fitting up of any court-room in the United States, and far beyond what was necessary or proper, the person who furnished the articles was not to blame. What is to be done with him? This man, McPherson, made a contract with the marshal to furnish the room. The money designated what furniture should be put in them. It was no fault of the contractor. He has furnished the goods. Doubtless he had to pay for them himself, and at that time all these articles commanded a high price in San Francisco. Everything at the Senate will remain the same, and the high-pressure system on the Pacific coast at that time.

Mr. GRIMES. What time was it?

Mr. IVERSON. Several years ago. I do not remember the precise time, but when everything was very high in San Francisco, and even if that were not so, this man McPherson has furnished the articles under contract with the marshal, and the Government has had the use of the property; and what is to be done with him? He has no nothing. You reject the case, and say you will not pay this contractor a cent, because the judge and the marshal and the district attorney has bought extravagant furniture!

The committee thought that the best plan was to refer this question to the Secretary of the Interior, and let him examine the case, and allow such amounts for the furniture as, in his judgment, under the circumstances, were admissible and proper; and that is the only way, it seems to me, the case can be managed. You cannot say that this party, who has sold his goods to the Government, and when the Government has used his goods, shall not have a dollar because, forthwith, the goods are of such a high character that the district attorney and this judge ought never to have purchased them. He ought to have something of course. You cannot treat him with the injustice of saying that he shall not have a dollar for his goods, because, forthwith, the parties who purchased them purchased them without authority.

Mr. HROWN. It seems to me that my friend from Georgia mistakes the case in this; he talks about the Government having purchased the goods. The Government did not such thing. The Government officers, without authority of law, have gone forward and contracted extravagant debts upon the credit of the Government, and then come and ask you to foot the bill. If the marshal and district attorney did this, I ask by what authority did these officers undertake to contract goods worth $18,000, to furnish a court-room? If they can do it in San Francisco, why not in every court-room in the country? If they can do it in reference to court-rooms, why not in reference to post offices and everything else; and then shall a man come here and say, "because I furnished these goods to your officers, you are obliged to pay me!" If the officer commits an act outside of his official duty, it is without authority, and no more binding on the Government than the act of the Senator from Georgia, or myself. If these officers had the right to furnish the goods in this princely style, they could only have it from the Government. If the Government gave the authority, the Government is bound. If the Government did not give the authority, then the officers acted on their own responsibility; and the Government should not be bound to pay for the goods so sold the goods to the officers themselves, and to nobody else, for footing any such bill.

I had thought, and still think, we have a law which denies to Government officers the right to contract debts and then coerce the Government to pay the amount of them; and I will not let that rule in reference to officers anywhere, in California, or in Mississippi, or in any other State. These officers, so far as I am instructed by the report or by the speech of the Senator from Georgia, have acted entirely above and independent of the law. They have ordered clerks to be responsible for the footing of this bill. Why, Mr. President, how are these things done? The whole Federal court-house in the State from which I come scarcely cost so much money as the furnishing of this room, and in some of the other States I dare say they cost still less. But whatever the cost was in my State, or in other States, it was incurred by a direct act of Congress authorizing the appropriation to be made. In the act of Government of my own State, the post office, the most important in the State, kept in a wretched, miserable shanty, your Government refusing even to pay rent for a post office, much less to establish one by law. We have appealed, and appealed in vain, to this Government to give us a proper post office there. They refuse; and yet Georgia officials can go and make a contract for a room in debt $18,000 for furnishing a room in San Francisco, and then, under the plea of my friend from Georgia, we are to foot the bill. So far as I am concerned, sir, I will do no such thing. If the marshal and district attorney thought proper to play the lord and to furnish a room in this elegant style, let them be responsible to the tradesman, and the next tradesman who sells his goods to such men will be very apt to look to their responsibility. Foot this bill, and how many more just such bills will you be to foot, Heaven only knows! I will stop the thing, so far as I am concerned, right here, by refusing to pay one dollar of the money.

Mr. LATIMAR. The Senator from Mississippi has fallen into one or two errors in reference to this bill. The bill merely authorizes the subject to the Secretary of the Interior, in order that he may pay what he deems to be just, after an investigation. There was evidence before the committee, so I am informed, that authority was given to the judge of the circuit court, in California, to make contracts for the rent of a room for a court-room; and with Mr. McPherson this contract was made. The Senator must know very well that after the contract was made, and the house was rented, it had to be furnished. The fault was in the judge of the court or in the marshal, in ordering such sumptuous furniture, but this gentleman merely got the furniture that he was instructed to put there. He was not in look to see whether they exceeded their authority or not. If they wanted the court-room furnished, (and authority to them to have it furnished was certainly implied in the lease of the building,) it was not for him to make the judge of the court or the marshal. "You are putting too sumptuous furniture here; the Government will not stand this." The blame, no doubt, rests on them; but he was not the person, as a tradesman, to find fault with them for disobeying the orders which necessarily devolved on them from their position.

Now, Mr. President, we do not ask that this amount of $18,000 shall be paid. If he has been foolish enough to make this contract, let him suffer; but we do ask that he shall have something, and that the Government shall not enjoy his property, shall not take it from him, and then throw him back on what would be necessarily an action that could not be maintained against the officers of the court.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The $9,000, the account of which has been read, is but for the furnishing of two rooms, and two other rooms, supposed to be equally necessary, have also been furnished for a like sum, making the aggregate $18,000.

Mr. BRAGG. If the Senator will allow me to correct the bill, there is a mistake in this respect. Here is the report, which mentions $9,000. One of the sums, $9,000, was for the rent of the building. There is another sum of $9,000, stating it in round numbers, for furnishing; and the present memorialist was the contractor in both instances. He owned the building, and furnished it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It was $18,000 in all. Mr. BRAGG. Eighteen thousand dollars in all. But I apprehend the $9,000 for the building have been paid, inasmuch as the Department approved the lease of the building.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The question now is altogether independent of the rent of the house. That has been approved of by the Department, and is a complete transaction. I do not often intrude myself on the Senate on such questions; but this strike me as an example of the most palpable an instance of extravagance, that I cannot forbear to speak a word in condemnation of it, and of all the parties, high and low, who were involved in it, and I make no exception; I am no respecter of persons at all.

Mr. FOOT. Will the honorable Senator allow me to correct a misapprehension of the Senator from North Carolina? Only one of two accounts was read; that is the account for the furnishing of the circuit court-room of the United States, a rented room for the use of the circuit court, and the amount for the furnishing of that room, and the judge's room, and jury room, &c., was read, amounting to over nine thousand dollars. There is another like amount for furnishing the rooms for the district court of the United States, amounting to over nine thousand dollars. The furniture for the two rooms amounts to over eighteen thousand dollars, independent of the rent of the building.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Now, Mr. President, unless we pay their price, will this property be lost? The property may be worth $15,000, rather than it is not. We cannot make the property our own unless we pay the price that is demanded. Suppose we reduce this account to what would furnish plainly and suitably a court-room. We cannot make a bargain with the contractor, and say, "all this fine property is ours for this modest price." What is the consequence of our paying this bill, or authorizing anybody else to pay it? Suppose we reduce it; does it make the property ours? I say, let these people take their property, and let them pay for it, and let them suffer themselves. If the judge has approved of this, I say he is equally culpable. If the marshal has approved of it, he is culpable, and ought to be dismissed from office. I will not condemn the humble agents in this matter, and spare the principals. There is no department in this Government that has increased in extravagance and in expense more than the judiciary has within the last few years, and give us now the sources of it.

Here is an instance of culpable—I think I might in moderate terms call it criminal extravagance. I am for punishing it. I will not vote for a cent of the bill in any form it can be put. I will vote against the bill. It is a fraud upon this Government, a plain, palpable one upon the face of it; and, if we ever intend to grow a lesson, we have the power of doing it now, and I hope and trust in God the Senate will do it. Contrivers of this sort shall not always be able to console themselves. "Well, if our fraud and imposition do not succeed, we shall be paid anyhow." No, sir; they shall not be paid. Let them take their property. Let them hold one another responsible. Let these gentlemen settle one with another their responsibilities, and let our court-house be furnished in a plain, suitable manner. In the court-house in my State, an old one comparatively, the whole furniture of it did not cost $500, I verily believe. The jurors sit on benches; the judges sit in respectable seats, and on respectable chairs, and they administer as sound and as good justice as in any where done. I will not give in to this idea of extravagance in transacting the public business at all. I mean to vote against the bill, and let these gentlemen take their fine chairs, and do what they can with them, and then we shall have our court-house furnished in a plain and suitable manner, consistent with the plain republicanism which we wish to ingraft, and wish to preserve in this Government in all its branches. I am against the bill, and mean to vote against it.

Mr. POSTER. I ask that the yeas and nays may be taken on the passage of this bill.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and on the question, "Shall the bill pass?" Mr. FITZPATRICK called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 6, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Green, Gwin, Hemphill, Iverson, Latham, and Mallory—6.

NAYS.—Messrs. Benjamin, Bingham, Brazz, Brown, Chandler, Chenoit, Clark, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Purke, Frazer, Fitch, Johnson, Ford, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Hendricks, John, Johnston of Arkansas, Menzies, King, Mason, Peck, Powell, Fugate, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Toombs, Trumbull, Whelan, and Wilkinson—36.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 21, nays 13; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, March 23, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. STODOLN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTRICT COURT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. DUELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for the holding of a term of the district court of the United States at Binghamton, in the State of New York.

The bill provides that one term of the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York, in addition to those already appointed, shall be held annually at Binghamton, in the county of Broome, at such time as the judge of said district shall appoint, upon a notice of at least forty days, to be published in the State paper of the State of New York; which district court and the judge thereof shall have like powers and exercise like jurisdiction as other district courts and judges thereof, as now provided by law.

The bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, from the Committee on Public Lands, made an adverse report on the petition of citizens of township two north, of range nine west, of the fourth principal meridian, in Adams county, Illinois; which was laid on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of congressional township six south, of range eight west, in Randolph county, State of Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of congressional township two south, of range twelve west, of the second principal meridian, in Gibson county, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ABOLITION OF LAND OFFICES.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, from the same committee, reported back a resolution instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of abolishing a portion of the land offices; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. What will be the effect of laying it upon the table? Can we call it up again? Because the House might disagree to the report of the committee. I move that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay upon the table takes precedence.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I presume the gentleman from Indiana has no objection to its reference to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I withdraw the motion to lay upon the table. I am perfectly willing that the resolution shall be referred.

The resolution was referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

ISLAND OF GRAND CENIERE.

Mr. LANDRUM. The Committee on Public Lands are prepared to report favorably upon the approval of the survey of the Island of Grand Cénieré. The bill has once passed the House, but failed in the Senate. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the committee be permitted to report the bill, and that it be put upon its passage. A member of the committee will explain to the satisfaction of the House in a moment that there can be no objection whatever to its passage.

Mr. CORB. I could not ask the House to do anything for me, but here is a matter in which the Government is directly interested. It is a small matter, and the committee have unanimously instructed me to report the bill. There is a little island in the State of Louisiana that could not be surveyed according to the legal manner of surveying lands, but had to be cut up into small fractions. The Department has recommended that the survey may be regarded as valid, in order that the Government may sell the lands. That is the whole matter. Every member of the committee who was present agreed that the bill should be reported. It was reported by me at the last session, and passed the House without a dissenting voice, and went to the Senate; but failed there for want of time. It is a matter in which the Government is interested. The island cannot be surveyed in any other way than the one in which it has been surveyed, and all the committee ask is that the survey shall be approved. Now, will the House allow the bill to pass?

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama where this land is?

Mr. CORB. It is down in Louisiana in a swamp, and it cannot be surveyed in any way but by cutting it up into fractions. We want to bring the land into market, so that the Government can get the money for it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. I desire to ask the gentleman further, if it has any connection with the McDonough estate?

Mr. CORB. None whatever. It is for the Government. I do not work for private individuals. Mr. MAYNARD. Perhaps the gentleman can state if anybody has any claim on these lands except the Government?

Mr. CORB. I suppose preceptors have.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Is that a private bill? If not, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard what the bill is.

Mr. CORB. If there is a single objection made to the bill, I will not offer it.

Mr. TAPPAN. Well, I object.

Mr. CORB. I will get it in at another time. Mr. TAYLOR. I wish the gentleman from New Hampshire would be good enough to withdraw the objection. It is a portion of country situated to the west of the Mississippi river.

Mr. TAPPAN. I would withdraw it, but if I do, there will be no end to this way of doing business.

Mr. CORB. The bill could be passed in the time it takes you to object.

Mr. TAPPAN. I must object

CLARK JOLLEY.

Mr. ALLEY, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, made an adverse report on the petition of Clark Jolley, for relief; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES IN UTAH.

Mr. STANTON, from the same committee, also reported a bill to refund to the Territory of Utah the expenses incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities in the year 1853.

Mr. THOMAS. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that is not a private bill, and that, therefore, it is not in order to be reported upon an bill of the committee for reports of a private nature.

The SPEAKER. It is not a private bill, of course it cannot be received.

Mr. STANTON. The Committee on Military Affairs regarded it as strictly a private bill. It is a private claim for money paid out by the Territory of Utah for the suppression of Indian hostilities within the limits of that Territory. It is as much a private claim as any made here for money expended, and which it is the duty of this Government to refund.

The SPEAKER. In that aspect, it will be received.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JANE B. EVANS.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents to report a bill for the relief of Jane B. Evans, and to ask that it shall receive its several readings and be passed.

The bill was read a first and second time. It provides for the extension of the patent granted to Cadwalader Evans, for an improvement in steam boilers and apparatus to be used on board steamboats to prevent the explosion of boilers, for seven years from the 15th of April, 1860, for the benefit of Jane B. Evans, his widow, her heirs and assigns.

Mr. HOAK. I object to that bill being put upon its passage.

Mr. WINSLOW. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. I believe the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from North Carolina is in order.

Mr. WHITELEY. I would ask if a single objection prevents a bill from being put upon its passage when it contains no appropriation?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. WHITELEY. Then the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut, to put the bill upon its passage, is in order.

Mr. TAPPAN. There are a few more reports to be made. I hope we shall go on and receive them.

Mr. WINSLOW. They can be received tomorrow.

Mr. WHITELEY. How did the gentleman from North Carolina get the floor to make his motion?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina is in order.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The question was taken on Mr. Winslow's motion; and it was agreed to; and the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that adverse reports are not for consideration to-day; but, under the rules of the House, bills must be considered to which no objection shall be made.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair refer to all adverse reports, or to those only from the Court of Claims?

The CHAIRMAN. Adverse reports from the Court of Claims are not to be considered to-day. This is "objection day," and the committee will consider the bills upon the Calendar to which no objection shall be made.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would suggest, if there is no objection, that the adverse reports from the Court of Claims might be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that they be concurred in.

Mr. WINSLOW. I think we had better go on in the regular order.

The committee then proceeded to consider the bills and joint resolutions in their order on the Calendar.

COMMANDER H. J. HARTSTENE.

A resolution (S. No. 11) for the relief of Commander H. J. Hartstene, of the United States Navy. The resolution directs the accounting officer of the Treasury to allow and pay the sum of $2,008 60 to Commander H. J. Hartstene, on account of expenses incurred by him in restoring the bark Resolute.

Mr. HOUSTON. Read the report.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no report accompanying the resolution.

There being no objection to the joint resolution, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ANSON DART.

A bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Anson Dart. [Objected to by Mr. THOMAS.]

TENNESSEE RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

A bill (H. R. No. 89) to liquidate the undischarged contracts of the Tennessee river improvements. [Objected to by Mr. TOMPAINS.]

WILLIAM BROWN.

A bill (H. R. No. 229) for the relief of William Brown.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William Brown, for property taken for the use of the United States troops in the war of 1812, $500, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report was read. The evidence shows the claimant to have been a man of means during the war of 1812, and that he was liberal in his efforts to sustain the honor and credit of his country. His losses were evidently heavy; but, under principles laid down by the committee in a number of cases already decided, the Government cannot be held liable for these losses. The testimony, however, shows that Mr. Brown surrendered for the use of the troops, on demand of officers of the Government, a wagon, two horses, and certain goods; which were reasonably worth, at the time, the sum of $500, and this the committee think is a fair charge against the Government.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

LYDIA FRAZEE.

A bill (C. C. No. 93) for the relief of Lydia Frazee, widow and administratrix of John Frazee, late of the city of New York.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Lydia Frazee, widow and administratrix of John Frazee, late of the city of New York, the sum of $2,908; being in full for the services of John Frazee, as architect and superintendent of the New York custom-house, from the 3d of March, 1841, to the 21st of May, 1842.

The report was read. It appears therefrom that John Frazee was employed by proper authority as the architect and superintendent of the custom-house in New York, at a compensation of nine dollars a day. On the 5th of December, 1840, he was dismissed from that employment, and on the 3d of March, 1841, he was reinstated in it. He continued to perform the duties of architect and superintendent from the day last mentioned till the completion of the custom-house, some time in the spring or summer of the year 1842. The precise time when the custom-house was finished being uncertain, Mr. Durfee stating it to be early in the spring, and Mr. Lannitz in the summer of 1842, we have adopted the day stated by the decedent on oath; first, because it is so stated, and second, because it is about intermediate between the period stated by Mr. Durfee and that stated by Mr. Lannitz. The petitioner claims that the decedent was entitled to compensation from the 5th of December, 1840, till the 3d of March, 1841, as well as afterwards; but our opinion is that he did not, during that interval, perform the duties of architect and superintendent. This is obvious from the report of the deputy naval officer and surveyor.

On the other hand, it is objected that after the 1st of May, 1841, the decedent served gratuitously. It is plain that he made an offer to do so, but it seems to us to be equally plain that his offer was never accepted. Moreover, the just inference from the evidence is, that if it had been accepted, then, upon an arrangement for that purpose being formally made, two conditions would have been annexed; first, that his pay from December 5, 1840, till March 3, 1841, should have been made good to him; and second, that the work should be completed on or before the 1st of August, 1841. Our opinion is that there never was any definite and binding arrangement for him to serve gratuitously. The Secretary of the Treasury took no notice of the offer made by him for this purpose. In this respect he acted wisely. If the United States needed the services of the decedent, justice, as well as public policy, required that they should make him a fair and reasonable compensation therefor. If they did not need his services, then he ought not to have been employed.

The opinion of the committee is that the decedent was entitled to compensation, at the rate of nine dollars a day, from the 3d of March, 1841, till the 21st of May, 1842, subject to a deduction of $522, the amount found due by the select committee, under the act of Congress approved May 18, 1842, (5 Statutes at Large, p. 485, ch. 29, No. 179), and of thirty-nine dollars for articles made for the decedent at the custom-house. For three hundred and eighty-one days, at nine dollars a day, $3,429, subject to a deduction of the sum of the two sums just mentioned, $561, leaving a balance of $2,868.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARIANO G. VALLEJO.

A bill (C. C. No. 92) for the relief of Mariano G. Vallejo.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mariano G. Vallejo, in full for the occupation by the troops of the United States of a building on the square of Sonoma, in California, from May 30, 1848, to August, 1853, the sum of $4,800.

The report was read. It shows that on the 4th of August, 1846, the United States, then at war with Mexico, occupied a building on the square of Sonoma, called in the evidence the cartel, or barracks; it was at this time in the possession of the Revolutionists in California, known as the "Bear party," and had previously been in the occupation of Mexican troops under the command of General Pico. The building was situated in the district. Munitions of war belonging to Mexico, and three hundred horses, brand of different brands, were found in the barracks and captured by our troops. The United States occupied the barracks as soldiers' quarters from August 4, 1846, (Records, p. 103,) to the 16th of August, 1848, (R. p. 35.) They were then left by the United States, and came into the possession and occupancy of the petitioner, (R., pp. 88, 93.) In the month of June, 1849, (R., p. 44,) they were again employed by the soldiers of the United States, and continuously thereafter until the 31st of January, 1852, when they were delivered in charge to Mr. Bartlett, an agent of the United States, (R., p. 44,) appointed by the United States chief quartermaster for the Pacific division, and they remained in the use of the quartermaster's department until August, 1853, (Sed. brief, p. 13.)

The petitioner alleges that the premises thus occupied by the United States belonged to him; and he claims to be paid for such occupancy as follows: From July, 1846, to July, 1849, twenty-four months, at $300, $4,800; from July, 1849, to July, 1851, thirty-six months, at $10, $360; from July, 1851, to August, 1853, twenty-five months, at $200, $5,000; total, $10,600. Upon all the evidence, it is considered that a reasonable rent to be paid by the United States is $250 per month from June, 1849, to July, 1851, and $300 per month for the other portions of their occupancy after May 30, 1848, thus: from May 30, 1848, to November 16, 1848, four and a half months, at $200 per month, $1,100; from June, 1849, to July, 1851, twenty-six months, at $250 per month, $6,500; from July, 1851, to August, 1853, twenty-two months, at $300 per month, $6,600; total, $12,200. The Committee of Claims report that, after an examination of all the testimony submitted to the court, they are of the opinion that the allowance of the sum of $12,600 is an extravagant one, and not justified by the evidence. The following allowance appears to them to be not only fair under the proof, but liberal: rent from May 30, 1848, to November 16, 1848, at $300 per month, $1,100; rent from June, 1849, to July, 1851, at $200 per month, $5,300; rent from July, 1851, to August, 1853, at $100 per month, $2,500; total, $8,900. And they therefore report back the bill from the Court of Claims, with an amendment, to strike out "twelve thousand six hundred," and insert "eight thousand eight hundred."

The amendment reported by the Committee of Claims was agreed to and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

SHADE CALLAWAY.

A bill (H. R. 230) for the relief of Shade Callaway.

The bill directs the proper accounting officers to allow and pay out of the Treasury to Shade Callaway the sum of $1,350, for work done by him on the Tennessee river, under his contract with Brevet Lieutenant Colonel J. McClellan, dated September 16, 1853, according to the account approved and certified by the agent placed in charge of the work at the death of the officer.

It appears, from the report, that on the 16th of September, 1853, the petitioner made a contract with Brevet Lieutenant Colonel J. McClellan, an officer of the United States Army, for the improvement of the Tennessee river, for the construction of a dam at the head of Ross's Island, to be two feet high and two hundred yards long, for which he was to be paid $1,500. The dam was completed on the 30th of November, 1853, "if the high water were to arise in accordance with the terms of the contract. At this stage of the work, in August, 1854, Colonel McClellan ordered it to be suspended, for the reason that the appropriation made by Congress was not sufficient to complete it. On the 1st of December, 1854, without having reported to the Department the condition of the work done under the said contract, the Secretary of War appointed K. W. W. Byrd, who had been assistant under Colonel McClellan, to take charge of and "to execute the same, then in charge, connected with the improvement of the Tennessee river."

This officer duly approves and certifies that the petitioner's account for $1,350, which is the proportional amount due for the work done in pursuance of the contract. This certificate is appended to this report. The witnesses are Samuel C. Davis, James Lewelling, John Long, and John Finley, fully prove the faithful execution of the work according to the terms of the contract; and the official certificate of Mr. Byrd and the testimony of J. E. S. Blackwell, one of the commissioners of the United States appointed for this river, to establish the fact that no payment was made to Callaway, or to any other person for him. But this latter fact also sufficiently appears in the accounts of the work, for it is not claimed that any payment was made.

In the letter of the Third Auditor of the Treasury, dated November 19, 1855, all the material facts of the case are admitted, but the certificate of the agent of the United States, R. W. W. Byrd, is discredited, because not sworn to, and for the reason that Colonel McClellan's reports to the Department do not give information of this particular part of the work under his charge. This omission, however, is fully accounted for by the sudden death of that officer, which took place very soon after he had ordered the work to be suspended. But the objections of the Auditor are based chiefly upon the absence of proof, and it is to the State that the affidavits appended to the report were not before him, as their dates will show. It is apparent, from the Auditor's letter, that the condition of the appropriation fully justified the contract at the time the latter was made, and the progress of the work. The contractor had no means of ascertaining condition of the funds, and perhaps even the officer in charge himself could not accurately proportion the different parts of the improvement to the sum in hand; but there can be no good reason why this bill alone should remain undischarged. The claim of the petitioner is the following:

The United States to Shade Callaway, Dr.

(On account of Tennessee river improvements.)
For building one hundred and eighty yards of dam at Ross's Island, in Tennessee, $12,600.....$12,600.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ISAAC S. SMITH.

A bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief Isaac S. Smith, of Syracuse, New York.

The bill appropriates, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,743 77 to be paid to Isaac S. Smith, of Syracuse, New York, for his work and labor bestowed, for materials furnished, and for expenses incurred, in building for the United States a light-house on the Horse-Shoe reef, in the Niagara river, near Fort Erie, in the province of Canada.

It appears, from the report of the committee, which was read, that the petitioner claims compensation for losses sustained by him by reason of the termination on the part of the Government of a contract made by him with the United States to construct a light-house on Horse-Shoe reef, in the Niagara river, near Fort Erie, in the State of New York; that, in 1851, Congress appropriated $45,000 for the erection of a light-house on this reef, and presented to the President the same year a memorial from the petitioner, who had addressed a letter to the then Secretary of the Treasury, proposing to construct for the Government a foundation and light-house thereon, in conformity to certain drawings and descriptions there annexed, filed on the 18th of November, 1851, with the Secretary of the Treasury. The committee, in their report, set out in detail the articles of agreement with Sullivan Ketchum, Esq., collector of customs and superintendent of lights at Buffalo, in behalf of the United States, for the construction of the said light-house, on a plan devised by the petitioner, submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and approved by him. By the terms of the contract, the whole price to be paid to him for the materials and building the light-house was $40,000; but in view of the novelty of the plan, and to secure the Government against loss, if the structure should not be completed, the contract provided that, in the current of the river, and the ice, it was stipulated that the Government should pay to Mr. Smith, on the completion of the house, "the satisfaction of such person as should be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to oversee and certify the work." The sum of $40,000 was the other sum of $20,000 within twelve months afterwards, if, in the mean time, the work should be found to have successfully withstood the effects of the ice, winds, and storms, but not otherwise; it being a part of said agreement that the first payment should be a full discharge of the contract, and that if the work should have received essential damage from the causes aforesaid, or should exhibit any deficiency in its construction.

It appears that Mr. Smith immediately commenced the erection of the work; but that in consequence of the cold weather setting in, he was unable to make any progress until the summer following, when the ice broke up. The engineers of the Government were entirely mistaken in reference to the rocky character of the reef. Instead of finding it a solid rock, he excavated to the depth of eleven and one half feet into the substance of the reef, to a point about nineteen feet below the surface of the water, when he came to rock; but finding only boulders, gravel, shells, and sand. Immediately on discovering that there was no rock at practicable depth below the water, Mr. Smith, on the 23d of August, 1852, applied for, and obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury, an extension of the time, and also a modification of the plan of construction; which extension, dated August 28, 1852, concludes in these words: "If Mr. Smith concludes to progress with the work, agreeable to the above, the additional time he may require shall be granted." The evidence in the case shows that the petitioner is not chargeable with negligence in the prosecution of the work after the time was extended, as above stated. Indeed, the testimony of Captain Benham, the engineer in charge of this work, to the probability of the success of the project, is so strong and full, and, in the opinion of the committee, so just, that they extract it from his letter to the Secretary of the Treasury of August 27, 1852, as follows:

"I would only add that I take great pleasure in giving my testimony to Mr. Smith's evident honesty and integrity in this matter; to the desire he has constantly shown to construct the work of the best materials, and in the strongest manner; and to his undisturbed and untiring efforts, all of which would lead me to recommend, should his plan be deemed feasible upon such a site as this one appears to be, my reasonable indulgence as to the extension of time that he may desire."

There is no pretense set up that Smith, after the extension of time, did not prosecute the work with his accustomed energy and skill. It appears from Mr. Smith's letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, of October 18, 1852, that the Secretary of the Treasury had overlooked the letter of 28th August, 1852, from the acting Secretary, extending the time of performance of Smith's contract indefinitely, or, in his own words, granting him "such time as he might require, but not more than a reasonable time." But at this time, (October 18, 1852,) the Secretary's second letter, extending the time of performance of the contract, was returned by Keichum to the Secretary, without delivery or notice to Smith. In his last report Captain Benham says:

"Yet his persevering determination to attempt to execute his contract under so many unexpected and opposing circumstances, and against the adverse opinions of many, perhaps nearly all, other persons who have examined the subject, leads me to fear that the further prosecution of this work must result in a continued, and, perhaps, much more extensive expenditure of money than was originally contemplated. Withholding every precaution that may be taken by the officers of the Treasury Department, I have reason for thinking it not only possible, but probable, that the project will be called upon, and perhaps successfully so, to terminate."

On the 13th May, 1853, after the lapse of some weeks, months from the date of Benham's report, the Secretary transmitted to Mr. Smith the report of the "committee on engineering," respecting his plan for constructing the light-house; which plan had been previously adopted, and the time for construction was then extended. The course appears to have been in violation of the extended contract on the part of the Government, and unjust to Mr. Smith. It is in proof that during the winter of 1852-53 Mr. Smith was pushing on the work on the modified plan in every part of it (which would admit of prosecution during that season, and he was doing this with the consent of the Government. The eagerness and energy with which Smith was prosecuting his contract in October, 1852, was such as to attract the attention of Captain Benham. Nevertheless, the Government, by its own admission, abandoned the same time seem to have mediated a rejection of the plan, but neglected to inform Smith of that intention. This conduct of the Government, not through design, but neglect, seems wholly inconsistent with the rights of the petitioner. Had the Government, even after the termination of the contract, notified him of construction, did not notify him of the termin-tion of his contract. But again, on the 21st of January, 1854, a period of more than eight months, the Light-house Board, by Captain Harwell, its secretary, issued instructions to Captain J. C. Woodruff "to report again upon the feasibility of Smith's plan of constructing the light-house, and to state the time which will be required for that purpose." On the 6th May, 1854, P. G. Washington, for the Secretary of the Board, directed the secretary of the Light-house Board to notify Smith "that his contract for building the light-house had been annulled."

On the 12th May, 1854, Captain J. C. Woodruff, light-house inspector of the tenth district, wrote to Captain Harwell, secretary of the Light-house Board, informing him that he had immediately communicated to Smith Mr. Washington's letter annulling Smith's contract for building the light-house. In this letter Captain Woodruff states:

"I have been aware that Mr. Smith has been engaged at various times during the intervals of labor on the reef in experiments to test the practicability of cutting out the cause for the fouling of his shaft, excavation by drillings and blasting having failed during the last season of work on the reef. He has resumed work at the reef, clearing out the work, which had been done in the winter, and the waves with stone from the adjacent compartments of the crib. This operation has been nearly completed. He has his engine ready to transport to the reef, and is waiting out the stone. This statement seems to be called for from the nature of his reply to my letter, that the Board may be advised from this office of the extent of his operations on the cause."

It also appears, from accounts and vouchers, that the actual expenses for labor and materials furnished, after deducting for materials received, amount to the sum of $13,543 77, exclusive of Mr. Smith's own services during the period the work was in progress, from the 23d of July, 1851, to the time he was notified of the annulling of his contract by the Government, on the 12th of May, 1854—a period of two years nine months and eighteen days. He estimates the value of his personal services at the rate of $2,000 per year for the time he was employed in this work. This sum is deemed higher than it would be reasonable to allow, all the circumstances considered, and a compensation is allowed at the rate of $1,500 per year, for the above period of two years nine months and eighteen days, amounting to the sum of $4,200; making in the whole the sum of $17,743 77.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to object to that bill for I know nothing about it, and the facts are disclosed by the report of the committee, which has just been read. I would like to know from the gentleman who made the report whether he applied at the Treasury Department or to the Light-house Board, where the information was properly to be sought, to learn why the Secretary of the Treasury annulled the contract of Mr. Smith? Was there no explanation from either the Treasury Department or the Light-house Board in reference to that point?

Mr. EDWARDS. It is in that order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not, if objected to.

Mr. HOUSTON: If objection is made to the House ascertaining whatever information there may be on that subject, then I will be compelled to object.

Mr. NIXON. In reply to the interrogatory of the gentleman from Alabama, I will say that application was made to the Department, and it was stated that the annulment of the contract was made during a previous Administration. I understand that Mr. Guthrie, then Secretary of the Treasury, admitted to Mr. Smith and his friends that he did do Mr. Smith injustice. We were told that, as the proceeding took place under a preceding Administration, the present Administration did not feel itself responsible for what had taken place.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not looking to find what Administration the proceeding took place under; not at all, sir. If the Treasury Department had no good reason for annulling the contract, then the bill ought to pass; if there was good reason, then it ought not to pass.

Mr. NIXON. The committee looked into the matter, and were satisfied, from the facts brought to their knowledge, that the bill ought to pass.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM GEIGER.

A bill (H. C. No. 96) for the relief of William Geiger.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to William Geiger, in full for all claims against the United States, by virtue of his contract made on the 18th of October, 1854, at Fort Smith City, with Captain French, for lime, stone, and mason work, for and on the barracks at Fort Washita, in the Cherokee nation, the sum of $4,010 62.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of Claims concur in the report of the Court of Claims, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

DECEASED CUSTOM-HOUSE CLERKS.

A bill (H. R. No. 233) for the relief of the legal representatives of five deceased clerks in the Philadelphia custom-house.

The bill and report were read in extenso.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The amount proposed to be appropriated is too large to be hastily passed by this committee.

Mr. FLORENCE. I trust that it will not be objected to this bill.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. What is the amount of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of David Gibson, John B. Shill, Eli Valente, William Bryant, and C. G. Treichel, deceased, late clerks in the Philadelphia custom-house, the sums due them respectively for arrears of compensation, amounting, in the aggregate, to $9,895 17, as per certified statement of the custom-house.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Let the bill be informally passed over until we can look into it.

Mr. WINSLOW. We had better go on regularly.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the bill must be considered at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If I cannot have an opportunity to look into the bill, I must object.

LOT HALL.

A bill (H. R. No. 16) for the relief of the heirs of Lot Hall.

The bill directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle and pay to the heirs and legal representatives of Lot Hall, deceased, who was a lieutenant of marines, under Lieutenant United States during the Revolution, the sum of $1,906, together with the interest thereon, at six per cent. per annum, from May 25, 1840, for the pay of a lieutenant of marines, due to Lot Hall, and for the subsistence of Hall while a prisoner of war, and also for the share of prize-money due to him, under the resolutions of Congress, for the proceeds of the vessels captured by Lieutenant Payne, while Hall was under his command.

The report was read. It shows that Lot Hall entered the service of the United States in May, 1776, as a lieutenant of marines, under Lieutenant Elijah F. Payne, of the ship Randolph, of twenty guns, then lying at Charleston, South Carolina, under the command of Robert Cochran; that Hall entered the service under the regulations of Congress, and the directions of General Washington, in Massachusetts, where he enlisted twenty-nine men and a boy, whom he transported to Providence, Rhode Island, and placed, as well as himself, under the command of Lieutenant Payne. From Providence they sailed in June, 1776, with a design to make a cruising voyage to Charleston, South Carolina, to join their ship, (the Randolph.) On their passage they took four prizes, the last of which Hall was put on board of as prize-master, with orders to take the prize into Boston; but she was retaken by a British vessel, and Hall carried a prisoner of war to Glasgow, in Scotland, where he was detained about a year, when he was enabled to take passage for Virginia, where he arrived about the 1st of January, 1778, as an exchanged officer; and through the munificence of Patrick Henry, then Governor of Virginia, he was enabled to reach his home in Massachusetts February 22.

Mr. BURNETT. I move to strike out the interest clause from the bill. If it is struck out, I shall have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS ATKINSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 234) for the relief of Thomas Atkinson, of Parke county, Indiana. [Objected to by Mr. BEANETT.]

CONGRESSIONAL TOWNSHIP IN ILLINOIS.

A bill (H. R. No. 235) for the relief of congressional township two north, of range nine west, of the fourth principal meridian, in Adams county, State of Illinois.

The bill recites that section sixteen, in township two north, of range nine west, of the fourth principal meridian, in Adams county, Illinois, is located in a lake, or pond, and is, in consequence thereof, wholly unfit for cultivation, and is worthless to the inhabitants of said township for school purposes; and therefore it authorizes the school trustees for the said township to select one section of land in legal subdivisions of any of the public lands of the United States subject to entry or sale at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre; and further provides that when the same shall have been selected by the trustees, and a description thereof returned to the State, as required by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a patent or patents shall issue therefor to the inhabitants of the congressional township, and shall be held and disposed of by them for the use of schools within the congressional township in the same manner as other school lands now sold and disposed of; and that section sixteen in the township shall revert to and invest in the United States, and be disposed of in the same manner as other public lands.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN DIXON.

A bill (H. R. No. 236) for the relief of John Dixon.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue a bounty land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres to John Dixon, of Dixon's Ferry, in Illinois, for services rendered in the Black Hawk war.

Mr. BURNETT. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

Mr. LOVEJOY. There is no report; but the facts upon which the bill is based are well known to my colleagues on the Committee on Public Lands, and to several colleagues from my State. This Mr. Dixon was one of the earliest soldiers in that part of the State of Illinois, and rendered efficient and essential services to the troops in ferrying them across the river, and in providing them with means of support—not at his own expense, it is true; but his services were gratuitous. He was in good circumstances then, and refused to charge anything for his services. He is now old and poor, and he asks for one hundred and sixty acres of land. The committee were unanimous in reporting that his prayer should be granted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I can bear testimony to the correctness of all that my colleague has said in reference to that venerable old man. He rendered efficient services in the Black Hawk war.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT JOHNSON.

A bill for the relief of Robert Johnson. The bill authorizes Robert Johnson to locate, on any of the public lands of the United States subject to location with military bounty land warrants, certain bounty land warrants issued under the act of 11th of February, 1847, to certain soldiers; the discharges received by the soldiers after the expiration of their respective terms of service, having, as is alleged, been purchased from them for a valuable consideration; provided, that if it shall hereafter appear that the soldiers did not, in whole or in part, receive a fair and valuable consideration for such discharge, it shall be lawful for them or their heirs, to assert their service respectively in a court of law; and the particular tracts selected in satisfaction of the warrants shall be subject to such claims in law or equity, and the patents which may issue for such tracts shall certify accordingly; and provided further, that any assignment made of either of the land warrants, or the limitations thereof, prior to the issuing of patents, shall be absolutely null and void in law and equity.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the proviso of that bill is objectionable, and I must object to the bill, unless it is modified so as to make the assignment show that this legislation couples with the land warrant the liability of redempcion upon the part of the heirs; for instance, this bill, as I understand it, will authorize Johnson to transfer the warrant to me, or to any other man. The assignee will not know of this law, and you authorize the heirs hereafter to reclaim and recover those lands without their assent, if their ancestors did not get full value for their discharges. The result will be that you will throw the loss upon innocent men, instead of upon Johnson himself.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to make an inquiry, in reference to another point, of the chairman of the committee, or of the member who reported the bill. It seems that Johnson's title is derived under a power of attorney. Of this power of attorney we have no evidence, except upon his allegation, unless there be such evidence on file with the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, that while he is disposed to indulge inquiry, yet debate is not in order; and unless the bill is objected to, it will be laid aside, to be reported to the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The bill is of too much importance to be acted upon hastily.

Mr. COBB. I will say that the bill was drawn up at the Land Office, with a view to protect every person's rights.

Mr. GARTRELL. I object to the bill.

GEORGE F. BROTT.

A bill (H. R. No. 239) for the relief of George F. Brott.

The bill authorizes George F. Brott to enter the following described lands: Lots Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 4, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and west half of southwest quarter of fractional section thirteen; and the south half of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and the east half of the southeast quarter of section fourteen; and the east half of the northeast quarter of section twenty-three, and lot No. 1, in section twenty-four, all in township one hundred and twenty-four north, of range twenty-eight west, in the district of lands sold by the sale at the land office at St. Cloud, Minnesota; said tracts containing five hundred and sixty-two and twenty hundredths acres, upon the payment by Brott of the usual minimum of $1 25 per acre therefor; and directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent on the entry.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no report accompanying this bill; but I am familiar with this case, and hope no gentleman will object to it. Mr. Brott was a mail carrier under the law granting preemption rights to mail carriers made by the Mississippi bill, which has already passed the House, this winter, confirming all the entries made by mail carriers. Mr. Brott has never been able to enter his land, and pay for it as other carriers have done, for the reason that the plat of survey was not returned in season, and not until the Secretary of the Interior put such a construction upon the law as would prevent him from allowing the land to be entered by Mr. Brott. He now asks the privilege; and asks that this bill be passed, authorizing and allowing him to enter this land under that law.

He will also state that I hold in my hand a petition, signed by a number of individuals who reside on that land. He proposes to enter the land, and pay the Government $1 25 an acre; which is all they ask.

Mr. BURNETT. What do the Interior Department say upon the subject?

Mr. ALDRICH. They recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

EBEN S. HANSCOMB.

A bill (H. R. No. 225) for the relief of Eben S. Hanscomb.

The reading of the report was called for.

Mr. HAIRM. N. There is no report accompanying this bill.

Mr. STANTON. I think that is a very satisfactory reason why the bill should be objected to. Bills of this sort ought to be accompanied with some explanation.

Mr. ALDRICH. The facts are stated in the memorial.

Mr. STANTON. I object.

CARLES M. CLAY.

A bill (H. R. No. 240) for the relief of Cassius M. Clay. [Objected to by Mr. Moore, of Alabama.]

CHARLES T. SCAIFE.

A bill (C. C. No. 82) for the relief of Charner T. Scaife, administrator of Gilbert Stalker.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Charner T. Scaife, administrator of Gilbert Stalker, deceased, $5,615 16 in full, for the use and service of the accomachee James Adams, belonging to Stalker, from August 1, 1841, to July 9, 1842.

The report was read. It shows that this is a claim for a certain sum alleged to be due the estate of Gilbert Stalker, deceased, for certain services of the accomachee James Adams, of which Mr. Stalker was the owner. The boat was, on the 22nd of December, 1840, chartered for the United States by Captain Ogden, quartermaster, at $2,500 a month. The service of the boat under the charter-party was to the Seminole war in the west side of Florida. The boat was discharged on the 26th of April, 1841. On the 28th of April, 1841, the same boat was chartered on the part of the United States by Major Thimmas, quartermaster, at $2,000 a month, and was in service on the west side of Florida, in the war with the Seminole, until the 9th of July, 1842, when she was discharged. On the 28th of September, 1842, Captain Hill, quartermaster, chartered said boat for the United States at $1,500 a month, for a service similar to that above mentioned. The amount chargeable to the United States for the service of the boat under those three charter-parties has been long since paid. But the claimant alleges that his intestate, Stalker, is entitled to $500 a month for the service of the boat, from the 1st of September, 1841, until the 9th of July, 1842, in addition to the $1,000 a month received by him under the charter-party of the 28th of April, 1841. This claim for additional pay is founded on a promise made by General Worth, who was the commanding officer, to Mr. Stalker, the owner of the boat, on the 28th of April, 1841. It cannot be said that the promise was without consideration; for either can it be said that the promise was made without authority, it having been made by the commanding officer in the presence of the quartermaster. It would, no doubt, have been more regular if the general had made a new charter-party for the boat; but still, as the unusual service was performed in consequence of the promise, it seems to be proper that the Government should pay for it. The charge for the service from the time of the promise to that of the discharge of the boat is $5,615 16, for which sum we report a bill.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MOSES NOBLE.

A bill (C. C. No. 12) for the relief of Moses Noble.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Moses Noble, agent for the brig General Hayne and the schooner Delta, of Sardinia, Five Sisters, Commonwealth, and Two Brothers, for the benefit of the persons entitled thereto, the sum of $1,704 68, the same being for fishing bounties to which the vessels became entitled in the fishing season of 1859.

The report was read. It appears that this is a claim for fishing bounties, under the act of June 19, 1813. In the spring of 1852, the claimant, as the agent and manager of certain fishing vessels, engaged masters, or skippers, for the fishing season, and caused each of the masters to make an agreement with every fisherman employed in each of the vessels in accordance with the act of Congress. Under the law, the owners of the vessels became entitled to be paid by the collector of the district of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, out of any money of the United States appropriated for such purposes, the sum of $1,074 68. The payment, however, was refused by the collector, on the ground that no log-book of the voyage was furnished him; but the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom an appeal had been taken, refused the allowance on account of a slight infirmity in the instrument of agreement with the fishermen. The Court of Claims decided that the agreement with the fishermen was substantiated by the fishermen with the act of Congress of June 19, 1813, and reported the bill for the relief of the claimant. The Committee of Claims concur with the Court of Claims in this view, and accordingly report back the bill without amendment and recommend its passage. The committee add, that no question as to the entire legality of the contract made with the fishermen. The informality was an omission in reducing the contract to writing. This omission the Court of Claims held to be immaterial, in which opinion the committee concur.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT H. MORRIS'S REPRESENTATIVES.

A bill (H. R. No. 242) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York.

The bill directs the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department to readjust and audit the account of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York, from May 26, 1845, to June 1, 1846, and to allow in the account all sums of money paid out by Morris for defraying the expenses of the office within that period, including the amount paid on account of the city dispatch office; provided that, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, such expenses were properly incurred and were necessary for the business of the office. And, in addition thereto, the Auditor shall also allow, for the same period, such sum as should make the compensation of Morris equal to the sum of $2,000 per annum, as provided for by the act of March 3, 1845. If the sum so found to be due, shall be paid to the executor or other legal representative of Morris, out of any money appropriated for the Post Office Department.

The report was read. It appears therefrom that R. H. Morris was postmaster of New York when the act of March 3, 1845, in relation to postages, took effect, namely, July 1, 1845, and continued to act in that capacity until 1849; that in consequence of the act of March 1845, the commission fund for the post office was appropriated to the local expenses of the office, owing to the great increase of the business of the office, resulting from the reduction of postage as provided for by the act, became wholly insufficient for the purpose; that he was compelled to meet the demands of the public, and to procure the discharge of the duties, to increase the number of clerks, and augment other contingent expenses. It appears that these charges were all properly presented, and appeared in the quarterly returns of Mr. Morris to the Post Office Department. They were allowed at the time; but, on the settlement of the account for the fiscal year, these charges for expenditure, amounting to $5,680, were stricken out and disallowed, simply on the ground that the Department, under the law which regulated its powers, the commission fund being exhausted, had no authority to pay them, and not on the ground that they were not necessary and proper in themselves. Mr. Morris was then compelled to pay over the amount for which he had creditted himself. It appears that, for that year, Mr. Morris received only $1,045 81 for his services.

It appears further, that the commission fund, out of which expenses were paid, was also reduced by the action of Mr. Morris's predecessor, who, shortly before going out of office, removed the post office from the returns in New York to the Dutch church, and an increased cost for rent of $4,400 per annum. All these facts appear from the books and papers of the Department, which also show the fact that between July 1, 1847, and May 19, 1849, Mr. Morris paid over to the Department surplus commissions to the amount of more than thirty-three thousand dollars. It appears further, that Mr. Morris was subjected to a further expense out of his own funds, by the establishment of a city dispatch, under the orders of the Postmaster General, amounting to $2,331 51. The committee report that, in justice and equity, the legal representative of Mr. Morris should be paid the sum of $5,680, the amount paid by him for clerk hire, &c., for the year ending June 30, 1846. Also, the sum of $354 19, to make up for the same year the amount of $2,000, to which he was entitled by the act of 1825; and the sum of $2,331 51, being the amount paid by Morris for the city dispatch office during the year ending June 30, 1846.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, whether this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. COLFAX. It is. One member of that committee went to the Old Department, examined the papers in the case, and found that the claim was unquestionably just.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES PORTERFIELD'S REPRESENTATIVES.

A bill (H. R. No. 243) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased.

Mr. STANTON. That case was reported to the last House and discussed. A vote was taken on it, and the bill was defeated by ten majority—the vote being, I think, 78 to 88. I understand that the claim ought not to pass; and it is hardly worth while to take up time in reading the report.

The CHAIRMAN. If the bill be objected to, it is not necessary to have the report read.

Mr. STANTON. I object.

DR. GEORGE YATES.

A bill (H. R. No. 244) for the relief of the heirs of Dr. George Yates.

Mr. CURRY. Interest for about sixty years is provided for in that bill. I object.

MARYETT VAN BUSKIRK.

A bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of Maryett Van Buskirk.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Maryett Van Buskirk, out of any moneys in the Treasury, the sum of $20,367, in full payment for the claim for furs, grain, cattle, and other supplies furnished to the American army by the late Thomas Van Buskirk, deceased, of Bergen county, State of New Jersey, during the revolutionary war.

The report was read. It appears therefrom that Maryett Van Buskirk is the lineal descendant of Thomas Van Buskirk, who was in his lifetime a citizen of Bergen county, New Jersey. That during the period of our revolutionary struggle he was a wealthy farmer and grazier, and a man of great influence. The evidence before the committee shows that he was one of the most ardent Whigs of the Revolution, and in a community where a large part of the population was hostile to the American cause. It further appears, from the evidence and certificates on file, that the American troops, at different times, under the command of Generals Wayne, Greene, and other officers, during the period ranging between the years 1777 and 1780, encamped at Harrington, (or Peramus, as sometimes called,) in said county and State. In the latter years—the winter of 1779–80—General Washington, with the main army, was encamped at Morristown, near by. When the committee state that as early as the year 1777 date the poverty and extreme wants of the army, and prostration of the credit of the Government, they state facts known to all men.

It abundantly appears by the evidence that from this time, while our army was in winter quarters at Valley Forge, until the year 1780, Thomas Van Buskirk was frequently applied to by the several officers commanding the American troops for supplies of cattle, horses, forage, grain, and other necessary articles, all of which he furnished; and he frequently purchased articles from others with his own money to enable him to supply the army. The difficult task of obtaining supplies at this time, and in a part of the State notoriously afflicted; the resort to force by our officers to obtain them, under the command of a resolution of Congress, are facts known in history. The evidence establishes the fact that it was during this time that the ancestor of the petitioner, Thomas Van Buskirk, furnished the supplies, and the evidence shows, with cheerfulness and accuracy, it is also proved that when the British had possession of Philadelphia in 1778, and Colonel Lee had been sent into New Jersey to carry off and destroy all that otherwise might fall into the hands of the enemy, in order to cut off their supplies, among those that suffered in this expedition was Thomas Van Buskirk, who cheerfully gave up what he had. It appears that he seldom was paid in money for his property, but instead received certificates, executed by the several officers in command, as proved by the depositions of parties who saw the officers sign many of the same. One of the witnesses examined on the 1st of December, 1854, says that he was then ninety-six years of age, and that he saw Colonel Lee subscribe two of the certificates, and that he saw the property destroyed, and the objects of the expedition accomplished.

It is satisfactorily proved that the amount of supplies of every kind thus furnished by Thomas Van Buskirk to the American army, with those destroyed by Colonel Lee, amounted to the sum of $30,367, which is covered by the bounty of the American Government, and remains unpaid. Thomas Van Buskirk died in March, 1811, while the country was yet poor, without having presented his claim for payment. He had been several times requested to do so by his friends, but he declined, assigning as his reason that the country had not recovered from the embarrassments occasioned by the struggle for independence, and that it required the money more than he did; at the same time, he expressed his conviction that the debt would, at a future day, be paid to his heirs.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I would like to ask the gentleman who reported this case, whether it is a unanimous report of his committee. I ask him further, whether the certificates to which this report alludes were presented to their inspection, and the report avers that they all cover this sum of $30,367.

Mr. BRIGGS. In answer to my colleague, I will say that the committee was unanimous on the report in this case, and that the papers were before the committee.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

HEIRS OF MAJOR JOHN RIPLEY.

A bill (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of the heirs of Major John Ripley.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of the late Major John Ripley, of the town of Windham, in the State of Connecticut, the sum of $3,000, the commutation pay due for the services of Ripley in the war of the Revolution.

The report shows that Major John Ripley, late of Windham, Connecticut, was commissioned as captain in the continental army on the 6th of July, 1775, and served as such in Colonel Jrdiah Huntington's regiment, in the war of the Revolution, until the 18th of December, 1775, at which time, in May, 1776, he was appointed as captain in Colonel Ward's regiment, and continued in that regiment until the 15th of February, 1777, on which day he was commissioned by the Continental Congress as major. He was afterwards assigned to the command of four companies in the continental army. Major Ripley continued in the service as such until June, 1778, when he became supernumerary on the reduction of the regiments in the Connecticut line from six to two. He was again called into service as major on the 11th of June, 1778, and continued during the war of the Revolution.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

REPRESENTATIVES OF FRANCIS CHAUDONET.

A bill (H. R. No. 247) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Chaudonet.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the administrator of Francis Chaudonet, a lieutenant of General Harris's regiment, the half pay for life promised by the resolve of Congress of October 21, 1780: Francis Chaudonet having lived to the 6th of April, 1810.

The report of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims states that it appears, from the balloting-book of military service in the war of the Revolution for the State of New Jersey, that Francis Chaudonet served as a lieutenant in General Hazen's regiment of Canadians, and that he drew lands from the State, equal to the amount allowed to such officers as served to the end of the war. It also appears from the testimony of a soldier who served in the regiment of New Jersey, who was well acquainted with Chaudonet, that he served through the entire war. It appears also from the Treasury Department, that Chaudonet did not receive his commutation, or half pay, promised by the resolves of Congress of October 21, 1780, and March 22, 1781. In view of that the officer never received the commutation or half pay, the committee are of opinion that the officer was justly entitled to the half pay promised by the resolve of October 21, 1780; and they report a bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

BRIGADIER GENERAL THOMPSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 248) for the relief of the legal representatives of Brigadier General William Thompson.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the administrator, or legal representative of Brigadier General Thompson, widow of Brigadier General William Thompson, the seven years' half pay promised by the resolve of Congress of August 24, 1780.

The report was read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand, from the testimony of the witnesses to this case, that it is proposed to give to General Thompson's representatives the benefit of that resolution, which requires a service to the end of the war. He died before the close of the war, and therefore was not within the resolution, of course. I cannot consent to the bill, unless it passes with this change.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

CHARLES PORTERFIELD—AGAIN.

Mr. STANTON. I objected to bill No. 243, for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HAARIS,] I will consent that the bill may be reported to the House, with the understanding that if it gets into the House the report shall be read, explanations made, and a vote taken upon it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I assent to that.

Mr. STANTON. I do not want it taken into the House, and the previous question moved on it.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

DECEASED CUSTON-HOGE CLERKS.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I withdrew my objection on the same terms to bill No. 253, for the relief of the legal representatives of five deceased clerks in the Philadelphia custom-house.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

CHILDREN OF COLONEL PHILIP JOHNSTON.

A bill (H. R. No. 249) for the relief of the orphan children of Colonel Philip Johnston.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William H. Johnston, administrator of the estate of Rachel B. Johnston, widow of Colonel Philip Johnston, for the benefit of the orphan children of Colonel Philip Johnston and Rachel B. Johnston, the seven years' half pay promised by the resolves of Congress of May 15, 1778, and the 24th August, 1780, after deducting the sum of $1,612 66, heretofore paid.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would like to ask how it is that the bill is a partial and not an entire payment in this case?

Mr. WINSLOW. I would like to pass that bill over for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is objected to. Mr. WINSLOW. I do not object to it; but I would like to look at the bill. The same course was pursued in reference to bill No. 233.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be passed over for the present.

REPRESENTATIVES OF LOUIS MARNEY.

A bill (H. R. No. 250) for the relief of the legal representatives of Captain Louis Marney.

The bill and the report were read.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think that bill ought to be looked further into; and I therefore object.

COLONEL PHILIP JOHNSTON—AGAIN.

Mr. WINSLOW. I now withdraw my objection to House bill No. 249, for the relief of the orphan children of Colonel Philip Johnston, and offer the following amendment:

Provided, however, That the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to said Johnston in person, or to such agent or attorney as shall appear to the accounting officers of the Treasury to be in nowise interested in said sum or in any part thereof.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It will be remembered that I called upon some one to explain why it was that there was a partial payment in this case, and I desire that information now. It was half paid, according to the report. Now, I want to know how it was that the Federal Government paid a part and not the whole of that claim? I have no wish to obstruct the claim, but I shall object unless I can have that information.

Mr. WINSLOW. I know nothing about it. I cannot state the principle of this amendment to apply to every case as far as it can be done.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object to the bill.

CLEMENT GOSSELIN.

A bill (H. R. No. 251) for the relief of the heirs of Clement Gosselin. [Objected to by Mr. CRAWFORD.]

BASIL MIGNAULT.

A bill (H. R. No. 252) for the relief of the surviving children of Basil Mignault.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The report in that case is as long as the moral law; and as the reading may prevent the action of the House upon some more meritorious claims, I object.

CAPTAIN SAMUEL MILLER.

A bill (H. R. No. 253) for the relief of the heirs of Captain Samuel Miller. [Objected to by Mr. ANDERSON, of Massachusetts.]

JOHN BAPTISTE LABONTE'S HEIRS.

A bill (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of the heirs and descendants of John Baptiste Labonte, a captain in the revolutionary war. [Objected to by Mr. LOVEJOY.]

LIEUTENANT WILLIAMS'S REPRESENTATIVES.

A bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of the legal representatives of Lieutenant Thomas Williams, a revolutionary officer. [Objected to by Mr. UNDERWOOD.]

Mr. WINSLOW. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. TAPPAN. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that motion. Let us go on with the Calendar.

Mr. WINSLOW. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. CRAIGIE, of North Carolina. I renew the motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 65, upon the motion; no quorum voting.

Mr. TAPPAN. Before the committee rise, I will ask them to allow the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw his objection to the bill for the relief of the heirs of Dr. George Yates.

Mr. CURRY. I am willing to withdraw my objection if an amendment striking out the interest is agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. I object to that bill.

The question was again put on Mr. CRAIGIE's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. PREBLE] reported that the Committee of the Whole House had according to order had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had directed him to report to the House (some with and some without amendments) bills of the following titles:

A resolution (S. No. 11) for the relief of Commander H. J. Hartstone, of the United States Navy.

A bill (H. R. No. 229) for the relief of William Brown.

A bill (C. C. No. 93) for the relief of Lydia Frazee, widow and administratrix of John Frazee, late of the city of New York.

A bill (C. C. No. 92) for the relief of Mariano G. Vallejo.

A bill (H. R. No. 230) for the relief of Shadrach Calloway.

A bill (H. R. No. 31) for the relief of Charles Knapp.

A bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Isaac S. Smith, of Syracuse, New York.

A bill (H. R. No. 232) for the relief of the legal representatives of five deceased clerks in the Philadelphia custom-house.

A bill (H. R. No. 235) for the relief of congressional township two north, of range nine west, of the fourth principal meridian, in Adams county, State of Illinois.

A bill (H. R. No. 239) for the relief of George F. Brout.

A bill (C. C. No. 82) for the relief of Charner T. Seale, administrator of Gilbert Salkner.

A bill (C. C. No. 12) for the relief of Moses Noble.

A bill (H. R. No. 242) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York.

A bill (H. R. No. 243) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased.

A bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of Maryett Van Buskirk, heir of Thomas Van Buskirk.

A bill (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of the heirs of Major John Ripley.

A bill (H. R. No. 247) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Chaudonet.

Mr. WINSLOW. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. COLFAX. On that motion, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TAPPAN. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his motion until the bills from the Committee of the Whole have been acted on.

Mr. WINSLOW. Very well; I will withdraw it, but will renew it again presently.

Mr. TAPPAN. I now call the previous question upon all the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BURNETT. I rise to a question of order. There is no rule of this House by which the previous question can be called upon more than one bill at a time. I have no objection to the previous question being asked upon all the bills of Claims bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House; but I object to its being called upon all the bills reported.

Mr. TAPPAN. I suggest, then, that the bills be read over, and the previous question called upon such as no objection is made to.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection to that course.

The SPEAKER. That will be the course, there being no objection.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the titles of the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BURNETT. I demand separate votes on the bill for the relief of the legal representatives of five deceased clerks in the Philadelphia custom-house; on the bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased; on the bill for the relief of the heirs of Major John Ripley, and on the bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Chaudonet.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call for the previous question on all the bills upon which no separate votes are reported.

Mr. STANTON. Amendments have been reported to some of the bills from the Committee of the Whole; and I suppose it is understood that the previous question is called upon the action of the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. FLORENCE. That is my motion.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under the operation thereof, the report of the Committee of the Whole House, excepting the bills upon which separate votes were asked, was concurred in.

Mr. WINSLOW moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DECEASED CUSTOM-HOUSE CLERKS.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote is asked upon the bill (H. R. No. 233) for the relief of the legal representatives of five deceased clerks in the Philadelphia custom-house, reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

CHARLES PORTERFIELD, DECEASED.

The SPEAKER. The next bill upon which a separate vote is asked, is House bill No. 243 for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased.

Mr. STANTON. If the House will permit me, I will, in five minutes, say all I have to say upon the bill. If it is not the wish to go on now, let the bill go over. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. Speaker, the claim is for land scrip for some six thousand acres of land. Charles Porterfield was entitled, under the laws of Virginia, to land warrants for service in the revolutionary war. By those laws these land warrants were to be located in what was called the Territory of Virginia, and which now includes the States of Kentucky and Ohio. Land warrants were issued under those laws, and a proportion of them were located in Virginia and Ohio. It is said that the warrants, for which scrip is now proposed to be issued, were located upon lands in the State of Kentucky, which Porterfield lost in consequence of a prior entry and survey in favor of George Rogers Clark. From my knowledge of these military land warrants, I know that, under the laws of Virginia and the United States, where a party loses his location in consequence of a prior location and survey, he is entitled to withdraw his warrants. By an act of 1825, the lands which were subject to location by Virginia bounty land warrants were ceded to the United States, and the holders of Virginia bounty land warrants, upon their presentation at the Pension Office, were entitled to have them converted into land scrip. Now, I can see no reason in the world, if the land warrants of Charles Porterfield have not been satisfied, why they cannot be withdrawn and converted into land scrip.

Mr. BURNETT. I am not in favor of the claim; but I will say that, by the construction given to the act of 1825, these parties are prevented from locating these warrants.

Mr. WINSLOW. Then, why is it not proper that these men should have their claim allowed?

Mr. BURNETT. If I had time I could tell you why.

Mr. STANTON. The law of 1825 authorizes the Commissioner of Pensions, or the Secretary of the Interior, I do not remember which, to take certain action in regard to the military warrants which may be presented to him. I understand very well that there is a great deal of difficulty in getting a great number of Virginia bounty land warrants converted into scrip for the reason that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized by the law of 1825 to call for proof of the validity of the claim upon which the warrants were issued.

Mr. BURNETT. I understand the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior is founded upon lapse of time, and that his construction of the act of 1825 is based upon the opinion of the Attorney General.

Mr. STANTON. The act of 1825, after some controversy, had been decided to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to revise the proofs upon which warrants were issued by authority of the State of Virginia. The truth was, I think, that under those laws of Virginia, authorizing land warrants to be issued, there were warrants issued and used to cover the claims of the military men of all the States of the Confederacy; and there is not an end of them yet. And in consequence of the continuance of applications, it was thought there ought to be an authority vested in the Secretary of the Interior to take proof as to the validity of the claim upon which the warrants were issued. This is a controversy going on now between the authorities of the State of Virginia and the United States, as to the construction of that law. The authorities of Virginia claim that upon the allowance being made by the authorities of the State, the Federal Government could at once, upon the credit of the State, to convert those warrants into scrip, under the act of 1825.

Sustained by the opinion of the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior holds himself authorized to call for proof of the validity of the warrants. That is the difficulty, as I understand it, in this case. I understand that this bill is intended to exempt the heirs of Charles Porterfield from the necessity of procuring the proofs required by the act of 1852.

These are briefly the reasons why I am opposed to the passage of this bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the previous question upon the passage of this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. I hope the gentleman will not call the previous question, but allow the bill to go over to another day.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. WINSLOW. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The yeas and nays were called for and refused. Mr. DAWES called for tellers upon the motion to adjourn over.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BEVINGTON and FLORENCE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas eighty-four, nays not counted.

Sober House determined that when it adjourns, it will adjourn to meet on Monday next.

CHARLES PORTERFIELD—AGAIN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I again move the previous question upon the bill for the relief of the heirs of Charles Porterfield.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his demand for the previous question, in order that I may make a few remarks upon the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will withdraw it for a few moments.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as the Representative of the claimants under this bill, I beg the indulgence of the House to hear me for a moment. Sir, I was reared and live in the midst of the heirs and descendants of that gallant officer, Charles Porterfield. I know them to be honest and just men, of the highest sense of honor and the strictest integrity; men whose labor merited a right, in some way to know how, evidence conclusive of the justice of their demand. I shall not detain the House by going into the dry details of this bill—for it is presumed that every member understands it—but I wish simply to say that it commends itself to all serious and all parties, and that this is the only young officer who, in the summer of 1775, left his native country of Jefferson, in Virginia, and passed over that memorable rock at Harper's Ferry, so eloquently and touchingly described by my honorable friend and colleague, [Mr. BOTELLS.] To him I will not appeal for his support. I will not thank him for it; for that blood-stained rock speaks in tones more eloquent and effective than anything I can say. [Applause.] To the members of Massachusetts and New England, to whose relief he died in that serious moment, I appeal with every confidence that I shall receive rather than doubt, [applause.] and to you, gentlemen, of the sunny South, to the sons of the old Palmetto, on whose soil the gallant young officer fell, I appeal. Yes, I appeal to that chivalry which has ever distinguished her sons, and I feel confident that it will not be wanting now in doing honor to the memory of a brave young officer who fell in defense of her rights and liberties, and in doing a simple act of justice to his heirs and representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say, except I hope it will be the pleasure of every member of the House to vote for this bill.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BURNETT. I call for a division of the House upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. HERNETT and TRAIN.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 67, nays 44; no quorum voting.

Mr. STANTON called for the yeas and nays.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HICKY, their Chief Clerk, notifying the House that that body had passed a bill (No. 329) in relation to the return of undelivered letters in the post office, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House; that the Senate had passed without amendment House bill No. 326, to establish certain post routes in the Territory of Kansas; and also that the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House bill No. 192, authorizing the corporation of Washington city to make a loan and issue stock for $200,000 for building a market-house, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at half past four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned till Monday next.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 26, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GURLEY. The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 29th of February, a statement showing the number and location of the marine hospitals; the number of seamen or patients admitted into each, from 1854 to 1859, inclusive, in each year; the number and compensation of the persons employed in each; and the total expenditure at each hospital for each of the years aforesaid; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. GRIMES to print the report was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BIGLER presented the petition of Rice, Baird & Heclner, contractors for furnishing marble for the Capitol extension, praying Congress to prevent a threatened violation of their contract by the Secretary of War, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Mr. KING presented a petition of Joseph M. Price and others, citizens of New York, praying Congress to pass a law to prevent all further traffic in and monopoly of the public lands of the United States, and that they be laid out in lots and lots of limited size, for the free and exclusive use of actual settlers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the memorial of the Mayor and Council of the city of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, praying the confirmation of certain land claims; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CLAY presented a petition of inhabitants of township eighteen, range four east, in the county of Marengo, in the State of Alabama, praying a grant of land scrip equal to the value of the sixteenth section of that township, which was set apart and disposed of for the encouragement and cultivation of the vine and the olive; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of merchants of Detroit, Michigan, praying an extension to lake commerce of the same limits to the liabilities of ship owners and others as are in force on the ocean; and that in cases of collision, the vessel trespassing, or at fault, shall only be held liable for damages, and not the individual owners thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ANTHONY presented a memorial of Edward Larned, of New York, submitting a method for building a railroad to connect the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States by the present railroad companies of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CRITTENDEN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Stewart MacGowan, on the floor of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of C. Champ and others, praying a grant of land to the heirs of those who, if living, would be entitled to bounty land, for services in the war of 1812, and in the Indian wars, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Mary J. Malloy, praying to be allowed a pension as widow of the late Lieutenant James West, of the Army, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 310) for the relief of Mary J. Malloy. The bill was read, and passed by a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Colonel William Gates, of the United States Army, praying to be indemnified for losses sustained by the destruction of his property on board the steamship San Francisco, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of the officers and soldiers who sustained loss by the disaster to the steamship San Francisco. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

DOCUMENT REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. YULEE, it was Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, the correspondence on file in that Department, in relation to the obstruction of streets, avenues, and public navigation in the city of Washington, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BROWN. There is a vacancy on the Committee on the District of Columbia, occasioned by the resignation of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON.] The committee meet to-morrow, and it is important to have the vacancy filled. I move that the Vice President be authorized to fill it. The motion was agreed to; and Mr. CLINGMAN was appointed.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MALLOY. The Senator from Maine, whom I do not see in his seat, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] has handed me an amendment to the naval pay bill, and I presume he desires it to be printed. It is necessary it should be done. It is very long, I move, therefore, that the substitute be printed. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHESNUT. The special committee to whom was referred the matter of the Houmas grant made a report a few days ago, and submitted a motion to print certain documents. In behalf of the committee, I now also move to print the argument and statement of Louis Janin, counsel for certain claimants, with the papers, for the information of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITCH subsequently, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Attorney General on the Houmas land claim, and also a motion to print the statement of Louis Janin, counsel for certain claimants, and also a claim, as an appendix to the report of the subject committee on the Houmas land claim, reported in favor of printing the same as an appendix to the report; which was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution of the Senate (No. 11) for the relief of Commander H. J. Harstene, of the United States Navy.

The message further announced that the House concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 19) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels," approved March 3, 1855, for the better protection of female passengers, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 229) for the relief of William Brown; A bill (No. 230) for the relief of Lydia Frazee, widow and administratrix of John Frazee, late of the city of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 92) for the relief of Mariano G. Valhjo;

A bill (No. 230) for the relief of Shade Calloway;

A bill (No. 31) for the relief of Charles Knapp;

A bill (No. 231) for the relief of Isaac S. Smith, of Syracuse, New York;

A bill (No. 233) for the relief of the legal representatives of five deceased clerks in the Philadelphia Custom-house;

A bill (No. 235) for the relief of congressional township two north, of range nine west, of the fourth principal meridian, in Adams county, State of Illinois;

A bill (No. 236) for the relief of John Dixon;

A bill (No. 239) for the relief of George P. Brott;

A bill (C. C. No. 82) for the relief of Charles T. Seafie, administrator of Gilbert Stalker;

A bill (C. C. No. 12) for the relief of Moses Noble;

A bill (No. 242) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York;

A bill (No. 245) for the relief of Maryett Van Buskirk, heir of Thomas Van Buskirk;

A bill (No. 16) for the relief of Lot Hall; and

A bill (C. C. No. 96) for the relief of William Geiger.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. GWIN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 84) to facilitate communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electric telegraph. It is a very important measure.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. Is the motion to take up the bill for consideration?

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir; it is up now, and we can get through with it, I hope, before the appropriation bill will be taken up. I am in favor of taking up the appropriation bill, which the Senator intends to call up to-day.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall wait till one o'clock, and then move to take up the appropriation bill. The Senate, as the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 84) to facilitate communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electric telegraph, which had been reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the subject, which was contained in the proceedings of Thursday last.

Mr. GWIN. I have but little to say in favor of this bill. The Senate very well knows the great importance of establishing a communication across the continent. The passage of the bill has placed the control of the telegraphic lines throughout the United States in various sections. They have agreed upon the plan of connecting the Atlantic and Pacific by telegraph under the measure which was presented, and which has been reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The compensation has been put at the very lowest amount that it was supposed possible for a work of such importance could be undertaken for. I hope, inasmuch as a measure of this kind passed the Senate some years ago by a very large majority, it will not be necessary to go into an enlarged discussion in regard to it.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend the bill, by striking out of the second section all after the word "distance" in the thirteenth line, in the following words:

And contracts for their services, to be held by the State to purchase such lands as may be necessary to the construction during the term aforesaid, at the rate of $1 25 per acre.

The purpose of this provision is evidently to confer a right of preemption on the gentleman on whom the privilege is conferred of constructing this telegraph line. If I understand anything of the topography of that country, if they be permitted to take a preemption right on quarter sections of land through the gorge of the mountains, it will preclude the possibility of ever being able to build a railroad through them unless you shall first acquire the title from this company on whom you now confer the title to this land. I do not wish to put any future company that may be organized for the purpose of constructing a Pacific railroad in that dilemma. I do not wish them to be compelled to buy, at such exorbitant rates as this telegraph company might impose on them, the right to pass through these lands, which are now public.

Mr. GWIN. I have not observed particularly the Senator's amendment, but I think they have only this right to one quarter section for every fifteen miles.

Mr. GRIMES. Fifteen miles on an average throughout the whole route, the bill says. Their line may be seventeen hundred miles long, for aught I know, and they can take those lands in certain quarter sections, provided they do not take a number exceeding one quarter section in every fifteen miles. I observe further, that they have a right to occupy during ten years any quantity of land that may be deemed necessary by the quarter sections of their company, in addition to this right to purchase under preemption these quarter sections.

Mr. GWIN. The object in drafting the bill in this particular was to give them the right to enter, within a period of ten years, a quarter section at the rate of not more than fifteen miles each. I think that is the wording of the bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. Make it "not less than fifteen miles apart."

Mr. GRIMES. That is not the bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. We can have it so; make it "not less than fifteen miles apart."

Mr. GWIN. I am willing to put it in such form that they shall not take quarter sections nearer than fifteen miles to each other. That was the object in drawing the bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The amendment which the Senator proposes, I think suggests, it seems to me, a necessary one. His objection is, that even if this telegraph company only purchase a quarter section in every station for fifteen miles, if the line of the railroad happens to pass through those quarter sections, (and in certain mountain passes will be absolutely essential probably to pass through them,) this telegraph company can impose any amount they please for the privilege of passage.

Mr. GWIN. I shall not object to its being stricken out. I do not want any monopoly. I only want them to have the right of occupation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. YULEE. I propose, in the first section, and wherever afterwards the same words occur—and I make this motion by direction of the committee—to strike out the words "the Postmaster General" and substitute "the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. GWIN. The object of the amendment is, that this compensation shall not be paid out of the Post Office funds, but out of the general Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNFORD. I wish to offer an amendment to the first section. There is no limitation as to the amount of charges which these persons may impose; and I desire to offer an additional proviso to the first section:

And provided also, That such charges shall not exceed four dollars for a single dispatch of ten words, with the usual proportionate reduction upon dispatches of greater length.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. There is no section of the bill which I do not altogether like. It is the third section. The bill begins by authorizing a contract not exceeding $50,000 per annum. The third section provides that whenever the price of the Government's dispatches exceed $50,000 per annum, the Government shall pay the excess; so that at the beginning, when the Government's dispatches will probably only amount to but five, ten, or fifteen thousand dollars per annum, we are to pay $50,000; but if they increase after the company is established, and established with the money of the PEOPLE, then the Government is to pay the excess. I do not think that is necessary to the bill. I should like to have an explanation of its necessity.

Mr. GWIN. The great advantage to the Government that will result from the establishment of this telegraph, saving probably millions of dollars in military communications and other Government purposes, was looked upon by the committee as an equivalent to the $50,000 a year. If, in the progress of time, the Government's dispatches exceed this amount of $50,000, especially with the limitation which has been put on the charges by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, it would seem to be proper for the Government to pay the additional expense, with the exception named in the bill, of the dispatches for the Coast Survey, the National Observatory, and the Smithsonian Institution. I think there can be no better appropriation of public money made than that. The Government dispatches may not amount to $50,000; but, in my judgment, they will never be less; and the Government has a right to connect all its military establishments in its contract up to a certain amount of line, and those dispatches have to be sent over without any additional expense.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I shall move an amendment. I am not satisfied with the explanation of the Senator from California. I think if we agree to pay by contract up to a certain amount, say $50,000, since that is the sum mentioned in the bill—we ought to have the use of the telegraph for that sum; for then, in point of fact, it would be built on this Government fund, and we ought not to subject the Government's treasury to any further charge, after having added those persons to build the line so that they can make money on it. I will move, in the sixth line of the third section, after the word "aforesaid," to insert the words "no charge shall be made for such excess."

Mr. GWIN. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. YULEE. In order to make that amendment effective, the words "the excess shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Of course the rest of the line ought to be stricken out, so as to insert the words I have proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor.) Those words will be stricken out.

Mr. BRAGG. There is one provision I should like to hear some explanation of from the Senator who introduced the bill, and that is in relation to the power given to the Secretary of War by the proviso to the first section. That proviso reads:

Provided, That the Government shall at all times be entitled to priority in the use of the line or lines, and the telegraph lines, and to be used by the Secretary of War, and line or lines by telegraph with any military posts of the United States, and to use the same for Government purposes.

That is a very broad power; one that I confess I am not willing to give to the Secretary of War; for it is to run telegraph lines all over the whole country. At least, that is the power here given.

Mr. GWIN. The object was to enable the Secretary of War to connect with this line in the interior, in the Rocky Mountain States, and in the country, all the military posts, so that he could run, at the expense of the Government, connecting lines from those military posts, in order to send dispatches over this line without any additional expense, and to be used by the other Government purposes. It seems to me it is one of the most important provisions of the bill for the benefit of the Government. He has no power to make this connection anywhere except for Government purposes alone. In the settled portions of the country, of course, the Secretary never would make any such connection.

Mr. BRAGG. It seems to me the power is an unlimited one, to incur any amount of expense that the Secretary may in his discretion deem necessary. For one, I am not willing to invest any Secretary of War with any such broad power as that. I would suggest to strike out the words "Secretary of War," and insert "the Congress of the United States;" or put some check on it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would suggest to the Senator that we may reach it by striking out a few words so as to limit it. I propose: "That the Government shall at all times be entitled to priority in the use of said line or lines, and shall have the privilege of connecting said line or lines by telegraph," &c., unless by the word "Government" there is understood the Executive Government; and then, I should be obliged to propose to insert the word "Congress."

Mr. BRAGG. Anything of that kind will suit me.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina, that it is altogether too great a power to put into the hands of the Secretary of War.

Mr. GWIN. I have no objection to providing that Congress shall have the power.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let it read: "and shall have the privilege of connecting such Congress," striking out the words "and that the Secretary of War;" and then it will read:

That the Government shall at all times be entitled to priority in the use of the line or lines, and shall have the privilege, when authorized by Congress, of connecting said line or lines by telegraph with any military post, &c.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to alter the phraseology of the amendment, so as to read: "when authorized by law."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I accept it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now desire to make this suggestion for the consideration of my colleague who offers the amendment. I had myself introduced this bill with the very words he has now proposed, after the word "War." Why will it not be better to let the section remain as it is and add the words moved by my colleague after the word "War." The Secretary of War, it seems to me, will be the appropriate officer under which any telegraph line to connect with this should be constructed. Let that section remain as it is, simply adding these words after the word "War." Then it will read:

That the Government shall at all times be entitled to priority in the use of the line or lines, and that the Secretary of War, when authorized by law, shall have the privilege, &c.

Let him be the person designated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The only difference would be that he might do it on his own responsibility.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the language as amended is an improvement, but that the whole proviso is radically wrong. It looks to the construction of telegraph wires, wherever it shall be deemed necessary to connect a military post with this great line of telegraph across the continent of the Government of the United States. It is better that we should leave such things generally to private enterprise. If it be useful to connect particular posts under an exigency which will require Government to undertake it, it can be brought forward and decided upon its merits; but this is a provision in anticipation, looking generally to the construction of telegraph lines by the United States. I think it is unsound in principle, and I shall object to the whole proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATHAM. I desire to offer an additional section.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire first to move to strike out the proviso before proceeding to another section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be in order.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out the proviso. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it as amended.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Provided, That the Government shall at all times be entitled to priority in the use of the line, or lines, and shall have the privilege, when authorized by law, of connecting said line, or lines, by telegraph, with any military post of the United States, and to use the same for Government purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out all after the word "lines," so as to strike out all that refers to branches, leaving the Government priority in the use of this line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

Mr. COLLAMER. I take it the Senator means to strike out down to the words "United States." Not the whole proviso, but down to the words "United States."

Mr. DAVIS. If we have no more lines, it is useless to provide how they shall be used. The words I propose to strike out are:

And shall have the privilege of connecting said line or lines by telegraph with any military post of the United States, and to use the same for Government purposes; and provided also, That said line, or lines, except such as may be constructed by the Government in connection said line or lines with the military posts of the United States, shall be open to the use of all citizens of the United States, during the term of the said contract, on payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches.

The Senator wishes to preserve the second proviso, and then amend the branches.

Mr. COLLAMER. The last expression, I understand, is that it shall be open to all people to use it. You do not wish to strike that out, I suppose.

Mr. DAVIS. It is so, anyhow. Strike out the words, "and shall have the privilege, when authorized by law, of connecting said line or lines, by telegraph, with any military posts of the United States, and to use the same for Government purposes." That is the first. Then, if it is the wish to preserve the other proviso, let us strike out the words "except such as may be constructed by the Government to connect said line or lines with the military posts of the United States." Striking out these two clauses removes the objection.

Mr. GWIN. I would suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that this is an important privilege reserved to the Government of making this connection; but they have to pass a law before they can do it. It is to come before Congress before the connection can be made; and I think it is guarded so as to meet the very object he has in view, and that is, to provide that power shall not be given to make these lines unless by Congress. I think the amendment of the Senator from Maine covers the case entirely; for it is to come before Congress before the connection can be made. The privilege is reserved to Congress, if it is hereafter looked on as important.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not wish to give a general invitation to the Government to commence the work of constructing telegraph lines. I do not wish so to provide as to allow some member to rise hereafter, and by authority of this law, to move an appropriation for connecting these lines, before it is to be wronged as it is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would call the Senator's attention to the fact, that in the case of all charters now granted by the State Governments to railroad companies, by State laws, they reserve the privilege of connecting other lines with them afterwards, for the simple reason that, unless it is reserved when the charter is given, when the road is built it becomes private property; and there can be no connection, unless with the consent of the corporation, except the right to do so is retained by the Government, because it is in the nature of the Government, as I understand it, that it is only intended to go that far—that is to say, to put it out of the power of this company, when they have constructed their line of telegraph, to prevent other lines from being connected with it, or to reserve terms which might be onerous as a condition for making such connection. It does not necessarily involve the idea that the Government are to pay other lines of telegraph, but assimilates this line of telegraph to lines of railroad that have been built with the consent of the Government is necessarily required. In this case, it becomes expedient that one line should be connected with this from another quarter, it is intended not to leave it wholly in the power of this company to say that it shall or shall not be done, or on what terms it shall be done. I esteem the reservation as an important one, connected with so very great a line as one from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean. I do not think it involves necessarily any such difficulty as the Senator seems to suppose.

Mr. DAVIS. If it were reduced merely to the privilege of connecting another company—which is hereafter to construct a telegraph, to connect with this, then it would be the case supposed by the Senator from Maine. That, certainly, is not the contemplation of this language. This is for the Government to connect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Undoubtedly; but perhaps that is the only way by which the right can be reserved. The Government cannot very well stipulate for a private company; and in case you undertake to do so, the objection would be made that it was not in the power of the Government to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. That being the purpose, it would be expressed in the usual language applied to railroads, and that is, that any other company making a branch road shall have the privilege of connecting with this.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That company is always chartered by the same Government.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not see how the Federal Government is going to charter a company, unless in the Territories.

Mr. FESSENDEN. To be sure they will not charter it, but grant the privilege over the public land, and that is practically the same thing.

Mr. DAVIS. It still returns to the same point. Within the limits of a State, the company must be chartered by the State, and all this Government can reserve or impose as a condition is, that this company shall allow other companies to connect with it, and that is clearly not the object of this language.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It effects that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say, moreover, that I never attached much importance to the provision, even in the case of railroads, for it would be a most stupid directory that would object to the connection of a branch, knowing that it must be a feeder to the trunk; and so of the directory of a telegraph who should object to the construction of a branch line, which would bring to it messages to pass over its line. That is hardly supposable. Therefore, I would not object to this in a railroad grant or a telegraph grant, if it were in the usual form. I do not find it so.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes ten; noes not counted.

Mr. GWIN. I desire to move an amendment to come in after the words that were inserted on motion of the Senator from Louisiana, "unless such excess shall be incurred in time of war," so that there shall be no excess over $50,000 paid, unless incurred in time of war. In the event of war, the line might be entirely taken up by the Government; and it would be absolutely necessary to pay for this excess, when the private patronage of the line would be taken away.

Mr. BRAGG. I hardly think that is sufficiently guarded. It says "in case such excess shall be incurred in time of war." Suppose we were at war with any European Power—Great Britain, for instance; if there was an excess of dispatches sent over the line, no matter how incurred, according to the amendment, we should have to pay.

Mr. GWIN. By the Government.

Mr. BRAGG. I am not at all concerned at all our hostilities with foreign nations.

Mr. GWIN. The Government might monopolize the line entirely. It has the first privilege of using the line, and it might take possession of the line in time of war for war purposes; and such a case, I think, would be a good one.

Mr. COLLAMER. The $50,000 proposed to be paid for subsidizing the line, it seems to me, will be of very little or no use to the Government at all in time of peace. The time of war is about the only time we shall have the use of to any great extent; but we are paying in time of peace in order that they may have the use of it, in case of necessity, in time of war. It is therefore right as it is.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask that my amendment be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War be and they are authorized to convey, free of charge, any material to be used in the construction of said telegraph line or (in any case of Governmental transport, whenever the same can be done without inconvenience or additional cost to the Government service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see any reason why, in addition to giving $50,000 a year, we should undertake to build the line.

Mr. LATHAM. The amendment says it is not to be at additional cost to the Government; and when the transports are going over this very line, if they are not filled with Government stores, if, without inconvenience or additional expense, they can carry the material, I do not see any objection to allowing them to do so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see how the transportation of materials over such a country can be made without costing something.

Mr. LATHAM. Very briefly; these transports going over the country are not always filled up with Government stores; and they might as well be filled as not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This will oblige them to take the material anyhow. There is no reason why we should build the line, and then pay for using it.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes ten; noes not counted.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend the first section by adding, in the twenty-fourth line, after the word "same," the words:

Unless said lands shall be required by the Government of the United States for railroad purposes; and provided, That no right to preempt any of the said lands under the laws of the United States shall inure to the said company, thereunto as servants, or to any other person or persons whatsoever.

Mr. HUNTER. It is now one o'clock. I did pursued; and the sections of the bill to which amendments are proposed will be read, together with the amendments proposed.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was in line fifteen, page 2, after the words "Argentine Confederation," to insert "Paraguay."

Mr. HUNTER. A mission to Paraguay was estimated for, and not agreed to by the House of Representatives; but I believe they were aware at the time that there was a minister from Paraguay here. The Senate is aware that we have had a difficulty with that country, which has been lately compromised and settled. Paraguay has a minister here, and the Secretary of State thinks there is good reason for returning the compliment, and sending a minister there. The Committee on Finance concur in that, and propose the appropriation.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I objected to a similar proposition made some year or two ago, by an amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance for a minister to Persia. If this were sending a mere commissioner abroad for a temporary purpose, I do not know that I should make the objection; but I think this extending of our foreign diplomatic corps to every country on the face of the earth, is getting to be a monstrous abuse. Now what is a minister to do at Paraguay? What are to be his duties? We are to have a minister to Paraguay at a permanent expense to the Government forever. We shall never get rid of him.

Mr. HUNTER. I think there is a great difference between establishing diplomatic relations with Persia, a country with which we have little or no trade, and with Paraguay. We have a deep interest in preserving friendly relations with all the South American States.

Mr. HUNTER. We are hoping to have the river Plate already, on which it is, and hope at some day to open up a trade with all those countries; and it seems to me, if it is proper to have a minister anywhere there—I do not say it is as proper in Paraguay as in Rio—but it seems to me that this is a place at which we ought to have a mission. However, it is in the power of the Senate to determine.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask the Senator from Virginia whether the gentleman here from Paraguay is not merely a commissioner to settle claims under the treaty, or whether he is to remain here as a permanent minister?

Mr. HUNTER. I understand from the Secretary of State that he is expected to remain as a permanent minister. That is my understanding.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The gentleman told me he expected to remain here but two or three years. He expected to study the country. He was here as a commissioner to settle claims under the treaty, but I did not understand from him that his Government expected to maintain a permanent mission here. I think we are going too far in this matter.

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot answer as to the intentions of the Government of Paraguay; but I suppose, from the Secretary of State who informed me on that subject, that this Government expects it to be a permanent mission. I may, however, be mistaken on that point.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Virginia speaks of our commercial relations with the Government of Paraguay. I ask him how extensive our trade is with that country? I suppose he is familiar with the subject.

Mr. HUNTER. We have no trade yet, but we are endeavoring to open one. We have an exploring expedition now exploring their rivers. We have already had a difference with the country, which has been settled.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have already very considerable interests in Paraguay; and certainly so long as our commercial affairs there are unsettled, and this commission is in existence, we ought to have some representative there.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance was, in lines fifteen and sixteen to strike out "$225,500," and insert "$304,000."

Mr. HUNTER. That will now be unnecessary. It was to make the amount of the appropriation for ministers' salaries correspond with the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance, to which the Senate has not agreed. This last amendment is therefore unnecessary.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in lines twenty-two and twenty-three, to strike out the words "secretary of the legation," and insert "interpreter"—after the word "interpreter," to insert "to the legation to China," so that the clause will read:

For salary of the interpreter to the legation to China, $5,000.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment was made for this reason: in line nineteen we have an appropriation for the secretary of the legation; but at the same time we have also an interpreter, whose salary is $5,000. The description is wrong. It now reads: "For salary of the secretary of legation to China, acting as interpreter." It is not a secretary of legation acting as interpreter; but he is a mere verbal amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in line twenty-seven, after the word "Japan," to insert the words:

From the 1st day of January, 1860, to the 1st day of July, to be paid, and for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1861.

So that the clause will read:

For compensation to the interpreter to the mission to Japan, from the 1st day of January, 1860, to the 1st day of July, to be paid, and for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1861, $2,500.

Mr. HUNTER. That is upon this estimate of the Secretary of State:

"I request that an appropriation of $2,750 may be made for compensation to the interpreter for the mission to Japan, for the same term, $1,250; and for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1861, $2,500."

Part of this is in the nature of a deficiency, the Secretary of State has already made last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in line forty-three, after the word "hundred," to insert the words "and twenty-five;" and in line forty-four, after the word "dollars" to insert "$75,000 of which is to be used in the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1860."

Mr. HUNTER. The history of that amendment is this: last year the estimate "for the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries" was $175,000. Congress gave $150,000.

It turns out that there is a deficiency which will probably amount to $25,000. The Department has already drafted which it has received, which there is no appropriation to meet. They ask for $75,000 deficiency for this fiscal year, and they estimate for $300,000 for the next year. The committee thought that this sum was growing so large that it would be better to appropriate the $150,000, which was done last year, for the next year, and to provide for the deficiency of this. That will give us time to look into this subject of expenditure, in regard to which it would seem some legislation is necessary. If it should turn out that the $150,000 is not enough they can ask a deficiency again for next year, as they do for this.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, after line forty-six to insert:

For expenses which may be incurred in acknowledging the arrival of the United States mail at the various receiving cities of the United States from shipwreck, $10,000.

Mr. HUNTER. That is the amount estimated, and the Department says that is the least sum that will meet the case. The House of Representatives struck it out. The amendment speaks for itself. I need not say anything to the Senate in regard to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in line sixty, after the word "Alexandria," to strike out the word "Hondas."

Mr. HUNTER. That was put in by mistake. It is a mere clerical error copying the words of the act. There is no consul there.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, after line one hundred and one, to insert:

For expenses incurred under instructions from the Secretary of State to the consuls in foreign countries persons charged with crime, and expenses incident thereto, $10,000.

Mr. HUNTER. That was an estimate from the Department of the Interior. Here is the estimate; I ask to have it read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, March 1, 1860.
SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th inst., and in reply to inform you that the Committee of Ways and Means, a copy of a communication addressed to Hon. JAMES A. HAYARD, chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, suggesting an appropriation for the payment of expenses incurred in the transportation of prisoners and witnesses sent home by our consuls from foreign countries, and to suggest that for the reasons therein assigned, an appropriation, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, may be made to carry the same into effect, as follows:

For expenses incurred under instructions from the Secretary of State in bringing home from foreign countries persons charged with crime, and expenses incident thereto, $10,000.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Interior.

Hon. JOHN HENRICKS, Chairman Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, February 29, 1860.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention, and that of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, to a communication upon pages 18 and 19 of my last annual report, a copy of which is annexed, in relation to the payment of expenses incurred in the transportation of prisoners and witnesses sent home by our consuls from foreign countries, and to suggest that for the reasons therein assigned, an appropriation, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, may be made to carry the same into effect, as follows:

For expenses incurred under instructions from the Secretary of State in bringing home from foreign countries persons charged with crime, and expenses incident thereto, $10,000.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Interior.

To Hon. JAMES A. HAYARD, Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, after line one hundred and five, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of State to defray the cost of a prison ship at Anson, China, from the 1st day of July, 1854, to the 1st day of January, 1857, and for compensation of the marshal of the consular court at Anson, from January 1, 1854, to the 1st day of January, 1857, $4,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HUNTER. That is, in effect, to appropriate for a deficiency. There was a failure to appropriate in those years to meet the purpose designated in the amendment, to pay the expenses of the prison ship at Anson.

The amendment was agreed to.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Finance Committee are disposed of.

Mr. HUNTER. There is another amendment that stands on the same ground as the one last adopted, sent to me after it was reported the bill. I have not had a chance to consult the committee; but it stands upon the same ground, and I ask general consent to offer it. If the committee object to it, they can say so, and I will withdraw it.

For compensation of the consuls at the five ports in China, to wit: Kwangchow, Amoy, Puchow, Ningpo, and Shanghai, from the 1st of July, 1855, to the 31st of December, 1856, $9,000.

It is the same deficiency, only providing for a different set of persons. Here is the estimate on which it is based, as it is to be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, February 23, 1860.

SIR: I have the honor to state that, by the eighteenth section of the act of August 11, 1846, to amend certain provisions in the treaties between the United States and China and the Ottoman Empire, giving certain judicial powers to ministers and consuls of the United States in those countries, it was provided that "in consideration of the duties hereon imposed upon the commissioner, there shall be paid to him out of the Treasury of the United States, annually, the sum of $4,000 in addition to his salary; and there shall be paid to him, in addition to his salary, for a like reason, the sum of $1,000, in addition to the consular fees."

In conformity with the provisions of the statute, appropriations were annually made until 1855, for compensation of the consuls at the five ports in China, viz: Kwangchow, Amoy, Puchow, Ningpo, and Shanghai, $5,000 annually.

Under the act of August 11, 1846, the act above mentioned.

The act of the act allowing this compensation was repealed by the twentieth and thirty-third sections of the act of August 18, 1856, which went into operation on the 1st day of July, 1856.

Indevitably, no estimate was made for the compensation of the commissioner and consuls in China, for judicial services, for the period of a year and a half, from July 1, 1855, to December 31, 1856, and no appropriation was accordingly made for this purpose. The services, however, under the provisions of the act above mentioned, by the Department, and treaty stipulations, continued to be rendered during the above-mentioned period by the commissioner and consuls, and they have claimed the compensation for which would have been paid but for the absence of an appropriation.

I respectfully recommend, therefore, that provision be made for an appropriation of $9,000, for this purpose, in the plomatic and regular appropriation bill now before the House of Representatives.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
LEW. CARB.
Hon. JAMES MASON, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended.
THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MASON. There was one amendment offered while I was out of the Senate, I understand, by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, appropriating for the salary for minister to Paraguay.

Mr. HUNTER. That can be offered as a separate amendment afterwards. That was rejected.

Mr. MASON. Very well.

The amendments made in as Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. MASON. I was not present when the amendment was offered, and I ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance if the appropriation was recommended by the Executive.

Mr. HUNTER. It was recommended by the Secretary of State. I had an interview with him. There is no written recommendation; but I had an interview with him on this subject, in which he put it in very concisely. It was estimated for, but the House left it out, and I went to see the Secretary of State in regard to it.

Mr. MASON. We know from the history of the country that the Government of the United States, I think with great wisdom and propriety, has prosecuted a series of explorations in the waters of the Plate river for the last four or five years, with a view to the extension of our commerce. We know that within the last two or three years some American citizens, I think from Rhode Island chiefly, who had gone into Paraguay, at the invitation of the President of Paraguay, and made large investments there, were maltreated and driven off, and other injuries done to American citizens who were there; and our flag was insulted, with the loss of life of one man, which resulted in the expedition by which a treaty of amity and commerce was made with the Government of Paraguay, and full indemnity provided for all injuries sustained by American citizens, and every avenue opened to us, so far as that, which is one of the important States bordering on the Plate and its tributaries, is concerned. I have not held any official intercourse or conversation with the Executive upon the subject of this mission; I have thought it was desirable to have such a mission, and I think it would be undesirable now to discourage, disaffect, or throw cold water on the relations that are growing up between the United States and that Government, by the refusal of this minister, and the more especially as there is now in our country a minister from Paraguay, who has arrived within the last few days, and who brought with him a commission for the purpose of sustaining American claims under the convention made by Commissioner Bowlin. I move the amendment which the chairman of the Finance Committee before presented for an appropriation to that mission.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which is, in line fifteen, after the words "Argentine Confederation," to insert "Paraguay;" and in line fifteen and sixteen to strike out "$295,500," and insert "$204,000."

Mr. CRITTENDEN. That is to include a minister to Paraguay?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I would inquire of the chairman of the committee whether we have any consuls to Paraguay?

Mr. MASON. We have a consul there.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I shall vote against this amendment. I think one of the evils and one of the burdens of the day is the multiplicity of our ministers abroad and the multiplicity of treaties. They are almost overwhelming in their number. I do not wish to add to the expense or to the number by sending a minister, at an expense of eight or ten thousand dollars a year, to Paraguay. We have a consul there through whom, it seems to me, we can keep up all the civilities and courtesies that are necessary between this Republic and the Republic of Paraguay, and keep on very good terms with her. It has not seemed to me that our quiet and good understanding with foreign nations, particularly with the small Governments of South America, has at all corresponded with the number of our ministers. Each and every one of them seems to have an ambition to negotiate. He must be something. He must come loaded with a short time, and he must bring along with him some title to the nation's attention, and to some degree of renown; a treaty he must have, or his time has been misapplied; and in making that treaty, he is as apt as not to get into one or two little quarrels.

I think, therefore, our peace will be best preserved with nations of this description by consuls, who, having no diplomatic ambition, no ambition to raise little nines in order that petty titles may follow, will be willing to act as mediators in respect to all due civilities and courtesies. I am totally opposed to the multiplication of this class of officers. Often, and very often, with many honorable exceptions, these appointments may be considered, I think, very much in the character of a sort of out-of-door relief given there to poor nines, he said; here, we may say, to unfortunate politicians. I want to see no multiplication of that class. I think the expenditure is too large, and I hope the amendment will not be made.

Mr. HAMLIN. From the conversation which is elicited around me, and which is not heard in the Senate, I take it the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia is not very favorably received here. Still, sir, I have no opinion upon that point, and am very decidedly of the opinion that the amendment ought to prevail. Taking the whole range of our diplomatic relations, I do not know but that I would concur with the Senator from Kentucky, and say that consuls and consulates might do about as much good in the various offices that now devolve upon officers of a higher grade. I do not know that I would not concur with that Senator in a radical reformation of the whole system; but I am not quite certain that his remarks are not as applicable to the consular system as they are to the diplomatic point to which he alludes—the South American Republics.

Now, sir, I am in favor of this amendment, because I believe it will be really beneficial to the commercial interests of this country. It is constantly suggested a treaty with Paraguay, and, in my judgment, a proper deportment on the part of our Government and a kind of reciprocity in treatment—they have sent a minister here—will give to us, and ought to give us, the commerce of all the South American Republics. We are much nearer to them than are the European States. We ought to commend their commerce, if we are on equal terms with other Powers, from proximity, from the difference in freight, from the difference in time which it will take to communicate between us and them, and between them and the European Governments. We ought to have it, and I think we have lost it to a very great extent, unfortunately, and have not extended it for a variety of reasons.

Things having received here an officer of this grade from the Government of Paraguay, we ought to reciprocate by sending an officer of the same grade of our own there. I believe that if we only cultivate the relations we ought to cultivate with all the Republics in that region, by sending proper adequate and suitable officers there, we can open up a very large trade with them, and the very small amount which is stipulated here for that purpose, it seems to me, promises a very large return. These are the reasons which will induce me to vote for this amendment, if I vote at all.

Mr. MASON. The honorable Senator from Kentucky I could not hear very distinctly, because of his position; but I did understand from him that he thought the office of consul at this Republic, and many others, would suffice for the public service in conducting with them our diplomatic intercourse. That honorable Senator knows very well that a consul has no diplomatic power; that he has no relations whatever to the Government of the country where he resides; and that it is not in the power of the United States to bargain with diplomatic relations. A diplomatic officer is an officer known to the public law; he is not the creation of statute in any form; and it depends upon the public law, to which all nations are parties, whether they will or will not hold intercourse with any particular grade of officer who is sent to them. The usage of nations is such that they do not hold official intercourse, and cannot be made to hold it, with any but one who comes there in a diplomatic garb. That may be considered as very artificial, rather unmeaning and technical, but it is not within our reach. The Congress of the United States cannot vary any public officer with diplomatic functions but an officer of the grade, of the character known to the public law. What is our condition here with Cuba? We have a consul there; and we have attempted in vain to induce the Government of Spain to allow the colonial government in Cuba to hold official intercourse with our consul. All our public intercourse of every kind, affecting our relations to the Island of Cuba, has to be transacted with old Spain, through a public minister.

Now, in reference to this particular case, I would say, with all respect to the Senate, this; it results, therefore, that the public intercourse of the Government; and it is a part of the law of the Government—it is in the law of the Constitution—that the President of the United States, who holds the executive power, given to him as supreme—not named or limited, for the security of the country is vested in the President—constitutes one of the departments of the Government; and he is responsible to the American people for his management of that department, as the Legislature is responsible for its management of the legislative. As a result, therefore, that the public intercourse between this country and all other countries must be regulated and conducted by the Executive; and we have no power to restrain the President (unless by impeachment if he goes wrong, and that not in this branch, but in the other) further than his very ordinary and ordinary duties. The Executive can hold official public intercourse with a foreign nation, that requires money, unless we appropriate it.

Now, it is in the power of Congress, of course, if they believe as the honorable Senator from Kentucky, already stated, that the consular system is needless or superfluous, to withhold the appropriation, and that paralyzes the Executive arm; but I would submit respectfully, without any regard whatever to the politics that divide the country, and without any regard to the course of the times, to that, just the just, the decorous, the patriotic administration of the Government requires of each of the departments to give to the other, as far as it can exercise any restraint, a full opportunity to manage the department intrusted to him or them, as the case may be, under his or their own responsibility. I suspect there are few Senators on this floor who have less respect for the mere pageantry of diplomatic intercourse than I have; but I acknowledge the obligations of public law as they govern civilized society and civilized nations in their intercourse with each other. Therefore, with great courtesy to the honorable Senator from Kentucky, that nation is not recognized in any foreign nation as a medium of communication with the country from which he comes; and that a statute of the United States cannot give him with that power. Hence, we must have no public intercourse by the Government of the United States with the Government of Paraguay, or we must have it through a functionary known to the public law—the law of nations.

Then, as to the necessity of—I remain I may individualize myself as a very humble member of this body—the part of the country from which I come has as little interest in the subject as any other State in the Union. But the wealth of a nation depends on her commerce. All will agree to that. Her commerce and of no small consequence can be exchanged. I belong to a producing State. Other gentlemen belong to the commercial States, who make exchanges. I am one of those who consider it my duty, and it is my interest, in serving my constituents, by all legitimate, sound, and constitutional means to open up an extensive every avenue of commerce, of every character, for the purpose of exchanging the products of this country. We are the producers; others make the exchanges.

As I have said, the Government of the United States, for the last three or four years, under two Administrations, have employed a part of the naval service in very successful explorations of the great tributaries of the river Plate. It is a very rich country. Their principal, almost their exclusive, commerce has been with the European nations; their products are valuable; and the design and desire is, by getting the right of way up their rivers, (which has been a difficulty,) and the right to navigate and trade by them, by conventions, to stimulate our commerce into these channels. With the Government of Paraguay, as I have said, we have had a difficulty—a difficulty that, I presume very strongly, never would have occurred if we had had a functionary there of a public character capable of holding intercourse with that Government; but a difficulty which it cost us some half a million dollars, probably, to redress. We have opened the way for commerce. Our merchants will go there; our products will go; our people will go; and, on the score of economy, the salary which is to be paid to the minister, multiplied by a hundred ten times, would not more than reimburse the expense of a single expedition to redress the injuries to the commerce of the citizens of the United States, which may be prevented by holding official relations with them. The minister is now taxed by law for all ministers of that grade not fixed in the bill—$7,500. I think it would be injurious to withhold an appropriation for a minister to that country.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President, I thought that the indication of the sense of the Senate was so decided against the allowance of this mission, so far as the vote of the Senate could control it, that it would scarcely be renewed; and I should not have deemed it necessary to say anything further on the subject. I do not mean for a remark of the Senator from Virginia broaching a doctrine which has been previously broached in the Senate, and to which I cannot for a moment yield my assent, even by silence; and that is, that the Constitution of the United States contemplated the establishment by the President, without any controlling being exercised by, or any discretion being vested in, Congress) of any number of diplomatic missions abroad that he might think proper to initiate.

I admit, sir, that the President has the power to name ministers, to send diplomatic agents abroad; that it may frequently be very proper to do so during the recess of the Senate, or even pending the session of the Senate, in case of urgency and for particular business; but I do not admit that, by any just interpretation of the terms of the Constitution, power is vested in the President of the United States to establish permanent missions abroad at his discretion. The language of the Constitution is the same in relation to ministers as it is in relation to judges of the Supreme Court. It gives the President power, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States," &c.

The clause evidently places the judges of the Supreme Court and foreign ministers in the same category; that is to say, it has reference merely to the appointing power of the President, and does not at all contemplate a case of the initiation of missions any more than it would authorize the President of the United States, without the action of Congress, to nominate and appoint judges of the Supreme Court. I think that the construction is, that the President cannot, though he may send a minister abroad, is dependent upon the action of Congress for the pay of that minister; and although we might not hesitate at any time to refuse payment to a minister thus sent, we may very properly, in the exercise of our constitutional power, refuse to recognize a permanent mission abroad by refusing to consent to its appropriation. That is what I say in this instance. If the proposition was for a temporary minister abroad, as a matter of compliment to a sister Republic, I should not deem it necessary to say a word on the subject. The President, in such a case, I might deem the payment on the occasion, or however unnecessary the expense to be incurred, it would be a small matter. But, sir, we are increasing these foreign diplomatic appointments in a manner that is absolutely extravagant; and when these missions once take hold they never cease to multiply. I never stop at one instance. Some years ago, the Republic of Ecuador, which is possessed of, I think, some three or four hundred thousand inhabitants, the capital city of which is on the Andes—I believe the highest inhabited city on the globe—having one small seaport, to which we have a consul, sent us a minister here. He remained here for a year or two. It was considered proper, just as it is now in the case of Paraguay, to recognize this country, by naming a minister in return to the Republic of Ecuador. The relations between the countries for the last five or six years have been commercial relations, confined to the annual dispatch of a single vessel from the port of Guayaquil by our consul there, who is the only American merchant in the place. The Republic of Ecuador, poor, unable to keep up the expense of extensive foreign staff, withdrew at the end of two or three years, its minister here, because it was not able to pay his salary; but that has been no reason for our minister being withdrawn; he still remains in that Republic, living in Quito with nothing on the face of the earth to do but to receive the salary which we have agreed to, by treaty, by way of giving us knowledge that he exists.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Who is he?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not know who the present incumbent is. I know very well the gentleman who was there a few years ago, and that I myself paid a visit to Quito and saw him there—a very worthy, estimable gentleman, to whom I was indebted for kindly hospitalities—perfectly competent and able to represent the interests of the country, but having really, in my judgment, nothing to do; not seeing an American one in six months, and considering it a perfect godsend when a fellow-citizen came near him with whom he could exchange a few words in his native language. Yet there is the mission, and there it will remain, until some experiment is made. I appointed office-seeker or politician—out-door relief for a broken down politician, as the Senator from Kentucky says.

Now we are to establish a mission in Paraguay. What commercial relations have we with that country? It is a sterile, arid, desolate country. Is there any prospect of any? Yes, gentlemen say, we hope to have commercial relations with that country. How are commercial relations with that country to be promoted by having a minister residing there? In what way? Will a solitary merchant in the United States, if he sends a ship to trade with Paraguay, or send a steamer up the river, because we have a minister residing there? Is there one who will be influenced by that consideration? If the business to be done with Paraguay is a profitable business, the spirit of enterprise of our people is sufficient to procure their eagerness for legitimate gain is sufficient to induce them to engage in the business without the paraphernalia attendant on the establishment of a minister there.

What shall we get the minute a ship we will never get him away. Since I have been in the Senate, I have never seen a proposition from any quarter to discontinue any consularship, however unnecessary it may be, however useless it may have proved. Here is $7,500 a year. That is equivalent to an outright expenditure of $150,000. That is the interest on $150,000 at the rate at which Government borrows money. Is it worth it to $150,000 to put a minister in Paraguay? Can anybody say it is worth that? Is there any necessity for it? On the contrary, does not experience teach us that the Senator from Kentucky, as we well said, that we are more apt to get into quarrels; that there are more subjects for making little disputes about, with these ministers who have nothing to do, in small and remote States, than any advantage which can be gained, either directly or indirectly, by their presence. On that point, at this time we should exercise some control over our subject.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. HENRY] admits that the Committee on Finance, a few years ago, did propose a system of appropriation for a minister to Persia, with no support, but a single miserable seaport on the Persian gulf—no place at which our citizens had any communication at all—doing all its commerce by caravans across the desert. We were to have a minister there, to ride out with the Shah's officers, praise those officers, kiss them in the forehead, kiss the courtiers, and go back to the palace again, with nothing on earth to do; no commercial relations whatever—just as we have none now with Paraguay; just as we have none worth mentioning with Ecuador; just as we have none worth mentioning with Persia. I think it is a waste of the property States that I might name; if I had the list of our foreign ministers before me.

I think the House of Representatives has done wisely in refusing this appropriation. It is time to arrest our steps in this path. We all speak of economy, but Heaven knows I cannot imagine a subject in which expenditure is more utterly worthless than it is in this whole system of nominating foreign ministers to places where we have no relations whatever. I trust the Senate will persist in its refusal of this appropriation.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana is a little mistaken. Our relations with Ecuador are of greater importance than he imagines. The old Colombian Government embraced Ecuador, Venezuela, and New Granada. When they dissolved that government, they made a division of the territory into three Governments. New Granada assumed fifty per cent. of those obligations; Venezuela thirty-one and one half per cent.; and Ecuador twenty-eight and one half per cent. Our citizens have, to this day, more than three hundred thousand dollars of claims against the three Governments, to be all the proportion which I have named by the division and the agreement at the time of the dissolution of the Colombian Government. I hold it to be the duty of this Government to protect its citizens; and when our citizens, whose claims they may be on the northeastern coast, have in commercial enterprises, sustained losses, I hold myself responsible to assist in securing them adequate remuneration and redress. That redress has not yet been afforded. A portion of it has, but all has not. There is therefore every necessity for having a minister at Quito, the capital of Ecuador; there is a necessity for having one at Bogota, the capital of New Granada, which assumed fifty per cent. of the debt; and, besides all this, there is a commerce and a business, of which the Senator seems to be ignorant, which connects the commerce from Guayaquil, which comes up and crosses the isthmus at Panama, there is a large commerce across the plains and down the Cauca, to Magdalena, by Sabanilla, and by ship thence to New York. A part of the commerce is in what we call Panama hulk, but what is called the commerce, a large portion of it is in Peruvian bark as we call it, or Jesuit bark as they call it. There are various other articles of commerce. To pay for these things, cotton goods are shipped there and various articles of eastern manufactures. These are facts that I know to be true, but which the Senator, not knowing the claims of our citizens against those Republics, it is our duty to be properly represented, so as to get proper redress.

So far as Paraguay is concerned, all I have to say is that there is every necessity for having one in our Government and that. It was adjudged on honorable terms with the President, Lopez. It is our duty to meet his courtesies with the proper degree of respect. We can only do so by sending a minister of the same grade. When the Senator says that a minister once sent there has never recalled, and a ministry once established is never abolished, I have but to say to him, in this growing country, when a Territory is created, it is never abolished; we grow; we expand; we increase. As with our population; as with our commerce, so with our necessities. We grow; we expand; we increase; and it ought; and it is one of the strongest evidences of the continuing prosperity of this country.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Mr. President, I wish to say a word only in reply to my friend from Louisiana. I have no objection to his remark, but I doubtless I made no remark in any spirit of unkindness or discourtesy towards him.

Mr. MASON. Certainly not. I never thought of it. Mr. CRITTENDEN. There are few gentlemen in the body or out of it for whom I have more respect than for the Senator from Virginia. I simply differ in opinion with him as to the necessity or propriety of sending this mission. I am must still keep up the minister there, with a little hope and prospect of ever getting the $300,000 as at first? There is no money paid. The nation is unable to pay any. The presence of the minister there does not help to pay it. The nation does not repudiate its obligations; but it has not got the money to pay them. That was its condition, as I ascertained it at the time I was there. I shall say nothing further on this subject. I think the debate has gone far enough.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator is wholly mistaken, as he was before. There are claims undusted, controverted. When the dissolution of the Colombian Government took place, it was in 1830—thirty years ago. Since that time we have received a portion of the claims, and our ministers are annually and periodically adjusting a portion of our claims for indemnity. The Senator is mistaken when he says it would be better for the United States to assume the debt and pay it; but even if he is not mistaken, will he receive the payment of the debt? I know he will not.

Mr. BENJAMIN. No, I will not. I think all the money you have got would not pay the salary of the minister. That is what I mean. In that sense, I mean it would be cheaper to pay the debt than to pay the minister.

Mr. GREEN. If the Senator will look at the records, he will find the contrary. A larger portion has been recovered than the cost of the mission, and besides, it has been the means of opening up, or aiding in opening up, a commerce which is of immense importance to the country. With regard to Ecuador, the Senator tried to diminish the importance of that place. I do not know who fills the mission. It was not for the purpose of showing the necessity of a mission there, but to answer his objection against the mission there.

But again: the Senator from Kentucky says that a certain old particular friend of his went to some Government—he has forgotten what—could not find the Government, presented his credentials to the Secretary of War, and was insulted, and called him out to mortal combat. Well, my man sent abroad who will present his credentials to the Secretary of War, instead of the Minister of Foreign Relations ought to be insulted, and is so utterly incompetent that if we could get a better man, that mission ought to be abandoned.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. He was not recalled; he returned voluntarily.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall have a vote on this question. The amendment does not involve much, certainly not this great constitutional question. It is a question of propriety, whether we shall authorize this mission or not, and I hope the Senate will determine it in some way or other at once.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ays thirteen; noes not counted.

Mr. DAVIS. I have an amendment to come in after line ninety-six, and the appropriation for the northwestern boundary commission:

Provided, That when the boundary line is determined between the Pacific ocean and the Rocky Mountains, any unpaid balance of this appropriation shall be applicable to the determination of that portion of the boundary which lies east of the Rocky Mountains, and which has not, as yet, been traced on the face of the earth; and that the United States commissioner be, and he be authorized, in connection with the commissioner of Great Britain, to ascertain and trace and bring to the record of the Rocky Mountains, as far as the Lake of the Woods.

A very brief explanation will suffice. In 1856, when a first appropriation was made to trace the boundary line between the Territory of Washington and the British possessions, it seems to have been supposed that, by the treaty of 1846, we had determined the line of the boundary by a survey line, at least so far as the forty-ninth parallel constitutes it; for, in that first appropriation, the amount appropriated was limited to the portion of the line which was between the Pacific ocean and the Rocky Mountains. This indicates very clearly, to my understanding, it was supposed by Congress that the treaty of 1846 determined the boundary from the Lake of the Woods to the Pacific ocean. There were many reasons why they should require the line to be commenced on the Pacific ocean, which is not necessary now to consider. But we find ourselves in the condition of a treaty which is about to be executed under this appropriation, so far as the land portion of the boundary line is concerned; and then, instead of the same treaty (as seems to have been the supposition of Congress when the act of 1856, making the appropriation, was passed), extending to the boundary on the east side of the Rocky Mountains, that portion of our boundary was provided for by the convention of 1818, but has not been traced upon the face of the earth. Our settlements, in the mean time, have extended to the Pacific ocean, in the fall of the year of the Red River of the North, and it has become important that we should know what is the exact dividing line between the British possessions and the United States.

Unless the commissioner which I have offered to adopt, when the commissioner has reached the Rocky Mountains it will develop upon him to return to the Pacific ocean, and bring home all his assistants, and make out his report of so much of the boundary as lies between the Pacific ocean and the Rocky Mountains; and I believe the expense of returning from the Pacific coast to the land to find his way to the Atlantic coast, will be equal to a sum which would serve to extend the line considerably on the east side of the Rocky Mountains and towards the Mississippi river. By crossing over the Rocky Mountains in the fall of the year, and then following the river to the mouth of Fort Benton, he will be in a position there to receive his supplies in the spring, and much more economically can extend the line to the Lake of the Woods than can ever be done if this organization be broken up and the work afterwards recommenced.

These are the principal considerations in offering the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, as it now stands, we have appropriated what is estimated to complete the survey, which, according to the statement of the Department, was required by the treaty; that is, the line west of the Rocky Mountains, making in all about three hundred and fifty miles. I do not know—the Senator from Mississippi is a better judge of that subject than I am—whether it is necessary to extend the line eastward, and by my objection to the amendment is, that it will initiate another survey; it will commence a survey of all that portion of our northern boundary between the Lake of the Woods and the Rocky Mountains. This may be very good, but it will not be a part of the treaty as a separate and independent enterprise. We ought, at least, to know whether the British Government will join us, so that the survey, when made, shall bind both Governments. In the absence of that information, it seems to me an appropriation bill just here is not the place to commence such an enterprise or such a survey as that. If the Senator will bring it up as a separate bill, or if he will give us all the information necessary, perhaps by the time some other appropriation bill may come up to which it may be germane, I may vote with him; but in the present state of my information upon the subject, I should be unwilling to take the responsibility, so far as a vote would attach any responsibility to me, of initiating an additional survey, as it seems to me that the treaty is a line west of the Rocky Mountains and the Lake of the Woods.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator has stated, only in other words, a very good argument for the proposition which I make. The estimate, as he must be aware, covers the expense of taking the party from the Rocky Mountains back to the Pacific ocean, and bringing them from there to this portion of the United States. That sum of money, if expended in extending the line agreed upon by the convention of 1818, would carry the party far to the eastward of the Rocky Mountains. So far from my having any intention of not extending that this is beginning a work, and that I ought to bring it up and inaugurate it by a new act, he must be aware that there has been a party in that remote region with their instruments, and if they sent them, and afterwards reorganize a party requiring new instruments and provisions, and sending them into the field will involve a very heavy expenditure as well as delay in the work. That portion of the water boundary which constituted the agreement or treaty of 1846 certainly involved no difficulty in carrying it out, and it is not necessary to be afraid to have it speedily executed; but except that, there is no portion of the line between the Pacific ocean and the Rocky Mountains which was nearly so important as that between the Mississippi river and the western extremity of the valley of the Red River of the North.

The importance of tracing and marking upon the face of the earth a geographical line depends very much upon the liability in contest, the value of the land, and the hazard of controversy between the people residing on the two sides of it. We have been surveying a line on the west side of the Rocky Mountains, and it is not necessary to completion, along which there is no probability of controversy; a remote place, indeed, if ever shall have population there. The same is true immediately on the east side of the Rocky Mountains; but as you approach the Mississippi river, the fact changes, and there it is important that the line should be traced. I see no advantage, therefore, in delay. I see increased expenditure in consequence of delay. As to the British Government being associated with us, that was so plainly a requisite, that it is stated in the amendment. We have fallen into vast confusion, in the legislation, at least, in regard to the survey of that boundary. It was originally supposed that the commissioner appointed by Great Britain was to run the whole line; but it was afterwards ascertained that the commissioner appointed by Great Britain had no authority, except to define the line between the United States and the British possessions; and the commissioner was appointed to survey the land boundary; and my impression is, though I am not able to state it at all positively, that the commissioner appointed by Great Britain for the survey of the land boundary has not been able to do so, and will not be able to do so until he reaches the Lake of the Woods, or, indeed, unless we consider the residue of the boundary settled, until he reaches Lake Superior.

Mr. HUNTER. What will remain of this estimate, I do not know, nor does the Senator from Mississippi. The Department estimates that this sum may be required to finish the survey to the Rocky Mountains—three hundred and fifty miles. Of course the party will have to come home, and it will cost no more to come home in one direction than in another. It is not necessary that they come home by the Pacific ocean than to cross the country on the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains. We know that anything which might remain of this appropriation would be a mere drop in the bucket towards executing the survey east of the Rocky Mountains, and the Lake of the Woods. When we have once commenced, we shall go on; we shall have an estimate from year to year until the work is accomplished. It seems to me such an enterprise as this we ought not to enter on in this hasty manner. We ought to wait until we have an estimate. There is no proposition from any of the Departments; there is no statement of what it is to cost. I do not know that there is any stipulation by which we should have a joint commission to run the boundary. Under these circumstances, I think I am right in asking the delay in commencing such an expenditure. What is the reason of using the little balance that may exist, for running a little part of this survey, unless we intend to carry it on, and if we intend to carry it on, why commit the Government to the undertaking until we know upon what the Government think it would be better to wait and mature this scheme, and bring it forward hereafter, either in an independent bill or otherwise.

Mr. HAMLIN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted yeas 28, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Briggs, Butler, Clark, Clark, Collamer, Davis, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Ford, Grimes, Gwin, Hamlin, Harris, Humphreys, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Johnson of Wisconsin, Kellogg, McKim, Nelson, Pillsbury, Robinson, Sargent, Smith, Sibley, Stanley, Stebbins, Sumner, and Wigfall—28.

NAYS.—Messrs. Chandler, Percusse, Hammond, Hunter, Johnson of New York, and Tilden—9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed; and the title of the bill was amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

PAY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. MALLORY. If there be no further business before the Senate, I move to take up the bill in regard to the pay of the Navy, not for the purpose of considering it to-day.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill now before the Senate in regular order is the homestead bill.

Mr. MALLORY. But I desire, with the consent of the Senator from Missouri, who has the floor on that bill, to make this motion, for it will not interfere with that bill; and I presume the Senator from Missouri will give way, under the circumstances, for the purpose of considering the naval bill to-morrow. I am anxious to have it taken up to-morrow. The amendment which the Senator from Maine has proposed will be printed here. I move to take up this bill, and that we adjourn we shall adjourn, and leave it as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida, to take up the bill (S. No. 229) to increase and regulate the pay of the Navy of the United States.

Mr. MALLORY. When the bill is before the Senate I shall ask to have it passed over informally, so that when we adjourn we may adjourn with that bill before the Senate.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to; and it was read the second time.

Mr. MALLORY. Let us pass it over informally.

Mr. GWIN. Let us pass it now.

Mr. MALLORY. The amendment of the Senator from Maine is not printed yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The general consent it will be passed over informally.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over.

SALE OF ARMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill before the Senate regularly is the homestead bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to postpone that with a view to take up the bill (S. No. 45) to provide for the sale of arms to the States, which has been several times discussed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 45) to authorize the sale of public arms to the several States and Territories, and to regulate the appointment of armorers to the national armories, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. HALE, in the fifth line of section two, after the word "repealed," to strike out the words, "and that the superintendents of those armories shall hereafter be selected from officers of the ordnance corps."

Mr. DAVIS. That question has been so fully discussed heretofore that I believe I have nothing to add. I have received a statement in relation to the course of instruction at West Point, showing how fully it covers that branch of mechanics which is so requisite to one who takes charge of these armories; but the subject has been so much discussed that it is unnecessary.

Mr. MASON. When this bill was before the Senate on a former occasion, in reference to the particular clause now under consideration, in one way, I do not know how, an impression prevailed, that was alluded to afterwards by my colleague here, that in some remarks I made on the expediency of changing the present mode of superintendence at the armories, I had spoken in disparaging terms of the Department, and in charge as superintendent at Harper's Ferry. I only want the permission of the Senate to allow me for an instant to do justice to that officer, and to remove any such impression. The gentleman who is now the superintendent at Harper's Ferry is one who has been known to me, and his family before him, for a great many years. I know him personally; and I do not know any man more competent to discharge the duties, or who, so far as I know or have reason to believe, has discharged them better. I do not know how such an impression was made upon me at the present; he was absent at the time of the foray of Brown at Harper's Ferry, and had been absent for a week; he is not at all responsible for anything connected with that. He had been, I happen to know, sent by the War Department on some official duties to the army at Springfield, in Massachusetts, and was absent during that whole time. Nothing was further from my mind than to make any reflection on him; and how that impression got abroad, I do not know. I looked upon the department, and I said nothing in disparagement of that officer. I said nothing, in his commendation because nothing was required; but nothing certainly to his disparagement. I know him to be an able, efficient, and honest man; and if this superintendency were to be continued in the civil branch of the public service, I do not know anybody more competent to fill it.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on engrossing the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. What was done with the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was rejected; and the second section stands as it was, except that a new section has been offered by the Senator from Mississippi, which had better be read.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to hear the bill read as it is now before I vote on it.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War, be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue any State or Territory of the United States, on application of the Governor thereof, arms made at the United States armories, and primers prepared by the United States, to such extent as may be approved by the public supplies without injury or inconvenience to the service of the General Government, upon payment therefor in cash, at the time of delivery in each case, of an amount sufficient to replace, by fabrication at the national armories, the arms so issued: Provided, That the sales of each year shall not exceed the increased manufacture which may result from said sales, and that the whole number to be sold shall not be more than the quantity made, shall be divided equally between the States and Territories, as arms furnished by the United States are now distributed.

Sec. 2. And if it further enacted, That no such of the arms so issued, as is hereinafter provided, shall be the property of a civilian as a superintendence of each of the national armories, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and that the sale of these armories shall hereafter be selected from officers of the ordnance corps.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether it is proposed to sell arms of the recent model which have been made within the last two or three years. I understand we have some four or five hundred thousand arms, and of this new model there are not over forty thousand. I think, from what I can learn, that it would be better to preserve the arms of the new model for the service of the militia. If I understand the bill right, the guns we have recently rifled—Minnie guns—I have no objection to selling them; but, as I learn, there have been only fifty thousand of the new arms made, and perhaps about ten thousand of them have been distributed among the States. There were only five thousand in the possession of the Government, and I think the United States troops had better be armed with this recent model of gun. If the State troops have the old model, which carries a little heavier ball, I should have no objection myself to letting them have the same. Most of the States would undertake to keep on hand four or five hundred thousand, so that our troops will have different sized balls to their muskets, or Minnie guns, or whatever you call them, in my opinion, bad policy. I should like to have this distribution confined to guns made prior to 1854 or 1855, when we began manufacturing on the new pattern, if the Senator has no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I can do little more than repeat—my respect for the Senator would induce me, of course, to repeat as often as he desires—that the United States arms which is now the subject of this bill to take an arm away and put back another of the same kind in its place. For every one that the States take, under this provision, they pay the amount of money which will replace it by fabrication at the armories, and to be replaced with the year. They cannot war more under the provisions of the bill than can be replaced by the money which they put in lieu of the arms thus taken away.

I will restate the capacity of the armories greatly exceeds the appropriation which we annually make for the purchase of arms. We have eighteen thousand stand of arms, when the capacity of the armories is forty thousand. If, then, twenty-two thousand are called for by the States, and money equal to twenty-two thousand deposited in the armories, the armories are brought up to the full establishment; they make forty thousand in a full of eighteen thousand; so that the supply accumulated for the use of the Government remains the same. In the mean time, the militia are getting supplied more rapidly than under our appropriation. The result is, that the militia are not now have the lightest model and the best kind of arms that can be carried by troops. It is not proposed to reduce the appropriation for the ordinary manufacture. That remains as before. The eighteen thousand are still to be made as before. The increased manufacture will result from the sale to the States; and the sale to the States is limited by the capacity to increase the manufacture. That is the whole question.

Mr. SIMMONS. That does not meet the question I propounded. I suppose, of the arms made prior to 1855, we have distributed large numbers.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now I propose to distribute the same kind of arms, so that they will not have two calibers to the musket, and to retain the new ones for our own troops. Whatever money they pay for the old ones, I am willing to retain for manufacturing the new ones for the United States. We have got a different caliber to the musket, I understand—similar to that which it would be better for both sides to have the United States have all their arms of one caliber, and the militia all theirs of another caliber, if there must be two.

I suppose I understand what the purpose is. I have made some objection to the plan of manufacturing these arms at the paper cost, and I have taken some pains since the question has been up to find out what the cost of these establishments was, and what was the annual expenditure of the armories for the manufacture of arms, and I find that a fair interest and the wear and tear of these establishments annually amount to more than double the appropriation we make; so that every musket we make would annually cost the Government, if we had to pay interest, three times what we should get for it. The bill, I have no objection to increasing the manufacture of arms somewhat, but I would have the arms for our troops all of one caliber; and as the militia got some of the other kind, I thought it would be better to let them have more. I think the Senator will agree with me, as a military man, that it is a little awkward to be having State troops armed with guns carrying two-sized balls. If they have had none of the new arms, let them have the other kind, and have them of the pattern they have already got; and let us keep guns of the same caliber for the militia. I do not think that would be better, and certainly it is manufacturing them cheap enough. I have no objection to let them have the old ones. They seem to be very good arms when they are rifled. I do not desire to speculate on arms, but I should like to keep them for the militia.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator runs into an error which I find very often prevails, that the militia of the States are not a part of the Army of the United States. It is our glory that the defense of our country rests on the militia. As the States, then, to arm the militia in time of peace with a weapon which they will not use in time of war. He proposes to instruct them through the whole period of peace with a weapon such as the Government does not employ in war. Is that his proposition?

Mr. SIMMONS. No, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. That is no proposition. Then why does he say to me that he proposes that the militia shall have one caliber of the old model, and the United States troops another of the new model? Does he not know that the old model is smooth-bore; that that cannot be brought to the condition of the new model rifled musket? It may be rifled, it is true, but not the pattern as old as some of these of which he speaks; and I imagine no one will have rifled the oldest model musket which is now in store. It was only the model which was made after the period of the old model that I believe it has been attempted to rifle. The others have received percussion locks; but many of them were condemned and sold—sold for a mere song. They passed through the hands of the Government, the militia wanted them, they could have bought them without legislation. No met are so careful about the character of the arms they carry as the southern and western militia. They have a pride in their weapons, accustomed to use them, trained to handling them. The Government, if it is to stop the sales as we increase the appropriations, limiting them always to the increase which may result from the sales. I cannot imagine why, upon the argument presented by the Senator from Rhode Island, he should continue to resist it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator will try to understand me. I understand that within two or three years the caliber of the muskets has been changed, and been made smaller.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; it has been made a rifled musket.

Mr. SIMMONS. And orders have been issued to rifle the muskets made prior to that time.

Mr. DAVIS. To some extent.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand it is a standing order, and they are rifling them all the time. I want to know why we are going on with the expense of rifling these muskets, if they are useless. I learn that we are going on with it; making the old muskets Mispie rifles, and when rifled they carry a larger ball than the new musket. The Senator says these are arms that are excluded from the use of the regular Army. I proposed to confine it to arms made up to within three or four years since, when the smaller bore was introduced; and I am very certain I have heard it repeatedly here that those muskets, when changed and rifled, would make very good muskets. If they are good for our troops, why are we doing it? I have heard I understand these new ones are rather heavier. That is all I know about it.

Mr. DAVIS. I say to the Senator that I do not think it is the weight of the weapon, but the weight of the ammunition, of which he has heard.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of many dollars are taken here; a little heavier to carry on the shoulder. I never heard that the ammunition in them was much. If it is the purpose to carry this bill at all events, without any reference to making up a variety of calibers in the different corps, it will not make any further objection to it. But I am quite certain that if we need these arms at all, it would be better to retain those of one caliber and sell those of a larger one, and I would have no old muskets rifled at all. I think we had better sell them for the regular army. I have heard of selling them for; but I understand there are large numbers of them that make a very effective arm by being rifled, and that the armories are now rifling them. I would prefer to sell them, and if we add anything to the number we are now making, add those of one caliber. If, however, my suggestion meets such serious opposition, I do not wish to press it.

Mr. DAVIS. I dislike to enter into a mere question of ordinance; but to make the Senator understand me, I will say that I doubt very much whether the States which have a large number of guns make a requisition for a single musket; they want nothing but rifles probably, and in that event he will see that his proposition would defeat the requisition entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Massey in the chair.) The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time; and on the question, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bigler, Briggs, Chace, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hall, Hammond, Hoar, Ives, Johnson, Keith, Lester, Kezley, Lane, Latham, Mallory, Mason, Nicholson, Palk, Powell, Rice, Rumbler, Sebastian, Stidell, and Yulee—29. NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Colburn, Woodruff, Durkee, Fessenden, Ford, Grimes, Hamlin, Harris, King, Stanton, Sumner, Ten Eyck, and Wade—18.

So the bill was passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HAYES, Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (H. R. No. 326) to establish mail routes in the Territory of Kansas.

A joint resolution (S. No. 11) for the relief of Commander H. J. Hartstene, of the United States Navy.

REGULATIONS FOR THE GUANO TRADE.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to take up bill No. 303, reported by the Committee on Commerce, which I think will give rise to no debate, and which it is very important should be passed.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 303) supplementary to the act entitled "An act to authorize protection to be given to citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of guano," approved August 18, 1856, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that when the President of the United States has accepted the bond or bonds of any citizen or citizens of the United States, or his or their assigns, in compliance with the second provision of section two of the act of August 18, 1856, and notification of the acceptance has been made to him or them, the same shall be deemed and taken in all legal proceedings to be evidence that the island, rock, or key, therein specified, shall be considered as appertaining to the United States, and shall be held for the exclusive right and use of said citizen or citizens of the United States, or his or their assigns, for the purpose of obtaining guano, and of selling and delivering it from the time of the acceptance of the bond. And the President of the United States is to make proclamation thereof. But if, upon the production of evidence satisfactory to the Secretary of State, it shall appear that the said certificate has been obtained by mistake, fraud, or upon insufficient evidence, he may, at any time within one year from the date of the certificate, review the proceedings and issue a certificate to the party properly entitled thereto. There is a proviso that nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive any person of his rights in the courts under the law to which it is supplemental.

The second section extends all the provisions of the revenue laws of the United States, relating to manifests, reports, entries, and inspection of cargoes, in all respects, so far as they may be applicable to guano, either imported or brought coastwise from any island, rock, or key; and before it shall be passed through the custom-house where entered, it is to be examined and analyzed, and a proper certificate shall be given by the Secretary of the Treasury, so as to ascertain the proportions and purity of its component parts, and a certificate of the result of the examination and analysis is to be given and marked upon or affixed to each barrel, box, bag, mark, or package of the same. It shall be deemed a misdemeanor to violate such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, and in such manner as in his discretion shall be best adapted to protect the purchasers and consumers of guano from imposition and fraud. Any person or persons who shall knowingly violate any provision of this act for the sale of any guano, other than that to which the same shall relate, or any compound of which guano is a component part, are to be deemed and taken to be guilty of a misdemeanor against the laws of the United States, and, on conviction in any court of the United States, to be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not to exceed three years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The third section repeats so much of the second section as is contained in the act of August 18, 1856, as respects the sale and delivery of the guano to the citizens of the United States, and for use therein, and provides that henceforth it shall be lawful for any citizen or citizens of the United States, or his or their assigns, who have delivered their bond, or acceptance thereof by the President of the United States, to sell and deliver the said guano to other than citizens of the United States, and for other than use therein.

To obviate the necessity of placing revenue officers on the guano islands and keys, the fourth section makes it the duty of any shipper of guano from the same to any foreign port or country, to report to the collector of customs in the United States, at some port, and clear therefrom, or he may proceed to a foreign port at which a consul or consular agent of the United States is stationed, and deliver to him duplicate manifests, on which the consul or commercial agent shall inscribe a certificate in the nature of a clearance for the vessel: one to be returned to the master of the vessel, and the other to be forwarded to the Treasury Department; these certificates to have the same force and effect of similar documents issued and received by collectors of customs.

Mr. YULEE. One of those sections provides penalties and punishments; makes a new class of criminal offenses. I should like the bill to lie over so that we may look into that a little further. My attention was attracted to the reading of it. I think the second section makes a new class of crimes or offenses. I should like to see whether it is within the limits—

Mr. HAMLIN. I think, if the Senator will give his attention to it now, he will see that there is no crime in it. It is a crime to forge the collecting department of the Government. It is a provision that runs through all your revenue laws.

Mr. YULEE. It is to operate within the States. Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly, it is to operate everywhere.

Mr. YULEE. Let the second section be read. The Secretary read the second section of the bill.

Mr. YULEE. I hope the Senator from Maine will consent to let the bill lie over. I think we ought not to pass upon a bill which proposes to increase the number of criminal offenses hastily. My attention has not been directly called to the subject; the bill comes up out of order, and at a period of the day when we could scarcely have expected it. I desire the Senate to be proposed for final action by the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope it will lie over. It is important in many respects. I see there is a provision for analysis. Who is to pay for it? Are we to have a new set of officers, like inspectors of drugs?

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. I fear it will lead to that. Let it lie over, so that we may examine it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I had hoped that the bill was in such a shape as to elicit no opposition from any quarter. I desire the Senate to act upon it now, because there are a vast number of vessels waiting to know whether this bill is to become a law, and desiring to enter into the trade in shipping guano from our own to foreign ports. I do not wish to ask up the time of the Senate, but I will, in as few words as I can, explain some of the provisions of the bill, and what has been its origin, and the sources which the Committee on Commerce have consulted in relation to it. In the first place I desire to say, that I think no bill during this session has excited so much discussion and consideration in the Committee on Commerce as this one. I think the chairman will concur with me in that expression. [Mr. CLAY nodded assent.] After the fullest examination we could give to it, the bill is its present form; the unanimous approval of the committee, and the concurrence of the Senate, was not a single dissenting voice upon it, and for very good reasons.

The first section of the bill changes the present law by making the title to these islands vest exclusively in the discoverers under the existing law; and it requires the President to issue proclamations, when an island shall have been discovered and the bonds are filed with him under the law to which this is supplemental. That is an addition to the present law. The proviso in the first section speaks for itself, that where, by mistake, fraud, or otherwise, a claim is made to an island, the War Department shall have been granted to the wrong person, the Secretary shall have one year's time in which he may review his opinion, and grant his certificate to the party entitled to it. If any party, therefore, should make a claim under the existing law to an island wrongfully, there is a right of review granted to other parties outside of it, any time within the period of one year. Another provision to that section simply confines litigants now in court to the existing laws, and without attempting to interfere with them by the passage of this law. That is the first section.

The second section of the bill provides for an inspection of the guano. It is found that there have been adulterations made. The committee consulted with the Treasury Department on it, and the Treasury Department has decided that there should be inspections of guano at such ports as the Secretary should determine, he determining the ports where there are now inspectors of drugs; and the inspectors of drugs being officers who have a compensation fixed by law, will have to assume this additional duty. His report on this guano has been so analyzed and inspected, and a certificate under the proper officer granted, this section provides that if any person shall willfully use those certificates on guano never so im-spected, he shall be subject to a penalty. Surely I think the Senator from Florida can discover no wrong in that, unless he is disposed to let the shippers spread broadcast among those who may want to use this fertilizer, certificates that apply to other guano that have been analyzed.

Mr. YULEE. I would prefer to leave it to the States to protect their own citizens from the effect of such a fraud.

Mr. HAMLIN. Why not under all your revenue laws leave it to the States? The idea of leaving it to a State to punish a violation of the revenue laws of the United States, passed by Congress and extending over all the States, seems to me a novel one, indeed.

Mr. YULEE. You do not propose to derive any revenue from this?

Mr. HAMLIN. None whatever.

Mr. YULEE. I would protect the United States against offenses which looked to the diminution of its revenues, to defrauding the Government of those revenues; but when you come to act upon the citizens of a State for what the State may or may not choose to make criminal, when it is not necessary to the protection of the revenues of the Government at all, I would then consider it. I do not wish to enlarge the criminal jurisdiction of the United States, to increase the number of Federal offenses, any further than is absolutely necessary for the execution of Federal power. That is the point. To the general execution of the bill, I have no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. I take it not; and I think the Senator's objection is entirely hypercritical. He surely could not frame a law which would allow a State to intervene, and undertake to tell what are the penalties for violating a law of the United States. The thing is postposterous.

Mr. YULEE. No; but the States can do this: they can punish a man for selling guano within their limits, under a false pretense of purity, when it is not pure. They can do that, if they choose. But Mr. HAMLIN, the objection is, that the bill allows guano from all these islands discovered by our citizens, to be carried to foreign, as well as domestic ports. The parties interested, so far as I have been able to learn—those using and those shipping—are in favor of that section, because it is the only one in which the States have no keys that have been discovered, is possessed of those fertilizing powers that adapt it much better to the soils in foreign countries, while the guano upon other islands and keys is much better adapted to ours. There is much phosphate in the one; there is more ammonia in the other; and as the one or the other preponderates, so it is adapted to this or that soil. Indeed, the restriction in the original law seems without any well-founded reason, and the committee were unanimously of opinion that if those points are discovered, if we receive from other islands, let our commerce participate and carry this to foreign countries, if they find it beneficial so to do.

But it was objected by myself that throwing the revenue laws over this matters the second section did not involve the necessity of placing the revenue officers at these islands and keys; and to obviate that, the last and fourth section of the bill was drawn under instructions received from the Treasury Department; and that provides that the shipper of the guano may bring it to any port he pleases in the United States, and from that port clear to a foreign port, or he may ship it directly to a foreign port at which an American consul or commercial agent may reside, and that commercial agent shall inhale upon his manifest, two copies of which the collector is bound to transmit, as an endorsement in the nature of a clearance. One of these manifests is to be returned to the Department here, the other is to be retained by the master of the vessel to operate in all its parts as a clearance of the vessel would if cleared from a port in the United States.

These are the provisions of the bill, and all parties are in favor of it; and there are, if it shall become a law, as I have said, a very large number of vessels—I am told more than forty—now lying in readiness to participate in the trade, if it shall be open to our commerce, to go to foreign ports. I hope there will be no objection to considering the bill; and I trust it will receive the favorable consideration of the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. The bill seems to me to be obscure in regard to the provisions for inspecting the guano. Is the guano to be carried only to those ports where an inspector of drugs has been appointed? Cannot they enter it anywhere else?

Mr. HAMLIN. Anywhere else.

Mr. HUNTER. If they enter anywhere else, it is to be landed without inspection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, just as it is now.

Mr. HUNTER. The bill provides that before it shall be entered it shall be inspected. The bill says:

Before the same shall be passed through the customs where entered, it shall be examined and analyzed by an inspector of drugs to be designated by the Treasury, so as to ascertain the proportions and purity of its component parts.

That is to say, if I understand it, the Secretary of the Treasury is to designate the ports at which it is to be entered, and there it is to be analyzed. There is nothing in the bill to make it compulsory on the inspectors of drugs to analyze it, and if they analyze it, what are to be the fees? Are they to do it for nothing?

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator will speak a little further in that section, he will see; "under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct," and the Secretary of the Treasury, as will be seen by the papers accompanying the bill, proposes to have it done by the inspectors of drugs.

Mr. HUNTER. Is the Secretary of the Treasury to be authorized, under his general power, to add to the duties of the inspectors of drugs, and that without additional compensation, or is he to be allowed to say what shall be the fees, or is it to be given to him to say that it shall be entered at certain ports, and not at others? Suppose they bring a cargo to Norfolk, in my State; a great deal of it is used in my State; there is no inspector of drugs there. If I understand this section, it cannot be entered at all until it has been analyzed. How is it to be analyzed? Who is to analyze it? What is to pay for analyzing it? What is he to get? It seems to me that that section is not well drawn; it is not specific enough. It does not define the duties of the shipper or of the officers at the ports, with sufficient distinctness to leave no room for dispute. It seems to me that such powers as have never been vested in him before—legislative powers. To the other provisions of the bill I do not object; but to this, unless it is to be more accurately defined, I have objection, because it will restrict the shipment of goods to certain ports, or else vest this indefinite discretion in the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will state in a word what is my understanding, and what, I think, was the express understanding of the committee which reported it. The parties interested, for the purpose of protecting purchasers from being imposed upon by an impure article, an adulterated article, asked that there should be an inspection. Every body would see the propriety of it, where it could be done, but if we were to add to our revenue officers, inspection officers of guano at all the ports of the country, it would very materially add to the collecting force, and very much to the expense of collecting the revenue.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest that all that is so; and therefore the provision ought not to be here. The States appoint inspectors of guano.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand it all. We consulted the Secretary of the Treasury on this point as to what could be done. The Secretary said that at the ports where there were now inspectors of drugs, the inspection could be imposed upon them, and there would be no additional expense. We are entitled to all of their time.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator state to me by what law we can impose that duty upon the inspectors of drugs?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think by the same law that we would if we were to change the revenue law and add another drug to the drugs now enumerated to be inspected. I take it that in the collection of your revenue, every officer in the Department is bound to discharge the duties that are placed upon him by the existing laws and laws that we may pass.

Mr. HUNTER. But this law does not impose it upon him. Could the Secretary of the Treasury make him inspect tobacco if imported?

Mr. HAMLIN. It does not impose a punishment on the inspector, but only upon the person who falsely says the certificate.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not speaking of the punishment; but I ask, could the Secretary of the Treasury add it to the duties of inspectors of drugs, to inspect tobacco?

Mr. HAMLIN. Clearly. I have not an earthly doubt about it.

Mr. HUNTER. I think not.

Mr. HAMLIN. We have an import and the right to have it inspected. I have no doubt we could impose it on the inspectors of drugs. The embarrassment was this: if we required it to be inspected at every small port, we should find two difficulties: first, the difficulty of finding a well-qualified person at many of the small ports; secondly, if you could find them at all, it would add materially to the expense of the collecting department. Then we consulted the Secretary of the Treasury. He said to let there be an inspection at ports where there are now by law inspectors of drugs, and let the duty be placed on them. It is in answer to the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury that we have placed this duty on the inspectors of drugs. They understand that Department, I presume, very well whether they have a right to impose additional duties on these officers. I have no doubt about it; and if they do not want to hold their offices, let them resign, and others will be found equally competent to discharge them.

The bill is, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate such ports as he pleases. He will designate such ports as there are now inspectors of drugs at; not others. Therefore, at all other ports, the guano will be imported as it now is. You will get some protection against an adulterated article by providing for an inspection at some six or eight of your ports. I am not able to state where the inspectors of drugs will be; but I think they are at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, and New Orleans. I think that is about all. I concur with the Senator as to the ports I have named. You have inspectors there; and, so far as you get a protection, you will get it on the guano imported into those ports, and you get it without additional expense. That is my understanding of the section. If there is any obscurity in it, I concur with the Senator from Virginia, let us remove it. I do not think there is the slightest difficulty about placing the additional duty on the inspectors of drugs. I have no sort of doubt about that.

Mr. MASON. I think the Senator from Maine would act judiciously in allowing this bill to go over until we can examine it further. I do not mean to interpose at all between that Senator and the chairman of the Committee on Finance as to its financial view; but, as I read it, it involves a total departure from the policy on which the law of 1856 was based; when, for the first time, a law was passed authorizing the President of the United States to take possession, and, as it were, to annex to the United States guano islands that might be discovered derelict; and I am rather disposed to think that I should in favor of that bill, that whatever the design was, the effect of it will be to give advantages to commerce by the provisions of this new bill over the interests of agriculture. The law of 1856, as shown upon its face, provided that wherever it should appear to the President that any island having deposits of guano might be discovered by citizens of the United States, and the President should be satisfied, from evidence to be exhibited to him, that they were not in possession of, or claimed, according to my recollection of the law, by any foreign power—in other words, where they were islands which were not owned or claimed to appertain to any foreign Power—then the President might, under the stipulation contained in the law, by proclamation, declare such islands to appertain to the United States; and if it should in order to give effect to the act, the President might, if necessary, use the whole military and naval force of the country for the purpose.

It was a law that was drawn with a great deal of care at the time, and was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, after much conferences with the executive branch, to endeavor, as far as we could, whilst running some risk of embroiling us with foreign Powers in taking possession of desert islands, to avoid as far as prac-

"twenty-four dollars." The man to whom this pension is to be granted was a soldier in Colonel Basch's regiment, if I remember rightly—one of the volunteers from the State of Illinois—and was wounded by a shot through his body, cutting his liver, at the battle of Buena Vista. The result of this wound, according to the testimony of surgeons of the Army, and of surgeons who do not belong to the Army, has been an entire destruction of his sight and almost an entire destruction of his hearing. He has spent his entire fortune, as the Committee on Pensions understand, in trying to recover the sense of sight and hearing, without any success; and it is now understood that the testimony of the physicians is, that it is impossible for him to recover either of those senses. He has a family, consisting of a wife and four children. It is an exceptional case. Even the Senator who reported this bill (Mr. CLAY) was willing to make this pension double the ordinary amount. I was willing, as a member of the committee, to treble it. Very few such cases will ever be presented to the Senate, and none hardly that appeals so strongly to the sympathy, and, as I believe, to the justice, of this body.

Mr. CLAY. I trust the amendment will not be adopted; and I am rather surprised that the Senator has made the motion. I had supposed—

Mr. GRIMES. I will state, in explanation of the motion why I made it, that the Senator from Alabama was not present at the meeting of the Committee on Pensions this morning. The question was discussed there whether I should make this motion, and I believe it had the entire concurrence of every member then present. And I am not right.

Mr. CLAY. I do not know. I was not there.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask the members of the committee who were present.

Mr. CLAY. According to the general law, eight dollars a month is the highest amount allowed as a pension to a private soldier. If there are any cases in which Congress has exceeded that amount, even though the disability were total, I cannot now recall one. This case was one, as the Senator has remarked, that appealed very strongly to our sympathies, because the man was not totally deaf and blind. The evidence was persuasive, I would not say conclusive, of the fact that he lost his hearing and his sight from exposure incident to his service in the war with Mexico. Under these circumstances I consented, as a member of the committee, that the amount should be doubled. The Senator now proposes to increase it threefold, to twenty-four dollars, which is within six dollars of the highest amount allowed by general laws to any pensioner of the United States. In other words, it is within six dollars of the amount of one half the pay of a lieutenant colonel under the old laws of the United States, which was the maximum of pension allowed any pensioner. Even allowed him sixteen dollars, I have no doubt, will cause a murmur, because it is to us for increase of pension in other cases where the amount is inadequate to the support of the invalids.

I presume it was not the intention of Congress by a pension to provide ample support for the pensioner or the invalid soldier, but, in my opinion, it is utterly absurd to talk about eight dollars a month providing a man, his wife, and several children with the means of subsistence. It was only intended to provide for him individually, not for his family; and perhaps in most of the United States twenty-six dollars a year would be inadequate for the support of a single individual, providing him with his food and raiment.

The Senator, however, proposes by the amendment to provide for the man, his wife, and his children. It is a little disposition to depart from the policy of our laws, will prove a very vicious precedent, and will return to plague us habitually. We have already during this session reported against two or three similar applications. They come in continually. I never yet have known or heard of a pensioner who was content with all he received. All of them maintain that they are wholly inadequate, and all desire an increase of them; and they will never cease to cry "give," as long as you afford such pretext as this bill will offer.

I had hoped that the Senator would have saved me the necessity of making these remarks, because I desired the bill to pass without debate, so as to excite as little observation as possible; for I know it will be the predicate for similar applications for increased pension before the close of this session. If you agree now to raise this man's pension to twenty-four dollars a month, you give him six dollars more than the pension that General Scott would be entitled to, if he was to retire and seek an invalid pension.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the Senator from Alabama is mistaken in regard to this being within six dollars of the amount of pay that General Scott would be entitled to, if he should be admitted on the pension roll under similar circumstances.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator is wholly mistaken himself. I am a little older soldier in the pension service than he is; and I speak by the book. I assure him that, under the general laws, the highest pension allowed any pensioner is thirty dollars a month. We have made exceptional cases here; for we have broken in on the whole pension system; and the Senator himself has assisted in doing so, and it is now no system at all—all a matter of personal favoritism; but according to the general law, thirty dollars is the highest pension allowed to any one.

Mr. GRIMES. The laws we have passed here are exceptional cases; for every pension we have granted exceeds, I believe, the amount of this pensioner's pension, even with the additional six dollars. The Senator observed that I now propose to take care of the wife and children of this applicant. In that the Senator is mistaken. I merely stated that this man had a wife and four children, who were dependent on him for their support; but it is the man who is deprived of the important senses of hearing and of sight for whom I propose to provide; and when he shall cease to exist his pension ceases, and will not inure to the benefit of his wife or of his children. The Senator stated, I think, that the evidence was persuasive to entirely disprove as to the facts in this case.

Mr. CLAY. That is my impression.

Mr. GRIMES. Allow me to read from the report made by the Senator himself:

"That the evidence shows said Webster served as a private in the Mexican war; was disabled by wounds received at the battle of Buena Vista by a musket ball passing through his body, which has resulted in total blindness, and almost entire deafness; and is entirely disabled from doing any kind of work for making the best possible support for himself and a helpless family."

The Senator will observe that, in drawing this report, he has used this expression in regard to the highest family, as well as myself in the statement I made:

"The petitioner appeared before the committee, and they are satisfied, from his appearance and from an inspection, that he is not capable of attending to the ordinary functions of life without assistance."

"Sergeant Bond and Homans, of the State of Illinois, certified to of good standing in their profession, and credible witnesses, testify that petitioner is entirely blind and almost entirely deaf, and, as they believe, from the effects of wounds received during the Mexican war, and is totally disabled."

John G. T. Holton, M. D., Professor of Surgery in the National Medical College, Washington, D. C., states that he has examined and described him; that he is blind, partially deaf, and in very precarious general health; that his present state of inability is traceable to a wound sustained through the liver, in the war with Mexico.

Surgeon General Lawson, and Assistant Surgeon Colonel, United States Army, state that upon examination "we find petitioner blind in both eyes, and deaf in both ears, and from official reports, caused by a gun shot wound received in the battle of Buena Vista, the ball having entered the right side in the region of the liver, and passed out in the back."

I say further say: "We have seen no case which appeals with more force to our sympathies, or which deserves in a higher degree our favorable consideration of the Congress of the United States."

I have nothing further to add in behalf of the petitioner.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the third reading was ordered.

Mr. MALLORY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SLIDELL. I hope we shall have an executive session.

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly; I will yield to that.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. SLIDELL, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 26, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Payser by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. STROETON.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported, as truly enrolled, an act (H. R. No. 326) to establish mail routes in the Territory of Kansas; when the Speaker signed the same.

QUALIFICATION OF A MEMBER.

Hon. CLARK B. COCHRAN, Representative from the eighteenth congressional district of the State of New York, appeared and qualified by taking the usual oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to a personal explanation. I am reported as having objected, on Friday last, to House bill No. 255, for the relief of the legal representative of Thomas Williams. I did not object to that bill, or to any other bill.

SAFETY OF PASSENGERS ON STEAMERS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to give notice to the House that House bill No. 114, the consideration of which was postponed till tomorrow, will be called up then. I have directed the bill and accompanying report to be laid on the desk of each member; and I hope an examination will be given to the bill, so that we may take it up and pass it to-morrow.

WILLIAM M' Cormick.

Mr. FOUKE. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads made an adverse report on Friday last on a bill for the relief of William M' Cormick, which was laid on the table. I ask for a reconsideration of that order, and to have the subject recommitted to the same committee, with additional evidence.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States by Mr. John A. Brevard, his Private Secretary, informing the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

"An act (H. R. No. 331) to repeal the third section of an act entitled 'that House bill No. 114, regulate the terms of the circuit and district courts for the northern district of the State of New York,' approved July 7, 1838; and

"An act (H. R. No. 19) to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels,' approved March 3, 1855, for the better protection of female passengers, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported, as truly enrolled, a joint resolution for the relief of Commander H. J. Hartstene, of the United States Navy; when the Speaker signed the same.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS ON LEAVE.

THE SPEAKER. The new rules require the Speaker to call all the States and Territories for the introduction of bills on leave, for reference only, as the first thing in order. Under that rule the Speaker will have the States called. The Speaker will have the rule read so that all the members may see why the Chair places that construction on it. According to the rule, if the bill is placed on it by the Chair, the call will be confined to bills on leave.

The rule read, as follows:

"At all the States and Territories shall be called for bills on leave and read twice, and shall be taken up during each session of Congress; and if necessary to secure the object on said days, all resolutions which shall give rise to debate shall be taken up on the first day of each session of the House already established; and the whole of said days shall be appropriated to bills on leave and resolutions, until the regular order of business is completed; and the Speaker shall first call the States and Territories for bills on leave; and all bills so introduced during the first hour after the adjournment of the House shall be taken up on the next appropriate committee: Prayered, because that a bill so introduced and referred shall not be brought back into the House upon a reconsideration."

The Speaker proceeded, under the above rule, to call the States and Territories for bills on leave, commencing with the State of Maine.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS AND AGRICULTURE.

Mr. TAPPAN. I ask leave to introduce the resolutions of the State of New Hampshire on the subject of a national bureau of statistics and agriculture.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is not in order. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The first part of the call is confined to bills on leave. This being a resolution, cannot be presented at this time.

NON-RESIDENT LANDHOLDERS.

Mr. THAYER introduced a bill to withdraw the protection of Congress from non-resident landholders in several of the States and in the Territories; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IMPROVEMENT OF BUFFALO HARBOR.

Mr. SPAULDING introduced a bill making an appropriation of $75,000 for the repair and improvement of the harbor of Buffalo; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPROVEMENT OF ST. CLAIR FLATS.

Mr. SPAULDING also introduced a bill to authorize the improvement of the navigation of the St. Clair flats, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LITTLE FALLS BRIDGE.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill to reimburse the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, for a sum of money advanced toward the construction of the Little Falls bridge; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS OF NEW YORK.

Mr. ELY introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to increase and regulate the terms of the circuit and district courts for the northern district of the State of New York;" which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISTRICT COURT AT CANANDAIGUA.

Mr. POTTLE introduced a bill to provide for the holding of the terms of a district court for the northern district of New York at Canandaigua, in the county of Ontario, instead of the city of Rochester; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BREAKWATER AT CROW SHOALS.

Mr. NIXON introduced a bill making an appropriation for the erection of a breakwater at Crow Shoals, near the mouth of Delaware Bay; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FEES OF OFFICERS OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. FLORENCE introduced a bill to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed to district attorneys of the United States, clerks, marshals, attorneys, and other officers of the circuit and district courts of the United States; and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PORT OF PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. FLORENCE also introduced a bill to extend the limits of the port of entry and delivery for the district of Philadelphia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to submit a bill, which I would like to have referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I propose to offer it as a substitute for the bill reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, to fix and regulate the duties. I gave notice of the bill, and I should like to have it printed. The bill to regulate the duties on imports, and for other purposes, was read a first and second time.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman proposes to offer the bill as an amendment to one now pending in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I will not object to that reference.

Mr. FLORENCE. I shall propose it as a substitute for the bill reported from the Committee of Ways and Means when that bill comes up. The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

ASSAY OFFICE IN KANSAS.

Mr. MONTGOMERY introduced a bill to establish an assay office at Atchison City, in Kansas Territory; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ATCHISON CITY A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. MONTGOMERY also introduced a bill constituting Atchison City, in the Territory of Kansas, a port of entry and delivery; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman does not intend to make it a port of entry, I suppose, but only a port of delivery.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I will discuss the subject with the gentleman from Alabama when the bill comes up for consideration.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MILITARY POST IN KANSAS.

Mr. MONTGOMERY also introduced a bill to establish a military post at or near Atchison City, in the Territory of Kansas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NEW REVENUE CUTTER.

Mr. WHITELEY. I understand that the States are being called for bills and resolutions.

The SPEAKER. No, sir; for bills only, during the first hour.

Mr. WHITELEY. There will probably be no objection to a resolution which I desire to offer. It is a mere matter of reference. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the propriety of reporting a bill making an appropriation for the construction of a new revenue cutter for service on the Delaware river and bay.

There being no objection to the resolution, it was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to offer a resolution calling for information, to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. THAYER. I object to any resolution, until the call of the States for bills has been concluded.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT MONTGOMERY.

Mr. CLOPTON introduced a bill making an appropriation for the erection of a building in the city of Montgomery, Alabama, for the use of the post office and the district court of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CLOPTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. After we get through with bills, resolutions will be in order. I must therefore object.

The SPEAKER. After the States have been called for bills, resolutions will be in order, under the rule.

Mr. HUGHES. Will you call the States again?

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir; the States will be called for the residue of the hour.

RAILROAD GRANT TO LOUISIANA.

Mr. LANDRUM introduced a bill granting alternate sections of land to the State of Louisiana to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPEAL OF THE FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

Mr. ELAKE introduced a bill to repeal the fugitive slave law, approved September 18, 1850; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAIRING OFF.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That hereafter pairs shall neither be announced on the floor of this House, or entered on the minutes, or published in the proceedings as reports for the Globe.

Mr. CURTIS. I object. Resolutions are not in order until the call of the States for bills has been completed.

ILLINOIS COURTS.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill authorizing the holding of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of Illinois at the city of Cairo; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CAPTAIN JOHN HALL.

Mr. NOELL introduced a bill for the relief of Captain John Hall, of the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

REUBEN J. CHAMPTION.

Mr. WALDRON introduced a bill for the relief of Reuben J. Chamption, only child and heir of Reuben J. and Rhoda Chamption; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

SAULT STE. MARIE MISSION CLAIMS.

Mr. LEACH, of Michigan, introduced a bill for the relief of the mission claims of Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PACIFIC RAILROAD

Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill to secure contracts and make provision for the safe, certain, and speedy transportation of the mail, troops, munitions of war, and military and naval stores, between the Atlantic States and the Pacific, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the select committee on the Pacific railroad, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That all the bills referred to the select committee on the Pacific railroad be printed.

PREEMPTIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill for the extension of the preemption privilege in the State of California; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

WILLIAM Y. STRONG.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill for the relief of William Y. Strong; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

BALTIMORE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. KUNKEL introduced a bill making an appropriation for repairing the custom-house of the United States at the port of Baltimore; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT TO CARRY PROPERTY TO KANSAS.

Mr. GARNETT introduced a bill to enable the citizens of the United States to carry their property freely, and without fear or molestation, into the Territory of Kansas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BALTIMORE CUSTOM-HOUSE—AGAIN.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to call the attention of the House to the bill introduced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KUNKEL] a few minutes ago, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I think it is introducing bad practice to allow gentlemen to have their bills referred to the Committee of the Whole upon their first introduction. I think the gentleman's bill ought to go to the Committee of Ways and Means. I regret to interfere with the gentleman's bill; I know nothing about it. I may be wrong in this, but it is to refer the custom-house in Baltimore, I believe; and I think the gentleman from Maryland himself will see that it is a very injurious practice to indulge gentlemen in the reference of their bills at once to a Committee of the Whole House, without reference to any of the standing committees. The practice is wrong, and I therefore suggest to the gentleman from Maryland that he give his resolution referred to one of the standing committees.

MR. KUNKEL. Is debate now in order?

THE SPEAKER. It is not; and the motion to reconsider would not be in order, unless the gentleman from Maryland, of his own motion, sees fit to have the resolution referred to a committee.

MR. KUNKEL. It is proper that I should say, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, (Mr. Houston)—

THE SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

MR. KUNKEL. Well, sir, I hope the Speaker will indulge me for a moment. It is proper that I should reply to the remark of the gentleman from Alabama, that this bill has had, informally, the consent of the Committee of Ways and Means. The proposed appropriation is a very small one—amounting to but $15,000—for repairing damages caused by a fire in September, 1859. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report made to the last Congress, recommended that this appropriation ought to be made.

MR. FARNSWORTH. Is this debate in order?

THE SPEAKER. It is not.

MR. KUNKEL. I have been asked for information, and I have risen to give that information.

MR. HOUSTON. As this is a new rule under which we are now acting, it is important that, at the beginning, it should have a proper construction. I therefore put the question whether a gentleman under this call can introduce a bill, and move to have it referred to any other committee than one of the standing committees of this House? Can the gentleman from Maryland introduce his bill and move its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? Most not that bill go to one of the standing committees of the House?

THE SPEAKER. The bill indicated was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, no objection being made. If there had been objection, the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama would be a proper one, so far as this bill is concerned.

MR. HOUSTON. I object to the reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and insist that it be referred to one of the standing committees.

THE SPEAKER. It is now too late to object. The Chair will now call the States for resolutions. Resolutions are in order from Maine.

ABOLITION OF THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

MR. BURNETT. I was in the House when Kentucky was called, but could not get to my seat time enough to introduce the bill to hold in my hand before the call passed from my State. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill to abolish the franking privilege.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

CHEBROK IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

MR. MORSE offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That no amount of time reported by the Secretary of the Navy as relative to conditional contracts made by him with the Chebroke Improvement Company be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

MR. MORSE offered the following resolutions; which were read, considered, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union:

Resolved, That for the more effectual suppression of the African slave trade, the treaty of 1845 between Great Britain and the United States, and the treaty of Washington, requiring each country to keep strictly upon the coast of Africa for that purpose, should be so changed as to require a specified and sufficient number of small steamers and fast-sailing brigs or schooners to be kept on said coast; and that the officers commanding the same should be enabled to hold the coast under their surveillance, and to enforce their duty, and cordially sustained by our Government in every discharge thereof.

Resolved, That as the African slave trade appears to be rapidly increasing, some effective mode of identifying the nationality of a vessel on the coast of Africa, suspected of being the slave trade, or of carrying slaves aboard, should be immediately adopted and carried into effect by the land and maritime nations of the earth; and that the Government of the United States has thus far, by refusing to establish such a system, shown a strange neglect of one of the best means of suppressing said trade.

Resolved, That the African slave trade is against the moral sentiment of mankind and a crime against human nature, and that, as the most highly civilized nations have made it a criminal offense or piracy under their own municipal laws, it ought at once, and without hesitation, to be declared a crime by the code of international law; and that for the purpose of aiding in the establishment of a more benevolent and wise, and so honorable to a nation and worthy of a philanthropic age, the President be requested to open negotiations on this subject with the Government of Europe, and make known to them the willingness and desire of the United States to have the African slave trade declared a crime against international law, and brought under the ban of the nation's civil and criminal laws.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask leave to introduce a resolution.

MR. WINSLOW. I object; let the call proceed regularly.

BOOKS ORDERED BY CONGRESS, ETC.

MR. PERRY offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to this House the whole amount that has been paid out of the Treasury for books ordered to be published by resolution of either or both Houses of the Thirty-third Congress; also the amount paid out of the Treasury for books ordered by the members in said Congress under the usual resolutions for supplying new members with books; also the full amount paid the said members of Congress as per diem compensation and mileage, and the full amount paid for each; also the estimated per diem expense of the members during the sessions of Congress over and above any of the said payments, and such officers and employees as are paid annual salaries.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS AND AGRICULTURE.

MR. TAPPAN presented joint resolutions of the State of New Hampshire, on the subject of a national bureau of statistics and agriculture; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

MR. MARSTON presented joint resolutions of the State of New Hampshire, in reference to weights and measures; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICTS.

MR. THAYER offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, and they are hereby, instructed to report a bill creating two land districts, which shall include all the public domain situated between the northern and southern boundaries of the States of Kansas and the eastern boundary of the State of California, and lying between Nebraska Territory, Washington Territory, and the State of Oregon, on the north, and the Indian Territory and the Territory of New Mexico on the south; the easterly part of said tract to be called the Jefferson land district, and the western part the Nevada land district.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS AND AGRICULTURE.

MR. TAPPAN. I move that the resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, which I presented a short time since, in reference to an agricultural bureau, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. HOOPER.

MR. BRIGGS introduced the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, instructed and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury which may be appropriated for that purpose, and may be done by the accounting officers of the Treasury to have been incurred for the proper legislative expenses of the Territory of Washington, by William H. Hooper, within the limits of said Territory under the appointment of Governor Brigham Young.

MR. BRIGGS. That resolution is one more of form than of substance; and I therefore decline.

MR. GROW. I must object to having this hour taken up by discussion.

MR. BRIGGS. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules?

THE SPEAKER. It is not during the morning hour.

MR. FLORENCE. If a resolution gives rise to debate, it goes over under this new rule.

MR. BRIGGS. I hope there will be no objection to the resolution.

MR. GROW. To allow debate would defeat the whole object of the rule.

MR. BRIGGS. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The motion was agreed to.

RECIPROcity TREATY.

MR. ELY introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, all the information in his possession relative to the practical working of the reciprocity treaty concluded with Great Britain on the 5th day of July, 1854, whether the provisions of said treaty are in accordance with the interests of the respective countries; what measures, if any, have been taken to procure correct information touching the practical operation and effect of the third clause of the said treaty upon the interests of American citizens; and whether, in his opinion, the said third article of the said treaty could not, with advantage to American interests, be either amended or rescinded.

MR. BRANCH. I desire to inquire if the Speaker holds that resolutions can be put upon their passage to-day, under the rule under which we are acting?

THE SPEAKER. Such is the ruling of the Chair.

MR. BRANCH. As I understand it, we are now calling States and Territories under the 26th rule—the new rule.

THE SPEAKER. That is so.

MR. BRANCH. That rule says that "all bills so introduced during the first hour after the Journal is read, shall be referred, without debate, to their appropriate committees." Now, I do not understand that any bill can be passed, except by unanimous consent, and the unanimous consent of the House can do anything.

THE SPEAKER. If the gentleman from North Carolina will read the whole resolution, he will see that the Chair is correct.

MR. BRANCH. My reason for calling the attention of the Chair to this matter now is, that I have any objection to the pending resolution, but that we may establish a correct practice under this new rule at the outset.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair stated some time ago that at the expiration of the morning hour he would call the States and Territories for resolutions, which would be referred to their appropriate committees; but that in case discussion should arise they must lie over.

MR. BRANCH. Does the Chair hold, then, that a resolution can be put upon its passage?

THE SPEAKER. If objected to, it cannot be put upon its passage.

MR. BRANCH. If there is but a single objection, will that prevent its being put upon its passage?

THE SPEAKER. If it give rise to debate, it must go over.

MR. BRANCH. Suppose a gentleman rises, under this rule, and offers a resolution and calls the previous question, and the previous question is seconded, and debate thus cut off: does the Chair hold that the resolution can be put upon its passage?

THE SPEAKER. The Chair supposes, if the previous question is seconded, that it might be. That would cut off debate.

MR. HOUSTON. Then what good does the resolution do?

MR. BRANCH. I do not make the point upon this resolution; but I hope the Chair will look to the rule, and determine its proper construction. It is an important resolution should come up, to which I should object. If the Chair is to make a decision in the present decision, I shall be compelled to appeal to the House. I think the Chair's decision would defeat the whole object of the rule.

The resolution was agreed to.

PUBLIC STORIES, ETC.

MR. JOHN COCHRANE introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to ascertain the names and addresses of the Thirty-sixth Congress all the information of which may be possessed respecting the performance of the labor required by the Government, and the purchase and the delivery from the public stores, of foreign goods and merchandise, entered, approved, and taxed with impost, at the port of New York; and here the same is performed, whether by laborers employed by the Government, or by laborers in the employ of contractors under contract with the Government, and the manner in which the same is performed with the date of any contract or contracts that may have been thus executed and delivered, the parties thereto, and the conditions thereof, and the object and purpose of the same, and the reasons therefor; what is the present condition of said contract or contracts; who is now interested in the same; and especially if he has been so interested by any member or members of Congress now here, or at any time have had, any direct or remote or contingent pecuniary interest therein; and the Secretary be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House aforesaid any information in his possession of the effect produced, or that may be produced, by a contract system for the performance of such labor at the public stores, upon the labors of the Government, upon those of the importers, and upon those of the laboring classes; and, further, whether the expense of performing such labor can be reduced by the price paid, together with any other and further information touching the subject of this inquiry that, in his opinion, may be either feasible or useful.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONSUL AT ASCENCION.

Mr. BARR introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency of fixing the salary for consul at Ascension in South America.

LABOR OF THE PUBLIC STORES AT NEW YORK.

Mr. BARR offered the following resolution: Resolved, That the Committee on Public Expenditures be, and they are hereby, discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the citizens of New York to examine into the contract made by the Secretary of the Treasury with McIntyre, Bixby & Co., for the labor of the public store, No. 11, Broadway, New York; and that the memorial be referred to a special committee of five, to be appointed by the Speaker; said committee to leave power to send for persons and papers, and to report at an early day.

Mr. BURNETT. Cannot we see the necessity for discharging the Committee on Public Expenditures from the consideration of this matter. It seems that that committee has charge of the investigation, and I certainly think that the House has quite enough of such committees.

THE SPEAKER. If the gentleman proposes to debate it, the resolution is the order.

Mr. BURNETT. I will not object to it; but I think it is all wrong.

Mr. BARR. I would say, for the information of the gentleman, that the chairman of the committee has told me that the committee has so much to attend to in relation to other matters, that they could not attend to this.

Mr. SPINNER. The chairman of that committee is not now in the House.

Mr. HINDMAN. As one of that committee, and after having conferred several months with it, I am very willing that the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York should be adopted. We have more business already referred to us than we can possibly get through with during the session.

The question was taken; and the resolution was adopted.

NAVIGATION OF THE HARLEM RIVER.

Mr. SICKLES offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, and he is hereby, required to transmit to this House all information in possession of the officers in charge of the Coast Survey, showing the practicability of making Harlem river navigable for commercial purposes, and the expense thereof.

BRONZE COPIES OF UNITED STATES MEDALS.

Mr. CONKLING introduced a joint resolution for bronze copies of United States medals; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

FEES OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. HUMPHREY offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be required to furnish this House with copies of all correspondence with the collector of the port of New York in reference to the practice of collecting fees at the custom-house at that city for permits to land the baggage of passengers; also with a copy of the decision of the United States circuit court of the State of New York, in the case of Lloyd Ogden, and others, owners of the bark Rover, vs. Hugh Maxwell, collector of the port, for the recovery of fees there collected; and that he be also required to state the amount of fees retained as consequences of said decision, and what amount, if any, is still claimed as remaining unpaid.

BACK PAY TO RETIRED OFFICERS.

Mr. HUMPHREY also presented a joint resolution from the State of New York, proposing to give back pay to retired or dropped officers who have been restored to their positions in the Navy, and at a higher grade; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LIABILITY OF SHIP-OWNERS.

Mr. HUMPHREY also introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to limit the liability of ship-owners, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a memorial from Edward Larned, of the subject of the Pacific railroad; and ask that it be referred to the select committee on that subject, and be ordered to be printed.

It was so ordered.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. FLORENCE offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the usual number of the report of meteorological observations, and the accompanying report of the Commissioner of Patents, be printed; and that the Committee on Printing be directed to inquire into the expediency of printing, for the use of the House, five thousand such copies.

THE UTAH EXPEDITION.

Mr. PALMER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Expenditures be instructed to inquire into the purchase, and the contracts for the purchase, of supplies of military stores, and the means of transportation made by the War Department, in connection with the late military expedition into the Territory of Utah; and generally to inquire into the alleged abuses of said Department in reference to its expenditure for transportation to and from said Territory, and the purchase and sale of public property on account of said expedition; with power to send for persons and papers, and with leave to sit during the sessions of the House, and to report at any time.

Mr. BRANCI. I prefer that this resolution should lie over for debate.

THE SPEAKER. If the gentleman proposes to debate it, it must lie over.

DUTIES ON BANK NOTES.

Mr. WHITELEY offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to: Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the propriety of reporting a bill imposing duties on notes of banks, and on any notes, bills of exchange, bank checks, or other obligations payable by banks.

REORGANIZATION OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. HUGHES offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to: Resolved, That the Secretary of War be required to furnish this House with a copy of the report to him from Lieutenant Colonel B. S. Roberts of the United States Army, on the reorganization of the militia, and the militia of the United States, under the laws of Congress carrying into effect the Constitution of the United States.

THE TOBACCO TRADE.

Mr. HUGHES also offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a select committee of — members be appointed by the Speaker to inquire into the present condition of the tobacco trade of the United States with foreign nations, and to report what negotiation or legislation may be necessary to improve its condition.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The blank ought to be filled. I move that the committee consist of five.

Mr. HUGHES. I would move that it consist of seven, to be taken from the tobacco-growing States.

The motion of Mr. HUGHES was agreed to.

RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH CANADA.

Mr. SPAULDING submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury communicate to this House any information in his possession in relation to the operation of the reciprocity treaty with Canada.

ADMISSION OF EX-MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That ex-members of Congress, elected agents excepted, shall be allowed admission to the floor at any time during its sessions; and that, in any rule thereof as denies this privilege shall be, and is hereby, repealed.

Mr. WINSLOW. The resolution proposes to change one of the rules of the House. I suppose there must be notice given of it. It lies over, of course.

THE SPEAKER. It must lie over one day.

SALARY OF CONSUL AT SWATWA.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a salary for the consul at Swatwa, in China.

Mr. SPINNER offered the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas it appears from the last annual report of the Postmaster General that the Postoffice at Swatwa, in China, at the post office at the city of New York the sum of $97,000 for the delivery of letters by carriers or penny-post boys; Resolved—

It is resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to furnish this House with a statement of the number of persons employed at Swatwa, and the number of letters delivered there from said post office, their respective duties, the amount of compensation allowed to each, and also an account of other expenditures made in connection with said business.

DOCUMENTS FOR GLOBE REPORTERS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I wish to ask that an order may be entered that the reporters for the Globe shall be entitled to one copy each of every document printed by order of the House. There seems to be some trouble about it now, and it is absolutely necessary in order that they may be able to make up their reports. I trust there will be no objection.

There being no objection, the following resolution was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be directed to furnish to the reporters of the House for the Congressional Globe one copy of each bill and report as have been or may be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The morning hour has expired, I believe. I desire to make some privileged reports from the Committee of Ways and Means; but I am willing that the call shall go on until all the States and Territories have been called, with the understanding that no motions shall be made to suspend the rules.

THE SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that will be the understanding.

There was no objection.

THE UTAH EXPEDITION.

Mr. BRANCH. A few moments ago, I objected to a resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PALMER], to inquire into certain expenditures connected with the expedition to Utah. I objected under the impression that the resolution called for a special committee. I have since looked at it, and ascertained that I was mistaken, and that it only directs the Committee on Public Expenditures to make the inquiry; and I desire, with the consent of the House, to withdraw the objection I then made. I would make this suggestion, however, to the gentleman from New York: I think he had better strike out the clause of the resolution which gives a right to the committee to sit during the sessions of the House. That is very irregular.

Mr. PHELPS. I would suggest also to the gentleman from New York not to clothe the committee now with power to send for persons and papers. That power can be given to the committee whenever they ask it and it shall be requisite.

Mr. PALMER. In compliance with the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina, I have stricken out the clause in the resolution authorizing the committee to sit during the sessions of the House. In regard to the objection of the gentleman from Missouri, I can assure the gentleman and the House that the committee do not feel disposed to abuse the privilege given them by the resolution, of sending for persons and papers; and that, at this late day of the session, they will bring the examination to a speedy close.

The resolution was then agreed to.

NATIONAL FOUNDRY IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. GILMER offered the following resolutions, which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a national foundry in the valley of Deep River, in North Carolina, and to report thereon by bill or otherwise.

Resolved further, That the petition and papers on this subject, submitted to said committee at the last Congress, be again referred for consideration.

MACON A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. HARDEMAN introduced a joint resolution constituting Macon, Georgia, a port of entry for the bargeage for the purpose of the proposed and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The preamble to the joint resolution recites that it is in the contemplation of the cotton-planters' convention of the State of Georgia to hold a fair, in the month of December, in the city of Macon; that it is contemplated by a foreign association to exhibit their goods at such fair; and that Macon, being neither a port of entry nor of delivery, the articles imported for exhibition cannot, under the existing law, be exempted from duties, though exempted again when withdrawn from exhibition.

The joint resolution constitutes Macon a port of entry so far and to such extent as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to extend thereby all the existing revenue laws prevailing at ports of entry and applicable to bonded warehouses, and to the bonding of imported goods, wares, and merchandise, and the exportation of the same; provided, that the effect and force thereof shall only appertain to importations made for the purpose of exhibition at the said fair.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I ask that the joint resolution be put upon its passage.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I think it should be put upon its passage.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There can be no objection to it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARDEMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon its table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARRANGEMENT OF SEATS.

Mr. MILES. I desire to offer the following resolution and call the previous question upon its adoption:

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Doorkeeper and Superintendent of Public Buildings to preserve the present arrangement of the benches in the Hall of the House; and that any existing order of the House to the contrary is hereby rescinded.

Several MEMBERS objected to the resolution.

Mr. MILES. I call for the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution; and I call the attention of the Chair to the following paragraph from the Manual.

"A demand for the previous question immediately upon submitting a resolution prevents debate, and, if seconded, the resolution need not be voted, as in the case of debate arising."

I suppose, therefore, an objection to the resolution will not prevent its adoption at this time, if the previous question be seconded.

The SPEAKER. The resolution can only be adopted by unanimous consent. The State of South Carolina had been passed in the call, and the gentleman from South Carolina could only introduce his resolution by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object to the consideration of that resolution at this time. When the States have been called through it will then be in order to offer it, I presume.

MASSACHUSETTS SHOEMAKERS.

Mr. McQUEEN submitted the following resolution, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of, and if deemed fit to report a bill for, emancipating the inhaling oom and voo-oom in slavery in the State of Massachusetts, from the tyranny of the "capital" men in this State, by repelling all duty on boots and shoes, leather, and all other imported articles used in their business.

ARRANGEMENT OF SEATS—AGAIN.

Mr. HILL. I now offer the resolution, which my friend from South Carolina [Mr. Miles] just now sought to offer, in relation to the preservation of the present arrangement of the seats in this Hall. The State of Georgia, I understand, is now called; and I have the right, therefore, to offer the resolution.

Mr. LANDRUM. I object to the introduction of that resolution.

Mr. MILES. I think the resolution cannot be objected to. It was received by unanimous consent.

Mr. HILL. I think I had the right to offer it under the call of the State of Georgia for resolutions.

Mr. MILES. I again call attention to the paragraph which I read from the Manual, by which it will be seen that, under the rules, any gentleman may have an any resolution, under the call of the States for resolutions, acted on finally if the previous question is seconded upon it; and that an objection cannot prevent a vote of the House upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the agreement of the House, made at the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN], to be, that the States should continue to be called for resolutions only to which no objection should be made.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I make the further point of order that the State of Georgia had been passed in the call, and that Alabama had been called.

Mr. HILL. No, sir. The State of Georgia had been just called, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided in every case that when a State has been passed in the call, no gentleman can offer any resolution from that State, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. HILL. The State of Georgia had not been passed, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that the resolution of the gentleman is not in order, objection having been made.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS OVER.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, offered the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the two Houses of Congress do adjourn on the 30th of April next, until the 30th of May next, 1860.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to know, if these resolutions go over now, when it will be in order to discuss them.

The SPEAKER. At some future day, the Chair supposes, when they come up in their order for consideration.

Mr. HUGHES. Do the rules make any provision for calling up these resolutions for discussion? If so, I wish to know when they will come up.

The SPEAKER. Whenever the House sees fit to order them up, the Chair supposes.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to ask how they may be called up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes they may be called up by proceeding to the business on the Speaker's table. It is enough for the present, however, that they cannot be debated now.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I call the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the resolution?

Mr. SEDGWICK. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the resolution cannot be introduced.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. Then I want it to be understood that I will move to suspend the rules to act on the resolution whenever it will be proper to do so.

Mr. LOGG. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. I think it is desirable that the resolution should be voted on. If we are to adjourn over for a month, I think we should know it.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order; the resolution has not been received.

VICKSBURG CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. SINGLETON offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire into the expediency of the mail between Columbia and Hound Bay, in the parish of Claiborne and State of Louisiana; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

LOUISIANA POST ROUTES.

Mr. LANDRUM presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, asking provision by Congress for the transportation of the United States mail between Camden, in Arkansas, and —, in Louisiana, and for the transportation of the mail between Columbia and Hound Bay, in the parish of Claiborne and State of Louisiana; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

RIGHTS OF HEBREWS IN SWITZERLAND.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any correspondence between the United States and Switzerland relating to that class in the treaty between the two countries which discriminates against the privileges of the citizens of the United States holding the Hebrew faith, when visiting or residing in Switzerland.

CRUELTY TO SEAMEN.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM also offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of immediate and adequate legislation for the punishment and suppression of cruelties in the American merchant naval service, and report measures accordingly.

HOOR RULE.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I give notice of my intention to move an amendment to the 34th rule of the House, by striking out the first clause thereof, limiting debate to one hour.

The SPEAKER. It will be entered.

WAR OF 1812.

Mr. HOWARD offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to this House, as early as practicable, an account of the number of the regular army, militia, volunteers, marines, privateers, and marines who were in the service of the Government of the United States during the war with Great Britain, 1812, for a period of six months and upwards.

SLAVERY.

Mr. BLAKE. I offer the following resolution: Whereas the chattelizing of humanity and the holding of persons as property is contrary to natural justice and the fundamental principles of our political system, and is notoriously a reproach to our country throughout the civilized world, and a serious hindrance to the progress of republican liberty among the nations of the earth: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and the same are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill for the speedy and effectual abolishing and interdicting slavery wherever Congress has the constitutional power to legislate on the subject.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, and others, objected. [Cries from the Democratic benches of "Don't object!"]

Several MEMBERS. Let the resolution be read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BLAKE. I trust that, as the resolution is one of reference only, there will be no objection.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of the resolution? [Cries of "Don't object!"] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BRANCH. Object to the preamble. [Cries of "It is too late!"]

Mr. HINDMAN. I hope that there will be no objection to the introduction of the resolution. Let it come in, and let us have the yeas and nays upon it. Let us make the record.

Mr. SINGLETON. I hope that all objection will be withdrawn. I want, upon the vote by yeas and nays, to let the country see how many Representatives upon this floor will vote for such a resolution.

Mr. BRANCH. At the request of friends all round me, I withdraw my objection to the preamble.

Mr. SINGLETON. I demand the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. KILLINGER. I object to the resolution [Cries of "It is too late!"] No, it is not too late I object to the resolution, and I ask that my objection be noticed.

Mr. BRANCH. It is too late. The resolution has been received, and the yeas and nays demanded on it. [Cries of "Call the roll!"] "Let us vote!"

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 60, nays 105; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Chandler, Adams, Aldrich, Allen, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bryson, Buffum, Burlingame, Burroughs, Butterfield, Clark, Carter, Coffey, Conkling, Curtis, Delano, Davis, Edwards, Edwards, Jr., Merrill, Furman, Foster, Frank, Gooch, Gow, Gurley, Hale, Helms, Hurd, Humphrey, Hurlbut, James, W. K. Kellogg, DeWitt, C. K. Key, Lovell, Mack, May, Merritt, Olney, Palmer, Foster, Pottle, Rice, Sedgwick, Sherman, Simes, Spaulding, Spinner, William Stewart, Tappan, Tompkins, Train, Vandever, Walden, Watson, Cullahan, der C. Washburn, Ellen B. Washburn, Wells, and Windsor—40.

Mr. NAYLOR. Messrs. Allen, Thomas L. Anderson, Ashmore, Barry, Burkholder, Barry, Barrett, Bosack, Roelke, Boyce, Branch, Briggs, Bristol, Burch, Burwell, Campbell, John B. Clark, Cropper, Cobb, John Cochran, Cooper, Calk, James Craig, Burton Colgate, Crawford, Curry, H. W. Davis, John C. Davis, Beaman Davis, De Jarnette, Dunn, Edmunds, Eldridge, Florence, Fox, Foster, Giddens, Gault, Gilmer, Hamilton, Haslam, J. Morrison Harris, John T. Harris, Hinton, Hickman, Hill, Hindman, Hutcheson, Jackson, James, Jackson, Jones, Keane, Keane, Kunkel, Lammie, Landrum, James M. Leach, Lusk, Logan, Love, Mabey, Charles H. Martin, Elbert H. Martin, Mc Knight, McPherson, McDowell, McMillan, Miles, Milner, Millard, Montgomery, Latham T. Moore, Sydney Moore, Edward Jay Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Nixon, Nowell, Pugh, Potter, Fryer, Pugh, Thomas, Reagan, Rags, James I. Robinson, Louis Schwartz, Scott, Seranston, James, Singleton, William Smith, Stallworth, Stevenson, James Stewart, Stokes, Taylor, Thomas, Thomas, Trimble, Underwood, Vandykham, Whitely, Winslow, Woodson, and Wright—109.

So the resolution was rejected.

Pending the above call,

Mr. DUNN said: I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. PHELPS. That motion is not in order. The Clerk has proceeded with the call of the roll, and there has been a response; and pending the call of the roll no other business is in order. The roll-call must be proceeded with.

Mr. DUNN. I made my motion in time.

Mr. PHELPS. The call of the roll was proceeded with, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ADAMS] answered in the affirmative.

Mr. HINDMAN. And I heard his response.

THE SPEAKER. The Clerk has recorded the name of the gentleman from Massachusetts in the affirmative.

Mr. PHELPS. Then the motion to lay upon the table is not in order and cannot be received.

THE SPEAKER. Such is the decision of the Chair. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNN], that the resolution be laid upon the table, was not made until the call of the roll was commenced and there was a response, and it is of course out of order, and cannot be entertained.

Mr. KILLINGER. What becomes of my objection? I objected to the resolution.

Mr. SICKLES. I ask that the resolution be read.

Mr. DAVIDSON. and others. It is too late. There has been a response.

Mr. GARNETT. I hope that there will be no objection to the reading of the resolution.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The resolution has been read twice already.

Mr. KILLINGER. I insist on my point of order. I objected to the introduction of the resolution.

THE SPEAKER. What becomes of that objection?

THE SPEAKER. It came too late. [Cries of "Call the roll!"]

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I ask that the rule be enforced, and that members shall not be allowed to go near the Clerk's desk during the vote.

Mr. BURNETT. I hope that the resolution will be read, so that we may all know exactly what it is.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair consider that the roll has been commenced?

THE SPEAKER. The Chair has already so decided.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the reading of the resolution interfere with the call of the roll?

THE SPEAKER. It will not suspend the call of the roll.

Mr. COLFAX. It is merely a resolution of inquiry, and not mandatory; and being willing to inquire into the expediency, I shall vote "ay."

Mr. BLAKE. I ask that the resolution be read again. I am sure that it is not understood by members.

Mr. HILL. I wish to remark that this resolution has been read twice; and, to my astonishment, the mover now calls for the rereading of it. That certainly cannot be necessary for information.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I object to all debate during the call of the roll.

Mr. HILL. Whenever any gentleman rises in his place and demands the reading of a resolution for information, he ought to have it read.

Mr. HINDMAN. Only by unanimous consent.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will have the resolution read.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I object.

Mr. TAPPAN. I did not hear the resolution read, and I want to know what it is before I vote on it.

Mr. BURNETT. I rise to a question of order, and I hope the Chair will preserve order.

The roll has been ordered to be called; the call was commenced, and there has been a response; and nothing is in order except the call of the roll.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will not have the call interfered with by the reading of the resolution.

The call will be recommenced after the name of Mr. ADAMS.

Mr. HILL. That is all I ask.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I rise to ask a question of the Chair, for information. After the reading of the resolution will it be in order to move to lay the resolution upon the table?

THE SPEAKER. It will not be.

The resolution was then read.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Mr. Speaker, [cries of "Call the roll!"] I desire to ask whether the first vote is not upon the resolution?

THE SPEAKER. The question before the House is upon agreeing to the resolution. [Cries of "Call the roll!"]

Mr. SHERMAN. [Cries of "Order!"] I desire to ask whether the question is now upon the adoption of the resolution, or upon the adoption of the resolution and preamble?

THE SPEAKER. It is upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. And not upon the preamble?

THE SPEAKER. The preamble is another thing; and this vote has nothing to do with the preamble.

The Clerk resumed the call of the roll.

During the continuance of the call, the following proceedings took place:

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. ANDERSON, was called from the House unexpectedly, and I know he will regret his absence at this time. [Laughter.] I cannot imagine what gentlemen are laughing at. Gentlemen may be laboring under an impression which I do not intend to permit them to labor under. They shall not impute anything wrong to me.

Mr. HINDMAN. I do not intend myself to impute anything wrong to the gentleman, but I have the right to comment upon the absence of the gentleman.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say to gentlemen that my colleague was called from the House before he knew that this resolution was to be introduced.

Mr. BARR, when his name was called said: I desire to say a word in reference to my vote. I am opposed to all this agitation of the slavery question in every sense. [Order! "order!"] I vote "no."

Mr. BOULIGNY. I am paired off with Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. If I were to vote I should vote "no."

Mr. FRANK stated that Mr. BURNHAM was paired off with Mr. SICKLES.

Mr. DAVIDSON. My colleague on the Committee on Enrolled Bills [Mr. THEAKER] is detained from the House, and I cannot vote while he is absent. If called away, I shall vote "no."

Mr. DAWES. Last week I paired off upon all questions of this character with Mr. WESTER, of Maryland; otherwise I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. FRANK stated that Mr. FERRY was paired off with Mr. MALLORY.

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to give the reasons—

Mr. BURNETT. I object to all debate.

THE SPEAKER. All debate is out of order.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me to state my reasons for my vote?

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir, vote "ay" or "no," without explanation.

Mr. MARTIN, of Virginia, when his name was called, said: I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KILGORE] to give his attention a moment. I believe he paired me off with Mr. CASE until twelve o'clock to-day.

Mr. KILGORE. That is so; and I would be glad, as Mr. CASE is not here, if the gentleman would extend his pair until Wednesday.

Mr. MARTIN, of Virginia, said: I have a right to vote "ay" or "no." I would disagree my district should I make an explanation.

Mr. STOKES stated that Mr. MAYNARD was paired off with Mr. STANTON.

Mr. LOGAN stated that his colleague, Mr. McCLENNAN, was paired off with Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague, Mr. PETTON, (who has been called home by the sickness of his daughter,) with Mr. WOOD, from the 24th of March, for twenty days.

It was noted that Mr. FENTON was detained in his room by illness.

Mr. McKNIGHT stated that Mr. MOOREHEAD was paired off with Mr. LAMAR on all questions on which there might be an antagonism between them.

Mr. BRABSON stated that Mr. NELSON was paired off with Mr. KILLINGER.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I desire to have the 42d rule read, requiring all members present to vote. I want it read now during the call of the roll, as I notice that several members have declined to vote. I want every man in the House to vote on this resolution.

Mr. STEWART, of Pennsylvania. I object.

THE SPEAKER. Objection being made, the rule cannot be read now.

Mr. SICKLES. I have paired off with Mr. BRABSON, of Connecticut, upon this and kindred questions; otherwise I would have been glad to extinguish this firebrand by voting "no."

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I was paired off with Mr. CLEVERLY until to-day; but as he is not here, I decline to vote.

Mr. GILMER stated that Mr. VANCE was paired off with Mr. COVODE.

Mr. McKNIGHT stated that Mr. VANCE was paired off.

Mr. ENGLISH. I was not within the bar of the House when my name was called, but I have been present, I should have voted "no."

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM stated that his colleague, Mr. PENDLETON, was detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I ask leave to vote. I think I was in the adjoining room when my name was called.

Objection was made.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I desire to say that if I had been present I should have voted "no."

Mr. BRABSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to vote. I was out when my name was called. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. I object.

Mr. GARNETT. I hope it will be agreed all around that gentlemen upon all sides may vote.

Mr. BOCKO. I have voted; but lest I might lose the opportunity, I wish to state that I shall ask for the enforcement of the 42d rule, which requires every member in the House to vote.

I have seen several gentlemen sitting in their seats and not voting. I think it is a shame, if they refuse to comply with the rule, is to pass a vote of censure upon them, and I shall designate members by name and move a vote of censure unless they vote.

Mr. KILLINGER stated that he was paired off with Mr. WOOD.

Mr. FRENCH. I did not answer when my name was called, because I was not certain of the purport of the resolution. I have examined it, and regard it as ill-advised and ill-considered.

Mr. BURNETT. I object to all debate upon this vote.

Mr. FRENCH. I am opposed to negro slavery, and will resist its extension into territory where it does not now exist. So far as this resolution is applicable to that institution, I have no personal objection to it; but as it proposes to give freedom to every individual, and may be fairly construed to apply to criminals in the penitentiary in this District, and to convicts under the laws of the United States everywhere, I am opposed to it, and shall vote "no."

Mr. JENKINS. In reference to this matter of pairing off, I want to know if one gentleman can pair off with another gentleman upon the same side; and whether, if a gentleman is paired off with another who would vote in the negative, he does not thereby practically put himself upon the affirmative side of the question?

THE SPEAKER. The Chair cannot settle these questions of pairs. It does not belong to the or-

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 1859.

NEW SERIES.....No. 86.

der of the House, but is a mere matter between gentlemen. The Chair will not undertake to settle it.

Mr. CURTIS, when his name was called, said: I want to have this matter referred to the Judiciary Committee. I think that we would then get light upon it. I therefore vote "ay."

Mr. HOWARD stated that he had paired off with Mr. CAVE.

Mr. BONHAM. Having gone into the Senate Chamber to see the Senators from my State, I was not within the bar when my name was called. I therefore ask leave to vote.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I object.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope that no objection will be made to all gentlemen voting. This is a very important resolution, [laughter,] and I hope that gentlemen on the other side, and on this side, may be desired to vote will be permitted to do so, who may DENYME. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the gentleman from South Carolina voting?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think it is a bad rule to allow gentlemen to vote who have not been in the Hall when their names were called. I therefore object.

Mr. BONHAM. Then I desire to say—

Mr. LOVEJOY. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order. When the question shall be disposed of the gentleman may make his statement.

Mr. BONHAM. I have the floor, and I desire to say by a word—

Mr. LOVEJOY. I object to debate.

Mr. BONHAM. I do not propose to debate it.

Mr. LOVEJOY. What is the gentleman doing now?

Mr. BONHAM. I merely desire to say that perhaps I ought to be paired with the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. STANTON.] A friend of his called on the honorable gentleman from Virginia and myself to-day, and spoke about procuring a pair with Mr. STANTON. I would have paired with him with great pleasure, and will pair with him now, although I do not know that I have a right to say that he would like to pair off with me on this question. If his friends on that side of the House are agreed, I am willing to take that course, and that it shall be regarded as a pair from the beginning. I should have paired with him if he could have got no objection. I have only to say, in addition, that I would have voted against the resolution.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois, when his name was called said: Regarding slavery as a local and not a national institution.

The SPEAKER. Debate is objected to on all sides of the House. The Chair, therefore, asks the gentleman to vote.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. If objection is made to remarks, I will not insist upon speaking out of order. I vote "no."

Mr. HASKIN said: I was not within the bar when my name was called. I ask the privilege of the House to vote.

Objection was made.

Mr. HASKIN. Then I desire to state that if I had been within the bar when my name was called, I would have voted "no."

Mr. SICKLES. As it appears that many gentlemen of the House were not present when their names were called, and as, I suppose, there is a strong desire that the record on this question shall be complete, I suggest that some gentleman voting with the majority shall move to reconsider, and have the yeas and nays taken on that motion, so that all gentlemen may have an opportunity of getting on the record.

Mr. BRABSON. I want to know whether my vote was recorded?

The SPEAKER. It was not; objection being made.

Mr. BRABSON. The gentleman from Indiana

[Mr. KILGORE] objected, but he afterwards withdrew that objection, and then I voted. After I had voted, some other gentleman objected; but I insist that my vote was recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the objection was in time.

Mr. BRABSON. But the gentleman from Indiana withdrew that objection.

Mr. KUNKEL objected.

The SPEAKER. Other gentlemen objected.

Mr. FLORENCE. I suggest that, by unanimous consent, the votes which gentlemen would have given may be journalized. Thus, gentlemen who have not had an opportunity of voting on this resolution, may get on the Journal the fact as to how they would have voted. Gentlemen are very sensitive on this subject, and desire to have their votes recorded, that they may perpetuate their fame. I propose, therefore, that, by unanimous consent, gentlemen be permitted to state on the Journal how they would have voted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object, and insist that the call of the roll shall be proceeded with.

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not know that the proposition is in order; but if it be, I will make that motion, and suppose a majority of the House would agree they would have voted.

Mr. BURNETT. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. FLORENCE. The proposition is simply that gentlemen who were not within the bar of this House when their names were called, and who have not voted, may have the opportunity of inserting on the Journal how they would have voted.

Mr. BRABSON. I make this point of order, if an objection is made to my voting: an objection was made and withdrawn. Do I understand the Chair to decide that, after the objection was withdrawn, I had not the right to vote?

The SPEAKER. Not when another gentleman objected.

Mr. BRABSON. If the objection was before I voted.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BRABSON. But suppose that I voted before the objection was made?

The SPEAKER. If there be an objection made to the gentleman voting, and that objection stands good at the time of voting, and if the objection be subsequently withdrawn, another gentleman may object; otherwise, gentlemen might be intentionally deceived.

Mr. BRABSON. Then I say that, if I had been entitled to vote, I would have recorded my vote in the negative.

Mr. GARNETT. I rise to a privileged question. I move to suspend the rules so far as to allow all members who were not present when their names were called, to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considers that the motion is not in order while the vote is being taken.

Mr. FLORENCE. Do I understand the Chair to rule that the proposition which I made is out of order at this time?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FLORENCE. Very well; then I will take an opportunity to propose it when it is in order; or the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARNETT] may answer the same purpose.

The SPEAKER. It will be a proper motion when it is in order.

Mr. KILGORE. I rise for the purpose of asking to be excused from voting on this question.

Mr. BOCKOCK. That is not in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order while the vote is being taken.

Mr. POTTLE. I desire to inquire whether my name is recorded?

The SPEAKER. It is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. POTTLE. I desire to say that I voted "ay" on the resolution, not on the preamble.

Mr. BRANCH. I object to debate.

Mr. POTTLE. My vote was simply on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The Clerk proceeded to read the vote.

Mr. BONHAM. I desire to be understood on the subject of my pair with the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not feel myself at liberty to say that I am paired with Mr. STANTON, unless it meets with the entire approval of his friends on the other side.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina had better vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may vote now, if he feels himself at liberty to do so.

Mr. BONHAM. I was not within the bar when my name was called, but I ask unanimous consent to vote.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I object.

Mr. BONHAM. Then I have only to say that had I been within the bar when my name was called I would have voted in the negative.

Mr. EIGHTON. I hope that by unanimous consent the gentleman from South Carolina will be considered as paired with my colleague, [Mr. STANTON.]

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the gentleman themselves.

Mr. DIMMICK. I was not within the bar when my name was called, but I ask the unanimous consent of the House to vote.

Mr. COLFAX. I object.

Mr. DIMMICK. If I had been within the bar I would have voted "no."

The vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to submit a motion that the preamble be laid on the table, unless the preamble falls with the resolution.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I interpret a question of higher privilege. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to know whether the preamble is disposed of. If not, I move to lay it on the table.

The SPEAKER. The preamble falls with the resolution, and there is nothing left on which to attach a motion.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I will now state my question of privilege. In offering the resolution which I propose to offer, I say that I do not wish to do any gentleman on this floor injustice. If, therefore, I include in this resolution the name of any gentleman who did not violate the rule, and if he will get up, and so state the fact, I will have his name stricken out, or offer the following resolution as a question of privilege:

Resolved, That Hon. DAVID KILGORE, a member of this House from the State of Indiana, and Hon. ISAAC WARREN, a member of this House from the State of Maine, being in the House—

Mr. PERRY. I object to the reading of the resolution.

Mr. BOCKOCK. It is a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. It is presented as a question of privilege.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I will state it as a question of privilege. I think it is a question of high privilege. I offer this resolution:

Resolved, That Hon. DAVID KILGORE, a member of this House from the State of Indiana, and Hon. ISAAC WARREN, a member of this House from the State of Maine, being in the House and in their seats while the vote was being taken upon the resolution just offered, and failing to vote, while the rules of this House require them to do so, unless excused, have entitled themselves to receive, and do hereby receive, the contents of the House.

Mr. KILGORE obtained the floor.

Mr. GROW. I suppose the Speaker will submit to the House whether this is a question of privilege or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supports that it is a question of privilege, and has to be submitted to the House.

Mr. GROW. I ask the Speaker to submit it to the House to decide whether it is a question of privilege or not.

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Chair, as the Chair supposes, to decide whether it is a question of privilege or not.

Mr. GROW. The Chair can submit the question to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Not unless the Chair is in doubt.

Mr. COLFAX. I wish to state a fact which, perhaps, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bowers] has overlooked. I am glad to find gentlemen upon the other side anxious for the maintenance and observance of the rules; but I wish to call attention to the fact that the gentlemen who have insisted on speaking when called to order and instructed by the Chair to take their seats, have been members upon his own side of the House.

Mr. CRAIG, of North Carolina. I call the gentleman from Indiana to order. His remarks are not pertinent to the question before the House.

Mr. COLFAX. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia why, if he is so vigilant for an enforcement of the rules, he has overlooked these breaches of the rules heretofore?

Mr. HINDMAN. The gentleman has himself been called to order. Why doesn't he take his seat?

Mr. KILGORE. I suppose I have the floor.

Mr. COLFAX. I understand that I am speaking by the consent of the gentleman from Virginia. Does the gentleman from Arkansas ask me to order?

Mr. HINDMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina called you to order.

Mr. COLFAX. Then, I will set an example to gentlemen opposite by taking my seat.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, there is, perhaps, no gentleman in this House who would reject a vote of censure by his peers more than I would. I was anxious to end my vote upon this resolution; but I did not desire to be placed in an awkward position. A portion of that resolution I endorse heartily; a portion of it, although it proposes an inquiry merely, I could not consistently vote for. That portion of the resolution which instructs the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of interdicting slavery wherever Congress has the power to do so, I endorse to its fullest extent.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Where has it the power, in your judgment?

Mr. KILGORE. I will tell the gentleman in a few moments. I could not vote for that portion of it which declares in favor of liberating every human being.

Several MEMBERS. That is not in the resolution it is in the preamble.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, it is in the resolution. Will the Clerk read me the resolution?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I rise to a question of order. I would like to know whether the abstract question of slavery, or slavery in any of its forms within the Union, is now the subject of discussion on the resolution of censure presented by the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Chair supposes not. The question of slavery is not before the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to vote.

Mr. KILGORE. I cannot yield the floor now. Mr. HILL. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. It seems to be very difficult for gentlemen to confine themselves to the proper range of debate. I wish to know whether, in connection with this resolution of censure, it would be at all germane to discuss the coming presidential election, and the influence which the resolution which has been acted on to-day may have upon it?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Chair must refer that question to the gentleman from Georgia himself.

Mr. NIDELACK. I wish to appeal to gentlemen upon this side of the House not to interrupt my colleague. This is rather a serious matter to him. The resolution affects him personally, and I hope the strict rules will not be enforced upon him. It is due to him that he should be heard.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to find that my colleague has such kind personal regard for myself, as I know he has for all his colleagues.

The part of the resolution to which I objected is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and the cause is hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill giving perfect freedom to every human being.

I object to that part of the resolution. Although it is a mere matter of inquiry, I would not be willing to cast my vote in favor of that portion of the resolution; and hence I did not vote.

The closing part of the resolution is as follows: "and interdicting slavery wherever Congress has constitutional power to legislate upon the subject."

That part of the resolution I heartily approve and should most cheerfully vote for; but the resolution was not susceptible of division. I was required to vote for it as a whole; and not choosing to vote for the first portion of it, I declined to vote at all. I could not vote in favor of the first branch of the resolution, because it would restrict Congress in the postmaster's office all over the country; and I am the last man who would be willing to add to the strength of any party by turning those men loose, and particularly at this period of time, when their votes would be of such service in the coming political campaign.

Mr. PAYOR. Have you finished?

Mr. KILGORE. No, sir; I am not through yet. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] asked me a question, and I presume I may be permitted to respond to it. The gentleman from Virginia, when Congress had the power to interdict slavery? I answer, in the District of Columbia, and in all the Territories of this nation.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Are you in favor of the exercise of the power?

Mr. KILGORE. I am in favor of the gradual abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. I am in favor of prohibiting the extension of slavery into one foot of territory now free. I am opposed to its extension in every form. So far as the States are concerned, I do not believe that Congress has any power to interfere with the act situation there. If, as gentlemen say, the legislation of Congress within its proper jurisdiction will drive those States where slavery exists to abolish it, that is but a consequence of the exercise of a legitimate power, and it is their misfortune, not my fault.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Do you believe in the power of Congress to abolish slavery in the dock-yards and arsenals?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman from Indiana is correct, I think it is time that we proceed with the public business.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me first answer the question of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BARKSDALE. My question is, whether the gentleman believes that Congress has power to prevent the slave trade between the States, and to abolish slavery in the forts, dock-yards, and arsenals?

Mr. KILGORE. It is not a question that is now before the House; and, therefore, it is not necessary that I should express any opinion upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from Indiana yields to me now, as I understand him; and, in order that we may do some little public business still to-day, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana one question, which it will take but a moment to answer.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object. I think we have spent time enough on this subject.

Mr. BURNETT. I merely wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana why, if he is in favor of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia, inasmuch as all the papers relating to that subject are in his hands, which have been referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, he has not reported a bill for that purpose?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to debate. I insist upon my motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. GARNETT. I want it understood that we on this side are ready to take a straight vote upon this resolution. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BOCCOCK. I was about to say that I wanted to hear some explanation from the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN], when I should have been willing to have withdrawn the resolution.

Several MEMBERS. No debate.

Mr. BOCCOCK. I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. HINDMAN. I object to the withdrawal.

Mr. GROW. It is to be voted on, I want to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to withdraw his resolution.

THE MAIL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. COLFAX. I ask the consent of the House to report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a joint resolution for the relief of the contractors of the Post Office Department.

The order was read, and the joint resolution was introduced and read a first and second time.

Mr. COLFAX. I now ask that a letter from the Third Assistant Postmaster General may be read, explaining the necessity there is for the speedy passage of this joint resolution, and then I think there will be objection to its being put on its passage immediately.

The letter from the Third Assistant Postmaster General was read.

Mr. COLFAX. I will say, in explanation of the joint resolution, and under the law, technically, the net revenues of the thirty thousand post-offices of the United States are in the Treasury of the United States; really, however, they are in the pockets of the postmasters until they are paid over to the mail contractors under the direction of the Post Office Department.

The deficiency bill for the Post Office Department, which was passed near the commencement of the present session of Congress, made appropriations for the service of the Department only up to the 31st of December last. Another quarter's revenue has not been received. Now I am going to the House that owing to the failure in making appropriations for this service at the last session of Congress, most of the mail contractors were compelled to borrow money at most exorbitant rates, for which the bill passed at the present session afforded no relief. Now I ask that this measure be passed, permitting the Post Office Department to devote the legitimate revenues of that Department to the payment of the amounts due at the present quarter, which will afford relief to the contractors, and enable them to keep out of the hands of the money lenders. I repeat that the resolution only authorizes the use of the income of the Post Office Department. Whatever surplus is required must, of course, be appropriated directly out of the Treasury. This will enable the Department to pay about one-third of the indebtedness to the contractors at the beginning of the quarter.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that this bill is confined in its operations to the present quarter, and that it does not give this general power to the Department for any longer time.

Mr. COLFAX. It does not. I will remark, further, that it was recommended unanimously by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman if the postmasters in the country do not usually pay the revenues of their offices over to the contractors?

Mr. COLFAX. No, sir; they are not permitted to do it by law until the money has been appropriated by Congress.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I know they do not pay through my county last year. I do not know whether it will be the same this year.

Mr. COLFAX. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that by the law the postmasters retain the revenue of their offices in their own pockets until authorized to pay it out by the Department.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I know nothing about that. I know they pay it directly over to the contractor.

Mr. COVODE. I call for the reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes the Post Office Department to use the revenues of the Post Office Department up to the 31st March, 1860, in part payment of contracts for carrying the mails, salaries of route agents, &c.

Mr. COLFAX. Now, if there be no objection, I will move the joint resolution may be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COLFAX moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. HASKIN. I rise in a privileged question. I am instructed, by the Committee on Public Expenditures, to report the testimony taken by them in relation to the public printing, and to enable the minority to report on the case, I shall offer now, on behalf of the majority of the committee, a joint resolution, and ask that it be made the special order for Tuesday, the 3d of April, at two o'clock, p. m.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order. I submit that this committee has no privilege to make this report on this day. The rules provide that to-day shall be set apart for the transaction of a particular business, and the power granted to the committee to print and publish at any time only extends to their right to report when they can do so without interfering with matters coming up directly under the rules. In other words, I submit that the power given this committee to report at any time does not have the effect of abrogating the standing rules of the House. There is a rule which provides that this day shall be consumed in the introduction of resolutions.

Mr. HASKIN. The resolution adopted by the House gave this committee the right to report at any time, and my only object now is to enable the joint resolutions set down for some future day, so as to enable the minority of the committee to submit their report. I move that the report be postponed to and made the special order for Tuesday, the 3d of April.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I will suggest to my colleague that he say Wednesday, the 4th of April.

Mr. HASKIN. Very well; but what will accommodate gentlemen, I will name that day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am apprehensive of special orders. They will, by and by, come so thick that we shall have no time to devote to the ordinary business of the House.

Mr. HASKIN. Well, sir, I submit the motion that the joint resolution be made the special order for the 4th of April.

Mr. BRANCH. I shall ask that the joint resolution be read before I consent that they be made a special order.

The Clerk read the joint resolutions as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter no person shall be elected, either as the Printer to the Senate or House of Representatives, who is not, in the regular election, a principal printer, and who is not a person of skill and ability as a member of that trade or profession. That hereafter, upon the election of the Printer to the Senate, he shall execute a bond, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, in the penalty of $25,000, to the Superintendent of the Public Printing, and subject to the approval of the said Superintendent and the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, for the faithful and honest performance of all the duties devolving upon him as such Senate Printer. And in like manner, upon the election of a Printer to the House of Representatives, he shall execute and deliver to the said Superintendent a bond, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, in the penalty of $25,000, subject to the like approval, and for the like objects, which bond shall be made, executed, and delivered within ten days after such election respectively, and shall, within that time, be filed in the office of the said Superintendent. That the prices exacted by the printer for the public printing by the act entitled "An act to provide for executing the public printing and establishing the prices thereof for each printed copy," approved August 1, 1846, and by the several acts amendatory thereof, that is to say, for composition, press-work, folding, stitching, and inserting, and plates to be, and the same are, reduced forty per cent.; and that for the purpose of giving full force and effect to this resolution, the Superintendent of the Public Printing is hereby authorized and directed to cause the accounts of the Public Printer or Printers, to be made out and rendered to him as heretofore, under the provisions of the act of August 1859, (except as to the printing of the Post Office blanks, which have been ordered by law to be put out by contract at the lowest bidder) and before certifying the same to the Treasury for payment, to deduct the aggregate amount of each account so rendered the sum of forty per cent., and the residue shall be received by the said Printer, or Printers, as so far as concerns the work stated in said accounts. This resolution shall take effect from the passage thereof.

Reading the reading of the joint resolutions, Mr. REAGAN said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Can this report come in here interfering with the regular business before the House, and must it be acted upon now, to the exclusion of all other business?

The SPEAKER. The report is properly before the House.

Mr. BRANCH. I hope the resolutions will be read. It is an important matter, and we ought to know what they provide.

Mr. REAGAN. I make the point of order that the authority to report at any time does not also give authority to consider anything reported from that committee at any time.

The SPEAKER. The power to report includes the power to ask for the consideration of the report.

The Clerk finished the reading of the resolutions.

Mr. HASKIN. I will say to the House that this is a subject which should be acted upon speedily. The object of the joint resolutions which I have just reported from the Committee on Public Expenditures proposes a reduction of the present enormous prices upon the public printing. I do not ask that the resolutions shall be considered at this time, but that their further consideration shall be postponed until Wednesday, the 4th of April. By that time the minority of the committee will be ready, I understand, to submit their views on the subject.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not object, if this subject does not now give rise to debate.

Mr. CLOFTON. I am one of those who propose to submit a minority report, and I hope that another day than the one named shall be fixed to make the further consideration of the subject shall be postponed. I want to leave for some next week.

Mr. HASKIN. Let the gentleman state the day he wants.

Mr. CLOFTON. Next Tuesday will suit me.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I must object to that. The revenue bill has been made the special order for that day. Say Friday of next week.

Mr. FLORENCE. I must object to that. Friday is private bill day; and the days for considering bills of a private nature are too few to spare any of them.

Mr. GROW. Say Thursday, then.

Mr. SHERMAN. After the morning hour.

Mr. STEVENSON. That will do.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. It suits me.

Mr. CLOFTON. I agree to Thursday.

Mr. HASKIN. Then I move that the further consideration of these joint resolutions be postponed until next Thursday, after the morning hour.

Mr. SICKLES. I make a point of order that, when the resolution raising the committee they have a right to report at any time, it does not follow that the resolutions or bills they recommend are privileged questions, and can come in to the exclusion of the regular order of business. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the right to report carries with it the right to have the report considered. Such has been the practice heretofore.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone; and it was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN took the floor.

CALL OF STATES FOR RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair. I believe that it was the general understanding, after the expiration of the morning hour, that we should go on with the call of the States for resolutions. Some States have not yet been called. I insist that we shall go on with the call of the States for resolutions.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the call of the States could be finished without debate, and without an hour or two being uselessly expended, as was done upon a resolution awhile ago, I do not know but that I would be glad to see it go on. I have some business which I have the right to report at any time. I have also a privileged resolution, which I wish to submit. I will withhold them now if we can go on and finish the call of the States for resolutions.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be the understanding that there shall be no debate allowed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will go on with the call of the States.

IMPRESSMENT OF AN AMERICAN CITIZEN.

Mr. STEVENSON offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, if he deemed incompatible with the public interest, any recent correspondence which may have taken place between our consul general at Havana and the Captain-General of Cuba touching the impressment, in that island, of American citizens.

USELESS CUSTOM-HOUSES.

Mr. SIMMS offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to ascertain the number of custom-houses in the United States now established by law, and the annual expenses of which exceed the amount of their receipts, and that they be instructed to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the same, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

PARAGUAY EXPEDITION.

Mr. STOKES. I offer the following resolution: Resolved, That the Committee on the Expenditures in the Navy Department be directed to inquire into, and report on, the expenditures on account of the Paraguay expedition, including the hiring and purchase and outfitting of steamers for that service, and all the expenditures thereon, considered, and the condition of the vessels sent on that expedition, and the progress of the war; and that the committee have power to send for persons and papers connected with the same.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the resolution propose the raising of a select committee?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. BURNETT. I must say to gentlemen that I am opposed to this thing of conferring upon the committees of this House the privilege of sending for persons and papers, under the name of a select committee. We may incur a very heavy expense in this way, when there is no necessity for it. Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order. This resolution is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Tellers were called for.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. HEGGINS and BEFFINGTON.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—aye 15, nays 46.

So the resolution was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF COLLECTING REVENUE.

Mr. ETHERIDGE introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas, by the fourth section of the act approved June 14, 1854, entitled "An act making appropriations for the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs," it is provided "that the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, to discontinue all per diem of the revenue officers, at a rate of which not amount to the sum of $10,000 per annum."

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to discontinue the per diem of the revenue officers, if any, he has discontinued since the passage of said act of June 14, 1854, and in conformity with its directions.

COST OF INDIAN TREATIES.

Mr. ETHERIDGE also introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be requested to make an estimate of the amount that will be required to make a treaty of peace, unity, &c., with the Kiowa, Comanches, and other Indians who roam near the Arkansas river, west of the one hundredth degree west longitude; with the Arapahoes and Cheyennes, located between the south fork of the Platte river; with the Sioux and other Indians of the Plains, to be concentrated for the occasion at their Creek, a tributary of the Platte river; and also for a treaty with the Red Lake Chippewas and the Indians of the Red river, in the State of Minnesota, for the extinguishment of their title to lands in that State.

ABOLITION OF CUSTOM-HOUSES.

Mr. STOKES introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be directed to inquire and report to this House whether any, and how many, of the custom-houses now established can be abolished without detriment to the public service; and, in making that inquiry, that they specially inquire with reference to those custom-houses which are situated far inland, or at which only small amounts of revenue, in proportion to their cost, are collected.

Mr. BURNETT. A resolution similar to that has been just passed, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. I propose to debate it.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, under the rules.

Mr. NIBLACK introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of having ascertained, why the currency issued by the Congress of the Confederate States prior to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, and which has not been redeemed by the United States and further as to the justice and expediency of making any present provision by law for such redemption, with such sum either in whole or in part, and report by bill or otherwise.

WILLIS BENAFIELD.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the adverse report of the Court of Claims, No. 211, in the case of Wills Beardslee, of Indiana, and that the same, with the papers in said case, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HUSTON objected, and the resolution was not received.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. SICKLES. I desire to give notice that I will, at a future day, move to amend rule 135, so as to confine debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the bill, resolution, or proposition under consideration.

MANUFACTURE OF CANNON, ETC.

Mr. PHELPS offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby requested to inquire into the expediency of establishing an armor and a foundry for the manufacture of cannon at the Manassas town works, in the State of Missouri.

APPAIS IN TEXAS.

Mr. WOODSON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House copies of all official correspondence between civil and military officers stationed in Utah Territory and the heads of bureaus in their respective Departments, or between any of said officers, illustrating or tending to show the condition of affairs in said Territory since the 1st day of October, 1855, and which may not have been heretofore officially published.

Mr. CURTIS. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would require a very large volume to give all this correspondence, if we are to go back to 1857 and come up to this period. It would include all this matter relative to the war.

Mr. WOODSON. The gentleman is a very much mistaken. It will take a very small volume to give the correspondence which this resolution calls for. It is important correspondence that we have never had published. All that has been heretofore published is expressly excluded from the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. If the gentleman thinks that it is only going to take a small amount of matter, I have no objection.

Mr. WOODSON. That is all. It calls for information which I require before I can act intelligently.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I withdraw all objection. The resolution was agreed to.

HARRISON & HODGE.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the propriety of providing by law for paying to Messrs. Harrison & Hodge a just compensation for carrying the United States mails from Hannibal to Brunswick, in Missouri.

THE TEXAS FRONTIER.

Mr. HAMILTON. I present in duplicate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from that State to procure the reimbursement to the State of Texas of funds expended for the protection of the frontier, and making other requests with relation to frontier affairs. I ask that one copy may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the other to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

It was so ordered.

CAPTAIN JOHN B. TODD.

Mr. HAMILTON also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, instructing the Senators and requesting the Representatives from that State to use their influence to procure the incorporation of Captain John B. Todd, of the late army of Texas, into the Navy of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MAIL ROUTE IN TEXAS.

Mr. HAMILTON also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, instructing the Senators and requesting the Representatives in Congress from that State to use their influence to obtain the passage of an act of Congress, appointing a mail stage route from the city of Austin, to some point on the overland mail stage route from St. Louis to El Paso, so as to connect Austin and El Paso; provided that it shall not be construed to express a desire to change any of the existing routes; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

MAIL ROUTES IN IOWA.

Mr. CURTIS presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, in relation to mail routes from Eddyville, via Knoxville, to Des Moines, in Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SECRETARY TO A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CURTIS offered the following resolution: Resolved, That the special committee on the matter of the Public Salaries, and others they are investigating, not to employ a secretary, who shall be paid four dollars per day while employed in the service of the committee.

Mr. CORB. I object to that.

Mr. CURTIS. A secretary is very much needed, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CORB. I withdrew to withdraw it.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that that motion is in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to debate that question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules.

The rules were not suspended.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the resolution.

BENCHES FOR INSANE ASYLUM.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the Capital extension be directed, when he removes the present benches from the Hall of Representatives, to deliver them over to Dr. Charles H. Nichols, superintendent of the Government hospital for the insane, to be used in seating the patients of said hospital, making one bench for each of the superintendent of said hospital his receipt therefor, and obligation to return the same whenever called for by the House of Representatives.

Mr. REAGAN. I object to that resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. The resolution contemplates that if these seats are to be removed—

Mr. MILES. I am perfectly willing that a portion sufficient for the accommodation of the gentleman who offered the resolution shall be given.

Mr. WASHBURN. I beg leave to send up, and have read, a letter from the superintendent.

The letter was read, as follows:

GEOFFREY HERRICK, of the INSANE, (of the Army and Navy and of the District of Columbia.)

DEAR SIR: Having noticed that the present seats in the Hall of Representatives are to be removed, and the former desks and chairs replaced, it has occurred to me that the House might be pleased to permit the seats, when removed, or as removed, to be deposited in the chapel or lecture-room in this institution, for male-keeping, and such occasional, careful use, as would be no more than sufficient to insure attention to their preservation.

It is true, that a small appropriation has been made for furnishing the chapel and adjacent rooms with the wings of the hospital edifice, and it has been in contemplation to defray the costs of cheap seats for the chapel out of that appropriation; but if the Hospital should be favored with the use, in the way I have suggested, of furniture already belonging to the Government, and not needed for the purposes for which it was originally intended, the superintendent would be able to furnish most parts of the house in a more liberal and comfortable manner.

The Hospital is now constituted of a rectangular room, sixty-one feet and six inches by forty-five feet; and the speaker's desk is placed in part in the alcove opening from the side of one of its sides. It will thus be perceived that the curved form of the seats in question is adapted to our chapel as well as to the Hall of Representatives, for which they were made.

If the House shall see fit to give the seats to the hospital, the committee constructed with the wings of the Hospital; and the deposit of them in the institution, subject to reclamation whenever the House may need them for its depository, will be highly appreciated by the benevolent liberality of the honorable Representatives of the people of a great and prosperous country.

The enlightened interest in the propriety of this institution which you have ever manifested since you early into the councils of the nation, justifies me, I hope, in soliciting your efforts to the proposition for the benefit of the hospital which I have here ventured to make, and in asking you to make such steps in the matter as you may deem to be in the line of your public duty.

I am, sir, very respectfully and truly, yours,
C. H. NICHOLS, Superintendent, District of Columbia.

Objection was not withdrawn.

MAIL ROUTES.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial from the State of Wisconsin, for a change in a mail route; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, also presented a memorial from the State of Wisconsin, for a mail route from Hudson, in St. Croix county, by way of the Ash Boardman, Apple River Bridge, Ceylon, Iron Prairie, and Hammond, to Warren; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

POTOMAC RIVER RIGHTS.

Mr. EDWARDS presented a memorial of the Great Falls Manufacturing Company, relating to their rights in the water of the Potomac river, praying for the appointment of a joint committee of both Houses of Congress, consisting of three members each, to take into consideration the facts stated in said memorial, and to report in relation thereto; and moved for the appointment of said joint committee.

Mr. PHELPS. I object.

Mr. BRANCH. I do not understand this to be a resolution for the appointment of a committee; but only a memorial presented praying for that.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to move for the appointment of a committee?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. BRANCH. I object to it.

Mr. EDWARDS. Then, I move to refer the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FLORENCE. Let it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The memorial can be presented and referred under the rule.

FORMATION OF A NEW STATE.

Mr. BURCH. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That an act of the Legislature of the State of California concerning the formation of member government for the southern portion of said State, approved April 18, 1859, which is herewith presented, be referred to the Committee on Territories and Territories.

I desire, in justice to myself, that as a member of the California Senate, I opposed the passage of that act, and that I am still opposed to Congress granting any consent to the formation of this new government; but I present the act in accordance with the request of certain of my constituents as residing in the northern portion of the State.

The resolution was agreed to.

MEMORIALS FROM WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington, presented the memorial to Congress of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, relative to the tide-flats lying in front of and adjacent to the town of Olympia; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington, also presented the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, praying the establishment of a port of delivery at Cananda City; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNDARY LINE.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington, also offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision for running and marking the forty-six parallel of latitude, so far as said parallel is the boundary line between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, and report by bill or otherwise.

LAND OFFICE AT OLYMPIA.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington, also submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the necessary clerical force required to conduct the business of the land office at Olympia, including compensation for services already incurred, and to report by bill or otherwise.

REPORT ON WAGON ROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington, also submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the House the report of Lieutenant Mullen, United States Army, in relation to the wagon road from Fort Benton to the Walla Walla.

APPROPRIATION BILLS REPORTED.

The call of the States and Territories for resolutions having now been completed.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the following bills, which were severally read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

A bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1860.

A bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1861; and

A bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1861.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the Committee of Ways and Means were discharged from the further consideration of sundry communications from the Secretaries of War and the Navy, and the same were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs.

DISCONTINUANCE OF NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the following resolution: which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be requested to inquire whether any of the navy yards may be discontinued without injury to the public service, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the same committee, also reported the following resolution: which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That at the expiration of one hour after the House shall have resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, House bill No. 285, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1861, shall be the special order in said committee, and no motion shall be in order.

LAW EXPENSES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I was not in the House when the State of Illinois was called for resolutions. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me now to enable me to offer a resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to that purpose.

Mr. LOVEJOY then submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas, in addition to the ordinary salaries and expenses of the office of Attorney General, the State of California, appropriations were made during the first session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress, and the first and second sessions of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, for legal assistance and other necessary expenditures in the disposal of private land claims in California, and for the service of special counsel, and other extraordinary expenses of such land claims, amounting in all to $114,000:

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be communicated to this House what portion of said appropriations has been expended, with a statement in detail of the amounts paid, to whom, and for what purposes.

PONCA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill of the House (No. 216) making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponca Indians, and with certain bands of Indians in the Territory of Washington, and State of Oregon, for the year ending June 30, 1860, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. BRANCH. If the gentleman can give me any consideration of great public emergency why this bill should not be considered in committee, I will not object to his proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the gentleman from North Carolina, no information I have. This bill is for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponca Indians. It is considered of importance by the Department that it should be passed immediately, because they wish that the agents shall be discharged from the need to make payments to the Indians in that region. The bill has passed the Senate with amendments to conform to the requirements of the treaties as they exist, a new treaty having been made since the estimates on which the House acted were made up. The Senate amendments are strictly in accordance with the requirements of treaty stipulations.

Mr. BRANCH. I have nothing to say about the correctness of the amendments; I know nothing about these Ponca Indians. It is the matter of principle upon which I found my objection. This House, by the construction which has been given to the Constitution, has alone the power of originating appropriations bills. The Senate, however, in the exercise of its undoubted constitutional rights, have placed upon the bill amendments making appropriations of money, which have not been considered in the House at all, and it is certainly in accordance with the principles upon which this House acts in reference to the original appropriation bills, that all such amendments shall be first considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

I would not object to discharging the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of an appropriation bill, and giving it its first consideration in the House, when very great public exigency requires it; but I will object to discharging the committee from the consideration of amendments which the rule requires shall be first considered in the Committee of the Whole, unless some good reason shall be given for departing from that rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. My only object was to save time; but I will avoid all difficulty in the matter by moving that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the amendments of the Senate to the bill there to-day.

Mr. BRANCH. That is a proper motion, and I hope the House will agree to it.

The motion was agreed to, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in the chair.)

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the committee take up the Senate amendments to the appropriation bill in relation to the Ponca Indians—House bill No. 216.

The motion was agreed to; and the amendments of the Senate were taken up for consideration.

First amendment:

After line twenty-four, insert:

For maintaining and rebuilding the Poncas during the first year after their removal to their new home, purchasing stock and implements, and for building and fitting land, building houses, and in making such other improvements as may be necessary for their comfort and welfare, per second article of the treaty of the 12th of March, 1855, $10,000.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

Add at the end of the bill, as follows:

To provide the Poncas with a mill suitable for grinding grain and sawing timber, one or more mechanic shops, with necessary tools for the same, and dwelling houses for the tenant, mill, engineer for the mill, if one be necessary, farmer and mechanics that may be employed for their benefit, per second article of the treaty of the 12th of March, 1855, $10,000.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

Add at the end of the bill, as follows:

To provide and set apart this sum to enable the Poncas to adjust and settle their existing obligations and engagements, including depredations committed by them on property of citizens of the United States prior to the date of the removal, as provided, so far as the same may be found and decided by their agent to be valid and just, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, per second article of the treaty of the 12th of March, 1855, $20,000.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Page 1, line twenty-two, after the word "and," when it occurs the second time, strike out the word "furnished," and insert "furnishing."

The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to lay aside this bill now, and take up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. MONTGOMERY obtained the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SEDGWICK] is entitled to the floor, as I understand, upon this bill; and when he shall have concluded, the resolution of the House making this bill a special order will apply.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Is it the understanding, then, that I shall be entitled to the floor when any bill is up for general discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will, if he can obtain the floor.

Mr. SEDGWICK addressed the House for the hour to which he was entitled under the rules, upon the slavery question in connection with the Republican and Democratic parties. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

During the delivery of Mr. SEDGWICK's speech, the following interruptions took place:

Mr. GRAIG, of North Carolina. I rise to a point of order.

I submit that it has prevailed in this House for some time of reading speeches. I make the point that that practice is in violation of the rules of this House. I call the attention of the Chairman to this extract from Jefferson's Manual:

"A member has not a right even to read his own speech, committed to writing, without leave. This privilege is not an abuse of time, and, therefore, is not refused but where that is intended."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is Jefferson's Manual. Mr. CRAIG, of North Carolina, in Jefferson's Manual is adopted as a part of the rules of the House by express provision in the rules themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise with no purpose of especially interrupting the gentleman from New York, but to raise a question of order which ought to be settled at this time. This is the first occasion that we have been in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union since the adoption of various amendments to the rules. In discussing an amendment I offered when the rules were under consideration, I was told that it was already provided that debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union should be confined strictly to the pending question. I was told that general debate could only be gone into in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union when the President's message was under consideration. I was referred, sir, to this amendment of the rules:

"And all debate on special orders shall be confined strictly to the bill in question."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the bill is open to general debate for one hour under a resolution adopted in the House. When that hour has expired, the debate must then be confined strictly to the bill itself. The bill then becomes a special order.

Mr. REAGAN. The Chair does not recognize the point I wish to make. I make the point that there cannot be general debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on a bill referred to that committee, but that the debate on that bill must be confined strictly to the provisions of the bill. We have heretofore acted on a different rule, but we have, I think, acted erroneously; and, sir, the additional rule which has been recently made in my opinion, carries out only the real intent of the former rules. I hold that it is not competent for gentlemen to go into general debate upon the bill now pending.

Mr. GROW. If general debate is in order, I insist that the gentleman from New York shall be allowed to proceed.

Mr. REAGAN. I state my proposition to the Chair, and I ask for a decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that general debate upon this bill is in order until the hour fixed by the resolution of the House has expired. After that, debate must be confined to the merits of the pending proposition.

Mr. SEDGWICK resumed and completed his remarks.

Mr. MONTGOMERY (who obtained the floor) said: I do not desire to open upon this subject the bill now under consideration; but I desire to speak upon general politics.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the time for general debate upon this bill has expired; and that all debate hereafter must be confined to the merits of the bill.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Then I suppose, by the courtesy of the House, I shall be entitled to the floor when general debate is resumed.

Mr. CONKLING. I desire to know whether the gentleman who has the floor now for the purpose of debate upon this bill is to have it hereafter for another purpose when the House goes into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on another bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks the indulgence of the committee, as he does not desire to speak upon the merits of this bill, that he shall be permitted to have the floor when the bill is referred itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon another bill.

Mr. CONKLING. At that time I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania will take his chance for the floor with other members.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I have some remarks upon the homestead bill, and I ask leave to print them, not wishing to consume the time of the committee. Leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had under consideration the Senate amendment to House bill (No. 216) making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponca Indians, and with certain bands of Indians in the Territory of Washington and the State of Oregon, for the year ending 30th June, 1880, and recommended concurrence therein by the House. Also, that they had under consideration the Army bill, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call the previous question upon the amendments to House bill No. 216.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question was ordered to be put.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. FLORENCE. I offered a resolution this morning in reference to the printing of an extra number of the meteorological portion of the Coast Survey report. I ask that so much of that report as relates to the printing of the usual number be taken up and considered.

No objection being made, the usual number of copies thereof were ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. FLORENCE, (at twenty minutes past five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

Thursday, March 27, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GURLEY.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COLLAMER presented the memorial of Oliver Evans Woods, of Philadelphia, in relation to a plan for increasing the efficiency and revenue of the service of the Post Office Department of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Henry L. Pierson, jr., and others, citizens of New York, praying Congress to pass a law to prevent all further traffic in and monopoly of the public lands of the United States, and that they be laid out in farms and lots of limited size, for the free and exclusive use of actual settlers, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Dr. Thomas Goodell, praying for a pension for services as a surgeon in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of Emanuel Cronkright, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON presented the petition of Thomas W. Tamm, praying that the amount of money advanced by him as quartermaster and commissary for the commission to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, may be reimbursed, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BINGHAM presented the petition of William G. Eaton and others, citizens of Michigan, praying the enactment of a uniform bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS presented a memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi, praying the cessation of certain public lands to aid in the construction of the Gulf and Ohio railroad, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, in relation to the graduation of public lands lying within six miles of the Gulf and Ohio railroad, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, in relation to the establishment of a navy-yard at the bay of Biloxi, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAY presented the memorial of Edward D. Tippet, in relation to his discharge from the Army of the United States, and in relation to the report of the Court of Claims made upon the subject; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of John Sandford, administrator of Jonas Mitchell, praying compensation for the services of his father, John Sandford, a soldier in the revolutionary war, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARLAN presented the petition of James Harriott, praying permission to enter, as a preemption, one hundred and sixty acres of the land west and north of the bay of Spirit Lake, in the State of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of Margaret Ann Marble, praying that she may be permitted to enter a certain tract of land inherited by her husband, who was murdered by the Indians at Spirit Lake, in the State of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of Ford Barnes, praying compensation for the services of his father, John Barnes, a soldier in the revolutionary war, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOOLITTLE presented a petition of citizens of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, praying the passage of a uniform bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of William Blake, praying the repeal of the second section of the act approved March 3, 1859, making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year 1860; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. KENNEDY, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the papers of Augustus Steele from the files of the Court of Claims, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. IVERSON, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the petition of Ann Jackson, the petition of Elizabeth Brown; the petition of Ruth Murphy; the petition of Ann Patterson; and the petition of William White.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SLIDELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 312) giving the consent of Congress to the improvement of the Pass à l'Ouvre of the Mississippi river, and the levying of a tonnage duty to maintain the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SLIDELL. I ask, as a favor of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to act on this bill as early a day as possible, in order that it may be taken up with the bill of a similar character in relation to the bay of Mobile, which is also before the Senate.

Mr. BRAGG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 314) to authorize a special session of the circuit court of the United States in the district of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the memorial of John Reeves, praying the intervention of the Government in behalf of his claims against the Sultan of Turkey, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a petition of property holders in the city of Washington, praying the enactment of a law to reimburse the owners of property for damages sustained, or which may be sustained, in the execution of the act of Congress for the revision of the grades of avenues and streets in that city, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 313) to authorize the location of Claims against the Government in the United States in certain cases therein mentioned. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 261) to authorize the levy court to issue tavern and other licenses in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill proposed by the Court of Claims for the relief of Sturges, Bennett & Co., merchants of New York, with the report of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 315) for the relief of Sturges, Bennett & Co., merchants of the city of New York. This bill was read twice, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITCH, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 29th of February, a statement showing the number in location of the marine hospitals, the number of seamen or patients admitted into each from 1854 to 1859, inclusive, in each year, the number and compensation of the persons employed in each, and the total expenditure at each hospital for each of those years, reported in favor of printing the usual number; and the report was agreed to.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Saturday of the present week be set apart for the consideration of business relating to the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FOSBERG, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 36) constituting Macon, Georgia, a port of entry for the time being, for the purposes therein specified, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 216) making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponca Indians, and with certain bands of Indians in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington, for the year ending 30th June, 1880.

RELATIONS OF STATES.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Davis) be taken up, with a view to ask of the Senate whether they be made the special order for a future day.

The motion to take up the resolutions was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I now move that they be postponed until Monday next at five o'clock, and be made the special order for that time.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MALLORY. If there be no further morning business, I desire to take up the bill (S. No. 293) to increase and regulate the pay of the Navy of the United States, on which the Senate adjourned yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I ask the Senator from Florida to allow me to make an explanation.

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I rise, Mr. President, to do what I am not in the habit of doing in the Senate—make a personal explanation. As I see the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Clark) in his seat, I desire to make an inquiry of him in regard to a speech purporting to have been made by him, as reported in the New York tion to its ultimatum, and the non-slaveholder will unite, heart and hand, in subjugating the Africans, and if resistance be made, in extirpating the negro race; and that is where this question will end, notwithstanding all the sympathy and all the philanthropy that may be evinced, if the agitation be carried out successfully to its consummation.

If I said anything in the presence or hearing of anybody on that point, that is what I said; and I repeat now, that the only thing being said in difference between the feelings of the slaveholders and non-slaveholders of the South on this question, is a mistaken one, a false one, as the demonstrations at Harper's Ferry proved most conclusively. When there was agitation in Tennessee, in 1856, I saw that the non-slaveholder was the radiant man to rise up and reduce the negro to subjugation; and he would join the master in extirpating, if necessary, this race from existence, rather than see them liberated and turned loose upon the country. Everything I said on this subject was to meet the fallacious and absurd idea that the non-slaveholders of the South would unite with the negroes against their masters.

The propriety or the courtesy of taking a portion of a brother Senator's conversation, or picking up a portion of it, or repeating it, or using it, and referring to him by name in a public speaking place, where, I will not undertake to discuss here, I leave that to those who think proper to indulge in that practice.

Mr. CLARK. I simply desire to say, Mr. President, that, if the resolution shall offer by any proper proceeding in the Senate, I will report to the Senator what I said in my own State; and the Senator shall then hear what I did say. In the mean time, he may rest assured that I shall say nothing even then in disparagement of his State; and I will not dispute, but that they raise more horses, asses, and mules, than we do.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announced that the House had ordered this day the printing of the following documents:

Memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, for a mail route from Hudson to Warren, and in regard to the mail route from the village of Boston to the village of Scheuingerville—ordered at one o'clock and twenty minutes.

Memorial of the Legislature of Iowa, relative to a mail route from Edgely, via Knoxville, to Des Moines, in that State—ordered at one o'clock and thirty minutes.

Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, relative to the Tide Flats adjacent to the town of Olympia—ordered at one o'clock and thirty minutes.

Memorial of the Legislature of Washington Territory, asking the establishment of a port of entry at Cascade City—ordered at one o'clock and thirty minutes.

Resolves of the Legislature of New Hampshire, in relation to the establishment of a national bureau of statistics and agriculture—ordered at one o'clock and fourteen minutes.

Resolves of the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, in reference to weights and measures—ordered at one o'clock and fifteen minutes.

Memorial of Edward Loring, in relation to the construction of a railroad to the Pacific ocean—ordered at one o'clock and fifteen minutes.

Results of meteorological observations communicated to the Senate by the Commissioner of Patents, January 31, 1860—ordered at one o'clock and eight minutes.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

* The message further announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, on the 24th instant, the following acts:

An act (H. R. No. 19) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels," approved March 3, 1855, for the better protection of female passengers, and other purposes.

An act (H. R. No. 331) to repeal the third section of an act entitled "An act to increase and regulate the terms of the circuit and district courts for the northern district of New York," approved July 7, 1838.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

An act (H. R. No. 216) making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponca Indians and with certain bands of Indians in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington for the year ending June 30, 1860; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 21) for the relief of the contractors of the Post Office Department.

PAY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. MALLORY. I now call up the bill which was before the Senate a few moments ago.

Mr. GREEN. There is a resolution on the table that I will raise a few days ago, that I think can pass in a few moments.

Mr. MALLORY. Is the resolution alluded to the one in regard to an adjournment?

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Mr. MALLORY. It cannot be passed this morning, I am satisfied. I prefer to go on with the bill.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. MASON in the chair.) The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. GREEN. If he has the floor, I shall have to yield.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. No. 299) to increase and regulate the pay of the Navy is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, in calling upon the Senate to vote an appropriation for the increase of the pay of the Navy, I know the importance of the measure, and I am prepared, as a matter of course, to give explanations as to the reasons which have induced the Committee on Naval Affairs to make these recommendations. I will not, however, trouble the Senate with any prolonged remarks, but shall be prepared to explain any item to which Senators may call my attention. I further, therefore, all general commentaries on the subject, and will proceed to move such amendments as the bill as I think called for; and, first, to amend that I wish to adopt the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine (Mr. FARRINGTON) in relation to the pay of flag officers. I think that his amendment in that respect is a good one, and I therefore adopt it in behalf of the committee, and ask the clerk at the desk to read the amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the bill has not been read through. It is proper to have it read through.

The Secretary read the bill. It provides that hereafter the annual pay of the officers of the Navy, on the active list, shall be as follows:

The senior captain, while on duty, $5,650; captains when commanding squadrons, $6,000; all other captains on duty at sea, $4,375; captains on other duty, $3,857.

Commanders on duty at sea, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $2,825; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $3,150. Every commander on other duty, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $2,625; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $2,825. Every commander on leave or waiting orders, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,908; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $2,016; lieutenants commanding at sea, $2,550.

Every lieutenant on duty at sea, $1,500; after he shall have been seven years' sea-service in the Navy, $1,700; after he shall have been nine years' sea-service, $1,900; after he shall have been eleven years' sea-service, $2,100; after he shall have been thirteen years' sea-service, $2,350. Every lieutenant on other duty, $1,400; after he shall have been seven years' sea-service in the Navy, $1,600; after he shall have been nine years' sea-service, $1,700; after he shall have been eleven years' sea-service, $1,800; after he shall have been thirteen years' sea-service, $1,975. Every lieutenant on leave or waiting orders, $1,200; after he shall have been seven years' sea-service in the Navy, $1,266; after he shall have been nine years' sea-service, $1,333; after he shall have been eleven years' sea-service, $1,400; after he shall have been thirteen years' sea-service, $1,450.

Chaplains to be paid as lieutenants. Every master in the line of promotion, when on duty as such at sea, $1,200; when on other duty, $1,100; when on leave or waiting orders, $825.

Every passed midshipman when on duty as such at sea, $850; while on other duty, $600; when on leave or waiting orders, $650.

Every surgeon on duty at sea, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,666; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $2,000; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $2,333; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,666; for twenty years and upwards after the date of his commission, $3,000. Every surgeon on other duty, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,562; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,875; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $2,178; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,500; for twenty years and upwards after the date of his commission, $2,812. Every surgeon on leave or waiting orders, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,350; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,500; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $1,750; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,000; for twenty years and upwards after the date of his commission, $2,250.

Every passed assistant surgeon on duty at sea, $1,500; when on other duty, $1,437; when on leave or waiting orders, $1,062.

Every assistant surgeon on duty at sea, $1,187; when on other duty, $1,087; when on leave or waiting orders, $812.

Every purser on duty at sea, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $2,000; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $2,400; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $2,800; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $3,200; for twenty years and upwards after the date of his commission, $3,100. Every purser on other duty, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,500; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,800; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $2,100; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,400; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,600. Every purser on leave or waiting orders, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,250; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,500; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $1,750; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,000; for twenty years and upwards after the date of his commission, $2,250.

Every professor of mathematics on duty, $1,800; when on leave or waiting orders, $960; but no appointments to this grade are to be made to fill vacancies.

Every chief engineer on duty at sea, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,750; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $2,000; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $2,250; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,500; for twenty years and upwards after the date of his commission, $2,750. Every chief engineer on other duty, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,625; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,750; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $1,875; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,000; for twenty years and upwards after the date of his commission, $2,125. Every chief engineer on leave or waiting orders, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,500; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,625; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $1,750; for the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $1,875; for twenty years and upwards after the date of his commission, $2,000. Every first assistant engineer on duty at sea, $1,400; when on other duty, $1,125; while on leave or waiting orders, $1,000. Every second assistant engineer on duty at sea, $1,000; while on other duty, $900; while on leave or waiting orders, $750. Every third assistant engineer on duty at sea, $750; when on other duty, $675; while on leave or waiting orders, $600, but the several grades of the engineer corps are not to be increased.

Every boatswain, gunner, carpenter, and sailmaker, on duty at sea, for the first five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $1,000; for the second five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $1,150; for the third five years after the date of his warrant, $1,250; for the fourth five years after the date of his warrant, $1,350; for twenty years and upwards, $1,450. When on duty, for the first five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $200; for the second five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $300; for the third five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $400; for the fourth five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $500; for the fifth five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $600; for the sixth five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $700; for the third five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $800; for the fourth five years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $900; for twenty years and upwards, $1,000.

This bill is not to be construed as to increase or modify the pay of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department, or the Superintendent of the Naval Ordnance; and in no case shall it be construed as sea-service but such as shall be performed at sea under the orders of a Department, and in vessels employed by authority of law. This bill is not to modify or affect the existing part of the Secretary of the Navy to furnish officers to affect the furlough pay.

Mr. MALLORY. I propose, under the head of captains, in lines seven and eight, to strike out the words "the senior captain while on duty, $2,500," and insert:

The senior flag officer, created under and by virtue of an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1859, shall receive $1,500.

That is in the printed amendment of the Senators from Maine, and I accept it. I think it is judicious.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment I offer is in line fourteen, on the 3d page. It is not proposed by the committee to increase the leave pay of captains; but, by the reading, it may be supposed it was abolished altogether, and therefore I propose to put in, "when on leave or waiting orders, $2,500." That is precisely as it is now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is on page 4, lines eighty-one and eighty-two, to strike out "$1,566," and insert "$1,900;" so that the clause will read:

Every surgeon on duty at sea, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,900.

This amendment is necessary, for my discovering that the Register does not truthfully set forth the pay of surgeons, and it is the only grade that is not truthfully set forth. It there appears that a surgeon, for the first year after the date of his commission, receives $1,333; but he, in fact, receives $1,966, under a clause in an appropriation bill passed in 1848, which dates his commission from the first commission he received as assistant surgeon, so that, in fact, he gets $1,966; and I propose to increase that thirty-four dollars, giving him $1,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. For the same reason, in line eighty-four, on the same page, it is necessary to make a similar alteration, by striking out "$2,000," and inserting "$2,300;" so that it will read:

For the second five years after the date of his commission, $2,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. For the same reason, I offer another amendment, in line eighty-six, to strike out "$2,333," and insert "$2,500;" so that it will read:

For the third five years after the date of his commission, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is on page 5, line eighty-eight, to strike out "$2,666," and insert "$2,700;" so that it will read:

For the fourth five years after the date of his commission, $2,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is, after ninety years' sea-service in their grade, to strike out "and upwards, $3,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in line ninety-two and ninety-three, to strike out "$1,566," and insert "$1,900;" so that the clause will read:

Every surgeon on duty at sea, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in line ninety-five, to strike out "$1,875," and insert "$2,100;" so that the clause will read:

For the second five years after the date of his commission, $2,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in line ninety-seven, to strike out "$2,178," and insert "$2,300;" so that the clause will read:

For the third five years after the date of his commission, $2,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in line one hundred and three and one hundred and four, to strike out "$1,250," and insert "$1,400;" so that the clause will read:

Every surgeon on leave or waiting orders, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,400.

That is the same as it is now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in line one hundred and six, to strike out "$1,500," and insert "$1,600;" so as to make the clause read:

For the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in line one hundred and eight, to strike out "$1,750," and insert "$1,800;" so that it will read:

For the third five years after the date of his commission, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in page 7, lines one hundred and fifty and one hundred and fifty-one, to strike out "$1,250," and insert "$1,400;" so that the clause will read:

Every purser on leave or waiting orders, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,400.

All the amendments as to pursers are to carry out the original intention of the pay-bill of 1855, which was to make the pay of the surgeons and pursers on leave precisely the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in line one hundred and fifty-three, to strike out "$1,500," and insert "$1,600;" so that the clause will read:

For the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in line one hundred and fifty-five, to strike out "$1,750," and insert "$1,800;" so that the clause will read:

For the third five years after the date of his commission, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is on page 10, lines two hundred and eighteen and two hundred and nineteen, to strike out this proviso:

Provided, That the several grades of the engineer corps shall not be increased.

The committee were under the impression at first that the number of engineers had come up to the allowance; but the law allows an engineer-in-chief for every steam vessel of the Navy. We have but twenty-four in the Navy now, and I think there are demands for them at present; and Congress should not limit the number, as the grade is not full.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I propose to offer the amendments in regard to the warrant officers together, because they are all on the same principle. They are but twenty-three years' for five years from line two hundred and twenty-one on page 10, down to line two hundred and fifty-one, on page 11, so as to get the increased allowance for every three years of sea-service. There are very few warrant officers who would see the term of twenty years' sea-service in their grade, and very few of them, therefore, who would ever reach the pay which the committee intended for them; as, on looking at their ages, I find the men are about thirty years of age when they get a warrant. I propose, therefore, to offer these amendments with reference to warrant officers together. They are to make that portion of the bill in relation to them read as follows:

WARRANT OFFICERS.—Every boatswain, gunner, carpenter, and sailmaker, and every other first three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $1,000; for the second three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $1,150; for the third three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $1,250; for the fourth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $1,350; for twelve years and upwards, $1,450.

When on duty.—For the first three years of sea-service after the date of his warrant, $200; for the second three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $300; for the third three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $400; for the fourth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $500; for the fifth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $600; for the sixth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $700; for the seventh three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $800; for the eighth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $900; for twenty years and upwards, $1,000.

When on leave or waiting orders.—For the first three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $200; for the second three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $300; for the third three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $400; for the fourth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $500; for the fifth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $600; for the sixth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $700; for the seventh three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $800; for the eighth three years' sea-service after the date of his warrant, $900; for twelve years and upwards, $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is in section two, page 11, line three, after the word "the," to insert "present;" so that it will read:

That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to increase or modify the present pay of chiefs of bureaus, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. Now I move to insert the words "sea-service"—in some instances in copying the bill they were omitted by mistake—in line two hundred and twenty-six, after the word "years," in line two hundred and twenty-eight, after the word "years," and again in line one hundred and thirty, and also in line two hundred and fifty-two. In those lines the words "sea-service" were omitted by an error in copying. I move that they be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. On page 2, line sixteen, before the word "every," I move to insert "every" and to strike out the letter "a."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. Those are all the amendments of the committee.

Mr. RICE. I offer an amendment, on page 11, in the fourth line of section two, to insert:

Provided, That the sea-service pay, as experienced in gunnery at the navy-yard, Washington, shall be the sea-service pay of the grade next above him, as provided by the act of March 2, 1851.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to understand precisely what this amendment means. Why should the officer in charge of these experiments in gunnery receive anything more than the sea-service of his grade? Why should he receive the sea-service pay? That is the highest rate of pay of the grade next above him. He is not on sea-service.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator from Minnesota requests me to make the explanation in consequence of his ignorance, and I will do so, if Senators will give me their attention for a moment. The officer in charge of these experiments in gunnery at the navy-yard, Washington—Commander Dahlgren—received by the act of March 2, 1851, when he was a lieutenant, the highest sea-service pay of the grade above him; consequently, instead of receiving the $1,500 a year, which would be the sea-service pay of his own grade proper, he received, in fact, $2,500 a year. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, is to continue the principle of the act of March 2, 1851, and still continue to him the pay of the next highest grade, he having been promoted to a commander in the mean time, and now receives simply the pay of a commander, whereas the act of March 2, 1851, designed to give him the pay of the grade above him; and this amendment is to continue that principle. That is all there is in it.

Perhaps it is justice to Mr. Dahlgren that I should say, as all the Senators may not be as familiar with his services to the Navy as I am, that he is regarded, I believe, by every one in the Navy, and by the scientific men of the country, as having done more to advance the science and character of the Navy as any man in it or out of it. His experiments in gunnery, his inventions in guns, have redounded to the honor of the country, and given him a national name, and a name abroad. We cannot recognize the value of those services that I know of in any other manner. We are entitled to his inventive genius, to all his capacity and time, and it is simply proposed to continue what has been heretofore granted—the pay of the grade above him.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I dare say that Mr. Dahlgren is entitled to very great credit; and there seemed to be a very good reason why the pay that he received before should be advanced. When he was a lieutenant he received only $1,500, and was kept on shore making these experiments. There was then certainly a propriety in his having the highest pay of his grade; but he not only received that, but the highest pay of the grade above him, though he was not on sea-service, while lieutenants of the same grade received $1,500. Now, he is advanced to the grade of commander; and, instead of receiving what commanders do when on other duties, he receives what other commanders do when on sea-service by the law as it stands. Now, the proposition is to give this gentleman, who is a young commander, the grade of $2,500, which is the highest pay of a commander while he is on duty on shore, but to advance him to the highest pay of the grade next above him, which is that of captain; that is to say, to give him over four thousand dollars more than he is now to receive, while the oldest and best captain in the Navy receives by this bill. That seems to me to be quite unreasonable. I think his pay, as lieutenant, was too low before; the pay of the whole grade was; and it was proper to make a recognition; but to carry it further, is making too great a distinction.

I would say further, that we should have a system in regard to gentlemen who render these important services, or we should not continue to make these distinctions. If gentlemen feel disposed to have a system by which those who perform extraordinary services shall be recognized and rewarded in the way of pay, that is one thing; but to pick out a particular gentleman who happens to have more talent and inventive genius than another, and not only to give him up at one time, but keep him constantly in advance of his grade and receiving pay, making it a progressive thing, putting him in fact with the oldest officers of the Navy on active service while he is employed on gunnery, and confining that distinction to him, while we bestow the grade of captain upon gallantry at sea—no man, whatever may be his services in action, by the laws as they stand, can receive extraordinary rewards for it—I think is doing a little too much, and I hope this amendment will not prevail. I think he has been sufficiently rewarded by being advanced; and is now receiving on shore, or will be receiving on shore, the highest sea-service pay of his grade—an amendment to that effect might be made—while he remains there, and I think it should go no further. This gentleman at his age should not, for that matter to which he is entitled, receive so great credit, be placed on a par with regard to pay with the oldest and best officers of the Navy, those who have served longer than he has. Gentlemen, it may be remarked, who render these important and valuable services, receive a large credit; and that ordinarily pays a man if he has a good sustenance. He has a reputation, a large reputation in the country from his inventive genius; and I would remark further, that the country is entitled, if it pays its officers well, to all their services in their grade without a particular increase of pay. Still, I am willing to recognize those valuable services to a certain extent. I think, however, it has gone far enough in this instance.

Mr. GREEN. I recollect very well when the law of 1851 was passed, by which the late Lieutenant Dahlgren was promoted to a grade above his commission. He was then a lieutenant, and it was passed upon this consideration: he had made discoveries in the lock of the cannon, in the power of gunpowder, in the accuracy of shooting, in the proportion between the weight of the ball and the amount of the powder required, which, if he were a private individual, would have been worth millions to him; but, being an officer of the Government, he could receive no patronage, he could receive no reward. All the heavy guns called now in England, in Europe, and throughout the world, the Dahlgren guns, were invented, constructed, shaped, and molded by him. In consideration of this extraordinary service, in which his talent, his genius, his enterprise, his knowledge, had been brought to play, Congress thought, in 1851, that he ought to receive the pay of the grade above the commission he held, and so passed the law. In the two years, in the interval of promotion, he was put up to the same commission, to wit: made a commander; so that the whole gratuity, or reward, or payment, which Congress had contemplated, failed, because he just took the place he would have had anyhow.

Now, I undertake to say, that the object of Congress then was to give him something above his grade. He did have it above his grade two years; and from that day to this, not a dollar has he received above his grade. So it is unfair for the Senator from Maine to assert that he has been receiving more than others have received. He only did for two years; it was expected, when the law was passed, that he would permanently. It has failed in consequence of his promotion. He was promoted in regular order, under the law of the United States. His service is none the less, for he has gone on to improve, day after day. Nor has he been confined to shore duties. He has been ordered to sea on the Plymouth, and performed valuable service down the coast and in the Gulf of Mexico, at Vera Cruz, and Sea Junia, and now at Newport. Now, if he had been doing extra services, for the benefit of his genus, his extraordinary energy, we should give him just the same pro rata increase that was contemplated by the law of 1851, and which failed for the reason I have stated.

Now, Mr. LORRY. In addition to what my friend from Missouri says, I will say to the Senator from Maine, that it is no unusual practice thus to recognize the services of public officers. The commanding officer of the Naval Academy; the commanding officer of the Observatory; the officer in charge of the Naval Almanac; and others whom I could name, have all received the pay of the grade above them. This fact induced Congress to recognize the services of Dahlgren in this way. Perhaps it is the only way in which we can recognize them.

Mr. GRIMES. I concur in everything that has been said by the Senator from Missouri in regard to Captain Dahlgren and his merits; but I understand that this proposition is a permanent one. If Captain Dahlgren dies to-night, or is removed to-morrow, or the Secretary of the Navy, or any one else is substituted in his place under this amendment, the man who takes his place, and has charge of the ordnance at your navy-yard, will receive the same salary that you now propose to confer on Captain Dahlgren.

Mr. GREEN. I am inclined to think the Senator is right, and that a change ought to be made in that respect.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senator from Missouri will bring in a bill to reward Captain Dahlgren—to confer any honor on him—I am willing to vote for it, but he must not think that this amendment should draw any distinction in favor of Captain Dahlgren as against any other meritorious and gallant officer belonging to the Navy.

Mr. GREEN. Make it read "present officer in command."

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator may offer that amendment; but I hope he will not do so. I am not willing to legislate specially for any man. Mr. Dahlgren is not mentioned in this amendment. I referred to him as an example. There is a corps of officers there, and if Mr. Dahlgren should die to-morrow, the Secretary of the Navy might not put an officer in charge there; and therefore he need not pay out this salary. Mr. Dahlgren is instructing a corps of officers under him to discharge this duty. This amendment does not legislate in favor of Dahlgren, but of the officer in charge, whoever he may be, and if Congress at any time should think the recipient a wrong one, they could strike it out.

Mr. GRIMES. But the argument has been based entirely on the merits of Captain Dahlgren. Mr. MALLORY. Exactly; because he is there to receive it.

Mr. GRIMES. But, if he die or be removed to-morrow, why should we pay the man who becomes his substitute the salary we propose to pay him because of his individual merits?

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator is putting a case which is the last to occur. When the Government have found the right man of all others to fill a place, they keep him there. Mr. Maury has been at the Observatory all his military life, and will be probably kept there as long as he wishes. It would be folly to remove a man when you have got him in the right place, and to put him in the right place. If the Government were to remove him it would be a capricious measure, and Congress could repeal the salary. If you propose to legislate specially for Mr. Dahlgren, I shall object. You may provide for the man now there; and then the Department will be under the necessity of having to learn over again all that Mr. Dahlgren has accomplished already, he should not receive this salary. I confess it is designed specially for Mr. Dahlgren; and I confess that, if he were removed or to die to-morrow, and another officer were sent there, unless we were to make some change, he would get this salary under the amendment; but the Secretary of the Navy is supposed to have the public interests sufficiently under consideration to guard a matter of that kind. We must place confidence somewhere.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see the propriety of legislating in a money point of view for particular individuals at all. I know Lieutenant Maury has been kept at the head of the establishment where he is, much better off than any other officer in the Navy, and he is not receiving a salary of $3,000. I have not been disposed to quarrel with that arrangement on account of his great eminence in his line. Still I do not approve of the principle. I think that gentlemen who render extra services in the Navy should be promoted for that service, or paid a larger sum under some regulations, or else none of them should be. The idea here is to pick out a particular individual, and pay him for his genius, by giving him a greater amount of money than others of his class receive. It does not cost him any more to live than it does others in the same grade. He happens to render more service; but why should Commander Dahlgren be put up above Lieutenant Maury? Lieutenant Maury receives, as I understand, $3,000. Mr. PEARCE. He has a house beside. Mr. GRIMES. Dahlgren has a house, too, I understand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Lieutenant Maury receives that salary in consideration of the fact that he is in charge of the Observatory. Why should Lieutenant Dahlgren receive $4,000? He has the same services.

Mr. GREEN. Will the Senator allow me to propose that little amendment which I suggested to obviate the objection made by the Senator from Iowa, and which I think a very proper one; that is to say, to use the words "present officer" or "the officer now in charge."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a question that the Senator must settle with the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. Will the Senator from Maine allow me now to name it, so that it may be accepted?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator has named it. He can move it after I get through.

Mr. RICE. I accept that amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor in the chair.) It is competent for the Senator to do so, and that is the form of the amendment as it now stands.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask again why should this officer receive $4,000 a year for his particular services, when Lieutenant Maury receives but $3,000? Nobody pretends that he has conferred more honor on the service or on the country than Lieutenant Maury. Why should he be put up at once with the oldest captains in the Navy when they are at sea, unless commanding fleets or squadrons? I see no sort of propriety in it. I think it unjust to establish a rule by which all men who render valuable or important services can receive the same amount of money, or promotion, or something of the sort. At any rate, if it is to be particularly singled out, I think the amount ought to be reduced to $3,000, which is higher than the pay of his grade.

Mr. MALLORY. Let me answer the Senator at that point. That, of course, did not escape the mover of the amendment, I presume. Inasmuch as the Senator institutes a comparison between the two, let me tell him that the officer in charge of the Observatory now, or who may come after him, has quarters, fuel, lights, a servant, and many other little conveniences, which in fact make his salary $1,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. So it is with any officer who serves at a navy-yard.

Mr. MALLORY. Dahlgren pays his own rent, and has none of the conveniences.

Mr. GRIMES. Because he chooses to live away from the yard, in the city.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He can have it, if he chooses to stay there.

Mr. MALLORY. There are no quarters there for them. There are many officers stationed at yards who pay their own rent. You have not quarters there for all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If that is the case, it only proves that the other officer receives too much. If he has a house, fuel, quarters, and everything else, $3,000 besides, when men of his own grade, who have done the best they can for the country's service, are only receiving $1,500, and get no quarters and no fuel, I think it is manifestly unjust—a species of favoritism; and the Senate stop the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. He is a commander.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He did receive it while a lieutenant, for many years; but I was not disposed to carp at that. My objection is to carrying the thing further. I disapprove of this favoritism the Navy. It is entirely contrary to public feelings. None are more ready, I take it, than officers of the Navy, to recognize valuable services performed by those who are associated with them; but to make these broad distinctions, because one man has happened to be on shore and turned his attention to inventions, in which he has been successful, having inventive genius, and to place him at once on an equality with the oldest and best officers in the Navy, when he is on shore, is certainly too much. I shall vote against the amendment as it stands, and do not know but that I shall win in any case, but at any rate, it ought to be reduced to $3,000. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESSENDEN. (before the result was announced.) I want to call the attention of the chairman to the amendment, whether, as it now stands, it will not give this gentleman, even after he goes out of this particular pursuit, and is employed in some other duty, $4,000 a year? Will it not continue that salary to him, whether he is employed in this particular service or not?

Mr. MALLORY. I did not propose the amendment. It is the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is too late to consider that question in the present state of the vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Ripley, Brown, Chase, Clark, Crockett, Davis, Fiske, Fitzpatrick, Green, Harlan, Hendricks, Hunter, Johnson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Lane, Latham, Mason, Nicholson, Perkins, Polk, Powell, Rice, Sumner, Sebastian, Ten Eyck, and Wigfall.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Bangs, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Claiborne, Dinkins, Fessenden, Fish, Grimes, Hamilton, King, Newton, Lincoln, and Sumner—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. I move to amend the bill by striking out in page 2, lines thirteen and fourteen, which read:

"Captains on other duty, $3,507. On leave or waiting orders, $2,500."

And insert in lieu of them:

All other captains, one per cent. per annum on their present pay for and on account of every year of their sea-service, as shown by the records of the Navy Department.

I understand, sir, that the first three provisions, under the head of captains, apply to the senior captains, captain commands, and to other captains on duty at sea. Then comes the provision, which I propose to strike out, which gives to captains on other duty—that is, shore duty, since the sea-duty is already provided for—$3,500 a year. That I propose to strike out, and give in place of that an increase of one per cent. per annum upon their present rate of pay for every year's sea-service they may have performed, as verified by the records of the Navy Department. The result of that will be to give to the captains who have performed long duty at sea, larger compensation than to those who have performed short duty at sea. The increased pay will then be graduated according to their sea-service. This is a discrimination which, it seems to me, just and proper to make between those who have been a long time at sea, actively engaged, and those who have been at sea very little or no time at all, including also, and who have never been on leave. They now get, by law, $2,500 a year. If they have served twenty years at sea, this will increase their pay $500, and so in that proportion. I understand that this is desired by some captains. It will operate a discrimination which will be favorable to those who have performed the greatest service. On that account I submit it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, and I suggested to my friend to move it as an amendment to the substitute which I shall offer for the whole bill; but, as it stands, I will state my difficulties. I offered an order that this bill should be recommitted, with instructions to the committee to inquire into the propriety of fixing the pay of every officer in dollars and cents, and not in per centage, and to submit a bill to that description. My reason for that was that it is very important, in my judgment, to know exactly how much we pay every officer, so that there should be no misunderstanding about it. In fact we know very little about it, can find out nothing about it from the Navy Register; and in the case of the Army, the matter is very much worse; the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Davis] shakes his head, but I repeat my assertion, very much worse, in my judgment, in the Army than it is in the Navy.

From time to time, in order to get the pay increased, and from a fear to meet the matter broadly in its face, there have been little amendments strung into the appropriation bills, giving such a percentage for length of service to this class, and that class, and the other, until the thing is so loaded down that from the Navy Register itself you can hardly tell how much any officer in the service receives. There is a document published by the House of Representatives from which you can form a more accurate conclusion. But if you want to know the exact amount of the pay of an officer, it is important, and nothing more than just to ourselves and to the Treasury, that we should know how much every officer receives in dollars and cents. It should not be left to be calculated in the dark by percentages, which not one man in twenty understands at all.

The question then arises whether this bill gives enough. Why, sir, the bill gives for captains on leave, waiting orders, $2,500. If that is not enough, increase it in dollars and cents; give them what they ought to receive. I suppose it is the wisest. It was the conclusion that the committee came to. It was mine from the little examination I could give it. If the Senator will move to increase the pay of all the captains, he will place it in a different condition; but what is the justice, I would inquire, of increasing the pay of those who have been on sea-service? There is the contest between the system which the Senator from Florida has introduced, and that for which I shall contend in reference to this matter, that this graduating pay on sea-service is entirely deceptive and entirely wrong. I do not believe—I do not feel disposed to talk any more about it now, but shall when I come to offer my amendment—that it is a correct principle on which to graduate the pay, because sea-service is a thing for which the officers are not responsible; but at all events, if the Senator wishes to increase the pay, let him say that the officers who have seen such an amount of sea-service shall receive so much while on leave or waiting orders, and others so much.

The question is whether it is enough to support them on their pay. They are officers of the Navy, and they may be about the same as the others may have a large family, and not have been to sea as much as another who has no family at all; and yet the man who has no family at all, because he has been to sea for some reason or other, although it costs him one half as much to live, is to have his pay increased in his old age, while the other, who has not seen so much sea-service, is to have his not increased. I do not think that is just, unless you can fix on the officer some fault or blame. I think he should be treated in precisely the same way, on the principle of having always, since he has been in the service, done his duty. Nothing more can be expected of a man. Whether he has done it or not, is not, in my judgment, to be determined by his having gone to sea more or less; but, at all events, I object to introducing this system of percentages upon this bill, which has been drafted entirely with the idea of relieving all those that are on shore of their pay in dollars and cents, so that it may be known exactly how much each man receives.

Mr. PEARCE. It is not a difficult thing to calculate this matter of percentage; it requires the very smallest amount of arithmetic. I have no doubt the gentleman can figure it out for himself in a very few minutes; and it is not at all inconsistent with the principle of the bill, for here are hundreds of provisions almost, I might say, in which the pay is increased according to the length of service. That is precisely what I offer to do.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But no percentage.

Mr. PEARCE. Well, it is a sum in gross allowed for every three or five years' sea-service, according to the class of the officer. Here I propose to give a percentage of one per cent. I think any way, and that every year of sea-service, gross sum per annum, with about as much each year as he could add any gross sum to any other gross sum; and really I think there is a very good reason why we should increase the pay of officers according to the length of their sea-service.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator allow me to suggest an amendment before he goes on? I think the amendment does not state what he wishes.

Mr. PEARCE. I will hear it, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. Let the amendment be read again.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Strike out lines thirteen and fourteen, and insert: After other captains one per cent. per annum on their present pay for and on account of every year of their sea-service as shown by the records of the Department.

Mr. MALLORY. There are three classes of "present pay." Which one does it refer to?

Mr. PEARCE. The pay of the officer in his position, whatever it is. The officers who are on sea-duty are paid for their special duty in the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I think the Senator means the leave pay of $2,500 a year.

Mr. PEARCE. Yes; and I mean to give captains on other duty their present pay and an addition of one per cent. for every year's service. For instance, if a captain in command of a navy-yard gets $3,500. If this provision be adopted, he will then receive his one per cent. for every year's sea-service upon that sum, and so on with all the others. I think it is perfectly pernicious. Whatever the pay of his station is, he receives the percentage upon that. If he is in command of a navy-yard, then, instead of receiving $3,500 allowed by this bill, the amendment will give him the $3,500 which he now has by law, and also one per cent. per annum on that sum for each year of his sea-service, while he remains in that command. For example, if he has $3,500, he would get his one per cent. on the $2,500, which is his leave pay.

Mr. MALLORY. I cannot concur in this amendment as it stands. I think the arrangement is wrong. We have already adopted this provision: "All other captains on duty at sea, $4,375." Now the amendment of the Senator from Maryland would give a captain who has seen twenty years' sea-service, and many of them have—they ought to have seen it, all of them—$4,300 at a navy-yard, besides quarters, and he would be in a far better situation than the captain who has seen twenty years' sea-service and shore-service pay too near together. Now, if the Senator from Maryland will not strike out line thirteen, not make it apply to officers on other duty, and let the captains apply to leave pay only, providing that the percentage, when on leave, for which they may receive $2,500, shall have an addition of one per cent. for each and every year of sea-service they may have seen in the Navy, then it will not interfere with captains on shore duty, or the captains on duty at sea. I know that I should vote for that amendment, but it would be much more reasonable. It would be more reasonable in this way: this bill will not affect in any way the pay of a number of captains who have done the country very good service.

They have had their commands afloat; they have had their commands ashore; and, going regularly down the list, they will not, perhaps, come in for a ship during the rest of their service, and they may be said to be put aside. Perhaps they have been twenty-five or thirty years of their military career at sea, and for all that we give them nothing; and the bill might be considered as rather disrespectful, as ignoring all those old captains. Therefore, if the Senator will confine to the leave pay, it would give these very officers some little increase, and there would be reason for it; but I do not think there is any reason bringing the shore pay at a navy-yard up to $4,200, when you give the same captain, if he should have to go to sea, where he has to make two mess-bills—one for himself, and one for his family—only $1,75 more; and I suggest to the Senator, therefore, to confine his amendment to the leave pay only.

Mr. PEARCE. I had hoped that this amendment might meet with the favor of the Naval Committee. I take it for granted, if it does not, it will be in vain to attempt to pass it. Perhaps, on the whole, I had better withdraw it, and I do so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to move an amendment as a substitute for the whole bill.

Mr. MASON. Before that is done, I wish to move an amendment to this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It can be offered just as well to the substitute.

Mr. MASON. The usual course, I think, is to let the friends of the bill perfect it, and then a substitute which is offered for the whole bill takes the place of the whole bill. My amendment is a very small one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. For.) The Chair will state that it is immaterial at what stage of the proceedings an amendment in the form of a substitute is offered; but in whatever stage offered, both the bill and substitute are open to perfection and amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If Senators will excuse me, I would rather offer this now; for if Senators get in the bill all the amendments they like, I fear I shall not get any votes for mine.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I wish to move an amendment to this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe I have the floor. I offered my amendment, and ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I wish to make an amendment to the original bill, if I can offer, before a substitute for the whole is offered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mine is an amendment to the original bill, in the shape of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state again to the Senator from Kentucky that he is not precluded from offering his amendment to the original bill by the offering of this substitute. The Chair will receive the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I shall be very short about this. I have submitted the whole matter very willingly to gentlemen who suppose are much more conversant with the subject than I am; and it is only in consequence of a letter which I have received, that I trouble the Senate by offering this amendment:

That the share pay of midshipmen shall be $400 per annum, and $200 when at sea.

I know but little about this, nor did I know the condition in which this class of young public servants were placed. I received a letter from a boy at Annapolis, who informs me that he will be ready to go to sea in June. I beg leave to substitute my argument for anything I could have to say; it will be an abridgment of time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I dislike to interrupt the honorable Senator from Kentucky; but I want to understand what my rights are. I offered an amendment as a substitute, and had the floor up to that. Has the Senator from Kentucky a right to take the floor from me to offer an amendment to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the right of the Senator from Maine to offer his amendment. Mr. FESSENDEN. I have the floor on that amendment, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No proposition can interpose to take away that right; but before the vote shall be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, it is the right of any other Senator to move an amendment to that, or to the original bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That I am willing to yield to, but I did not yield the floor at all; but it was taken from me before I had an opportunity to explain my amendment. I suppose the floor properly belongs to me.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I will not contend about the floor; but the rules of the Senate will be prescribed by the Chair. I presume myself that if my amendment takes precedence of the Senator's, the floor belongs to me upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky takes precedence of the amendment of the Senator from Maine, so far as precedence in the action of the Senate upon the amendment is concerned. The Senator from Maine offered his amendment, which is properly before the Senate; the Senator from Kentucky offered the original bill, which is still open to further amendment or modification. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maine is before the Senate, but no vote can be taken upon it while any amendment offered to the original bill or to the substitute is pending.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the amendment of the Senator from Maine, if it is before the Senate.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. If my amendment takes precedence of the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, I have no objection to the original bill is perfected. However, I do not profess to know much about the rules of the Senate, and am ready to dispose of the matter so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If both Senators insist upon what they claim to be their respective rights, and submit to the Chair as a matter of controversy between the two gentlemen, the Chair will not hesitate to decide, disliking, however, to interpose in any such position between the two Senators of the body. The Senator from Maine offered the original bill, and offered a substitute to the whole bill. That is appropriately before the Senate, and to be read if its reading is called for; but before the vote is taken on that, it is competent for the Senator from Kentucky to move an amendment to the original bill.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The amendment of the Senator from Maine, as a substitute for the whole bill, is postponed to my amendment to perfect the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote on it is postponed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. But we may go on to debate it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We may go on and debate the substitute.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. While an amendment to the original bill has precedence, and is before the Senate? Can that be done, sir? It is a very involved course of proceeding if that is so; but if you say it is, I have not another word to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No rule of parliamentary law, in the judgment of the Chair, in better to get into the question of striking out and insert in order at any stage of the proceedings on a bill; but before the question is taken on striking out and inserting, both propositions are open to modification and amendment and perfection.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. If the gentleman has a right to go on with the debate, what is he to speak on; on his amendment or mine? What is the subject? It is decided that my amendment has precedence. The gentleman claims the floor, because before he offered my amendment he offered a substitute for the whole bill. Now what is the subject of debate before the Senate? If the gentleman insists on his right, and has a right to speak, must he not speak to the subject that is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine offers a substitute for the whole bill, which it is his right to do. It is an amendment. He may debate that proposition, so far as he keeps within the rules of order in debating the question presented. After that is through, if any Senator wishes to express his proposition, or to move to modify the original bill, it is in order to do so. The Chair cannot explain himself more explicitly or more fully. Certainly there is no parliamentary rule better settled than that one. The Chair desires an appeal to be taken from the decision, if it is unsatisfactory.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the whole confusion arises from the Senator from Kentucky introducing his amendment under the supposition that the Senator from Maine had yielded the floor. If the Senator from Kentucky was mistaken in the fact of his amendment being before the Senate, then the whole matter is very plain, and I think he will be so regarded.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I regarded mine as before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I say if the Senator from Kentucky was mistaken in supposing his amendment to be before the Senate, then the decision of the Chair is too plain for argument. The Senator from Maine had moved a substitute, which was to strike out the whole bill and insert what he sent to the Chair. Before that can be done, surely any one has a right to perfect the original bill but, if whilst the Senator from Maine is upon the floor offering his substitute, and wishing to explain his substitute, another Senator rises to perfect the original bill, it is clear that he cannot get possession of the floor to do it. That is, I suppose, the whole matter.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I will not pursue any controversy upon a subject so unimportant as whether I am entitled to the floor or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate, which is upon the substitute offered by the Senator from Maine, which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. FESSENDEN, which is to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That all officers of the United States Navy, on the active list, hereinafter named, shall receive an annual compensation, commencing with the next fiscal year, as hereinafter specified, and shall be entitled to travel and transportation, except ten cents per mile for travel and transportation of baggage, under orders, and one ration per diem on sea-duty, to be computed at five cents, namely:

The senior flag officer, created under and by virtue of an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1869, shall receive $10,000.

Captains, when commanding fleets or squadrons, shall receive $5,000; on other duty at sea, $4,000; on other duty, $3,200; on leave or waiting orders, $2,000.

Commanders, for the first five years after date of commission, shall receive, when on duty at sea, $3,750; when on other duty, $3,000; on leave or waiting orders, $2,000. After five years from the date of commission, commanders shall receive, when on duty at sea, $5,000; when on other duty, $4,250; on leave or waiting orders, $2,500.

Lieutenants commanding at sea shall receive $3,750. For the first five years after date of commission, lieutenants shall receive, when on duty at sea, $3,500; on other duty, $3,000; on leave or waiting orders, $1,500.

For the second five years after date of commission, lieutenants shall receive, when on duty at sea, $4,000; on other duty, $3,500; on leave or waiting orders, $1,750. For the third five years after date of commission, lieutenants shall receive, when on duty at sea, $4,500; on other duty, $4,000; on leave or waiting orders, $2,000.

Ensigns shall be paid as lieutenants.

Masters in the line of promotion and other masters, shall be paid, when on duty, $1,200; and on leave or waiting orders, $1,000.

Passed midshipmen shall be paid, when on duty, $1,200; and on leave or waiting orders, $900.

Acting assistant surgeons shall receive, when on duty, $1,800; on other duty, $1,100; and on leave or waiting orders, $900.

Surgeons, for the first five years after the date of commission, shall receive, when on sea-duty, $1,800; on other duty, $1,200; on leave or waiting orders, $900. For the second five years after date of commission, surgeons shall receive, when on sea-duty, $2,200; on other duty, $1,600; on leave or waiting orders, $1,100. For the third five years after the date of commission, surgeons shall receive, when on sea-duty, $2,500; on other duty, $1,900; on leave or waiting orders, $1,200.

Passed assistant surgeons shall receive, when on duty at sea, $1,800; on other duty, $1,200; on leave or waiting orders, $900.

Purser shall receive for the first five years after date of commission, when on sea-duty, $1,800; on other duty, $1,200; on leave or waiting orders, $900. For the second five years after date of commission, pursers shall receive, when on sea-duty, $2,200; on other duty, $1,600; on leave or waiting orders, $1,100. For the third five years after date of commission, pursers shall receive, when on sea-duty, $2,500; on other duty, $1,900; on leave or waiting orders, $1,200.

Professors of mathematics shall receive, when on duty at sea, $2,000; on other duty, $1,400; and on leave or waiting orders, $1,000. Provided, That no appointments shall be made to this grade to fill vacancies.

Chief clerk shall receive, for the first five years after date of commission, shall receive, when on sea-duty, $1,750; on other duty, $1,200; and on leave or waiting orders, $900. For the second five years after date of commission, chief clerk

$3,500; and so with a captain commanding a squadron. I propose to increase it to $5,000. The committee propose that captains on other duty not at sea shall receive $3,937. I have put it at $3,500, which was the former pay of a captain on sea-duty. The committee and myself propose the same salary for the captains on leave or waiting orders—$2,500. I supposed that was enough. I have proposed a round sum in these cases, believing that to be more convenient for the board.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senate mean to say that the sea-service does not relate to the grade?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not to the grade in the committee bill; but it is sea-service in the Navy from the beginning. If you make it relate to the grade, you will cut it down too low. The effect will be to place about one hundred and eighty lieutenants at once on the highest rate of pay of lieutenants; for the reason that you calculate the sea-service from the time they first entered the Navy; and, in fact, I have not been able to find a single one, although you fix the pay of a lieutenant at $1,500, who will not receive more than $1,500.

Mr. MALLORY. You have not looked.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have looked, but I may have omitted one. There may be such a case, but I do not know of any. If I am wrong about that, I shall be corrected, but there are very few of them at any rate.

Mr. MALLORY. You can go on, and I will correct you afterwards.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I see now, on referring to the Navy Register, one lieutenant whose sea-service between four and five years is shown on the list as Lieutenant Charles A. Babcock, who was appointed October 3, 1859, and he will at once receive pay for seven years' sea-service. He is placed then in a grade receiving $1,700, although the bill assumes that a lieutenant's pay is $1,500. He is the last man appointed, but a lieutenant but a few months; was appointed in October, 1859, and he goes up to the sea-service of pay of $1,700.

Mr. BENJAMIN. What is a lieutenant's pay at present?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Fifteen hundred dollars.

Mr. GRIMES. This man gets at this time only $1,050.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How is that?

Mr. GRIMES. All on the list after Robert L. May, twenty-six lieutenants, get what is called the bogus pay of $1,050.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is for another reason; but I have provided for that in order to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate. Now, what is the arrangement I have made in the substitute that I propose? I simply pay every man according to the date of his commission in his grade. For instance, a lieutenant enters the service as a lieutenant, and receives his commission to-day. I provide in this substitute that for the first five years after the date of such commission he shall receive such an amount; for the second five years, such a further amount; for the third such a further amount; and after that, another sum. The committee, however, carried it up to twenty years, and provided for the first, second, third and fourth term of five years, and for all after twenty years. I carry it to first, second, and third; then to fifteen years, for the simple reason that when men have been fifteen years in the service in this grade they are old enough and experienced enough to receive the highest rate of pay in their grade; they are then necessarily old men. The difference between a man who has been fifteen years in commission and one who has been twenty years in commission is not very large, and under the circumstances I think it better to bring it down to fifteen years, for according to their age when they entered the grade of lieutenant, for instance, they must be pretty well advanced when they have been fifteen years in the service. This increases the amount of the pay to some extent.

The objection that is made to this, is that it should be calculated according to sea-service, for the purpose of putting an end to the desire on the part of officers to shut out duty. That is very desirable; but I think it should be put an end to in another way. I believe that our affairs were properly conducted by the Department—and I do not mean to throw any particular blame on the Department at this time more than another—but it would be done away with. If a man shirks sea-duty, or attempts to do it, through favoritism or anything else, he should be brought to a court-martial and punished in that way; but as a general rule, I am told, and believe it to be true, that the difficulty is the other way; that men cannot always get sea-service when they want it, and have not been able to do so heretofore. At any rate, my proposition in this respect makes it equal. They are in the line of their duty; and if there is nothing of record against them that in their work inquiring into and to show that they have shirked their duty, I think they should be rewarded for doing it, and after coming to a certain age, and having certain responsibilities on them, and when they must have support, the idea of going into a man's record to see how much A, B, and C have been at sea, when perhaps they have been on shore for very good reasons, is to my mind an entirely false mode of calculating what each man should receive. I have, therefore, adopted a different system in relation to that matter, and provided that in all the grades the pay should be calculated from the date of commission in that grade. I believe it to be the correct principle, and I believe that it will be better in the long run than to follow out the system which has been adopted by the committee, and which, as I said before, is entirely deceptive.

I believe that the lieutenants have been the worst of the service as a general rule, on account of their age and the long time they are obliged to stay in that grade; and I am perfectly willing, if the chairman thinks proper to make a motion to that effect, to reduce the term from the date of the commission, and put it at three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve years, instead of five, ten, and fifteen; thus reducing the whole time they would be obliged to be in the Navy and to have a commission, before having their pay raised. Then it would be on a regular system. I have suggested on the amendments, I have suggested on that idea—carrying it through—and that is, paying each man in his grade according to his length of service in that grade, and rising gradually from one point to the other. I believe, sir, that it will work better. I think it will do more to encourage, and do difficulty which certainly arises in calculating the sea-service. Instead of beginning where we ought to begin—in establishing the pay for a grade with a man's entrance into the grade—the committee go back to the commencement of his service in the grade. It is not applicable to the committee to commanders or to captains; not applied to anybody until you get to lieutenants, and then it is extended to pursers and others.

There were also some alterations that I made in the rates of pay in regard to surgeons and pursers; but as the committee's bill is now amended, the difference in this respect between the bill of the committee and the substitute which I have offered, is, that I have brought down the length of service from twenty to fifteen years; that is, I give the highest pay at the end of fifteen years' service and afterwards, instead of at the end of twenty years and afterwards. I do it for this reason: a surgeon enters the Navy, a man educated, not a boy to be educated. He has acquired his profession. Then he must remain, as nations are, for fifteen years before he can get to be a surgeon at all, and then if he serves fifteen years longer he is certainly to be supposed to be old enough to receive the highest pay of his grade. A man could not reach the highest pay of a surgeon if he entered at twenty-five years of age, and then serve thirty, as he would have to do, before he was fifty-five. The difference of five years between fifteen and twenty would seem to be immaterial; and a man at forty is very likely to need as much to support him comfortably as a man at fifty. When he is twenty years in the service, as the law now stands, he receives the pay of a commander, for the reason that he is obliged to give bond to the amount of $25,000, and to be responsible for the property intrusted to his care, and for the fact that it is not his duty to be responsible for anything lost by accident or otherwise, unless he can get a special act of Congress to release him.

In reference to engineers and the minor class of officers, I have not interfered with the bill; but have made a different arrangement. I think I have improved on it; at any rate, I have put all that the committee had in two pages into eight, thus making a little difference of arrangement, and not repeating words unnecessarily. I have classified everything by itself, instead of spreading it over a large space.

These are the principal differences I have made in reference to the pay, from the captain down to the lowest officer, except midshipmen and those whose becoming midshipmen at the naval school, because the idea is a general one, and it is acceptable to all, so far as I have conferred with officers, that these boys should have no more than enough to pay for their education. More money would do them harm, instead of good. I have made one or two suggestions at the end as to the shape of the bill. When we passed the bill to promote the efficiency of the Navy, it required that those officers who were promoted to a higher grade than a vacancy, occasioned by those who retired, should not receive the pay of the grade to which they were promoted, but the pay between that and that of the grade which they left. There are certain officers in the Navy, in all the grades, captains, commanders, and lieutenants, who are receiving what they call the bogus pay; that is, not the pay of their grade, nor the pay of the grade below, but an intermediate grade of pay. The bill of the committee strikes that out, and the consequence is that the very large number of captains made by the additional commissions under that bill, and the very large number of commanders, and the very large number of lieutenants made by the same process, far exceeding the number allowed by law, all by the bill of the committee will receive the rate of pay of the grade to which they have been promoted in consequence of these vacancies. I have put a section into my substitute, restoring that regulation that they shall receive the same pay they now do, conforming it to the increased rates of the pay of the several grades. That is the first thing I have done. I have also put in another proviso, that no sailor-maker shall be appointed to fill any vacancy after the number of that class exceeds twenty in the whole. I did that at the suggestion of a naval officer that a small number of them were of use to the Navy. That is the first thing I have done. I would be well to stop the appointment of more.

I have made a slight alteration also in the third section, to which I will call the attention of the chairman. I propose "that hereafter no service shall be regarded as sea-service but such as shall be performed under the orders of the Navy Department;" not "under the orders of a Department," as he had it, because some service is performed under the orders of other departments, such as the Coast Survey, which I did not suppose would meet his view. That, however, is a question about which I have not much opinion one way or the other.

I believe, Mr. President, that I have, in the statement that I have made, covered all the grounds of difference between the committee and myself with regard to the pay, and I am perfectly willing to discuss it in the manner I propose, and to have the lieutenants by shortening the time within which they are to receive the proposed increase. That would make the bill more acceptable. I believe that the system adopted by the committee is one that will saddle the Navy with a very large expense, and do great injustice to the different officers in that grade, raising men up at once to the highest rate of pay who have just entered upon that rank.

Mr. HUNTER. What is the annual addition to the pay of the Navy?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have not calculated that at all. I did not think of it any consequence; for, as I said before, I only considered how much each man ought to receive; and the amount, whatever it may be, we are able to pay, and ought to pay it. I do not know that I have anything further to say.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President—
THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the question is taken on striking out, the matter proposed to be stricken out is open to further amendment. If the Senator from Kentucky has moved for further amendment, and is entitled to the floor upon it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I have changed it some-jection to that at all; but I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that he accept the amendment I propose. In line one hundred and sixty-five there is a proviso in relation to professors of mathematics:

Provided, That no appointment to this grade shall be made to fill vacancies.

I propose, which I think carries out the intention of the committee, to insert after the word "grade," the words "or that of chaplain;" so as to make it read:

Provided, That no appointment to this grade, or that of chaplain, shall be made to fill vacancies.

I appeal to the chairman of the committee whether the committee were not agreed as to the propriety of this amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. The Naval Committee did originally determine upon this amendment. At a subsequent meeting of the committee, however, I was directed by a vote of the committee to withdraw it. I am convinced myself that unless we can adopt some measures to induce our chaplains to go to sea, they do not answer the purpose for which they were appointed. I think there are seven now at sea, and the grade consists of twenty-four; and the rest are distributed around where every place can be found for them, at naval stations and navy yards. There are five or six, I think, for whom places cannot be found. The grade, in that respect, is too large. If we pay them as lieutenants, as proposed in the bill, they get no increase unless for sea-service. That is put in as an inducement for them to go to sea. The committee did not adopt this amendment to appoint no more chaplains to the Navy; but I am perfectly willing to leave it to the action of the Senate. My own opinion is, that we ought to adopt such a system of appointing chaplains as to leave the selection of a chaplain to the officer in command of a squadron, so that the chaplain would always have the opportunity to go to sea, as he does; and thus make his moral and religious influence greater in the squadron than under the present system.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if any chaplain has ever declined to go to sea where required to do so by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think an instance has occurred of a chaplain declining to go to sea. I think the grade is too large for the present means of sending them to sea. We can only send a chaplain to sea, under the present regulations, on a frigate. I know no chaplain who would not go to sea in a sloop. If they went in a sloop, out of the watch officers would have to give up his station to the chaplain; he would have to sleep in the country, as the sailors call it, to accommodate the chaplain. Hence they leave chaplains on the shore. No chaplain declines sea-duty; but we have no ships to send them in.

Mr. HARLAN. I have been informed by one or two chaplains of the Navy that the officers in command of ships at sea sometimes refuse to accept for the purpose of enabling some lumber officer to perform the duties of chaplain, and thus draw his pay. I inquire of the chairman if this be true?

Mr. MALLORY. It is an inquiry I cannot answer, of course. I do not know if the Secretary gets his information from the officers, or whether I believe it, I tell him no. I do not believe any officer of the Navy seeks himself to perform the duties of chaplain. There is no pay allowed an officer for the performance of the duty. I believe the fact is just as I said, that chaplains cannot be accommodated on sloops-of-war, without displacing a watch officer. I never heard of a chaplain desiring to go to sea in a sloop-of-war. They are always in frigates, and they are now at sea in frigates. Whenever you find a frigate or gun-ship, you find a chaplain occupying his station. For a moment, that any chaplain would decline sea-service when ordered to a frigate; but that the officers themselves do not want chaplains aboard, I am not advised; I am not able to say. I suppose, however, in a small vessel, where the officer would have to displace a watch officer, or lieutenants, to give place to a chaplain, he, of course, would not desire it.

Mr. IVERSON. This amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, I think, is rather too extensive in its operation. If I understand the verbiage of it, it is that if a vacancy occurs in Louisiana, it shall be filled. If that becomes the law, the number of chaplains may be reduced down to one, two, or three. The President cannot fill a vacancy that may occur, and the number may be reduced so that we shall have no chaplains in the Navy. I have no objection to passing a law to limit the number of chaplains in the Navy, if you will, to a certain quantity, and perhaps such a law might be very proper; because there may be more chaplains now than the service requires. I do not know how that is. I am not familiar with the service, and therefore cannot speak understandingly on it. But the operation of this amendment, as I apprehend, is intended to exclude two gentlemen who have been nominated by the President to the Senate, and whose nominations have been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that committee have not reported back those nominations. I suppose that the object of the amendment is really to exclude those gentlemen. If you limit the power to appoint as proposed, it may so operate, in process of time, as to cut down the chaplains to an inconsiderable number—far below the necessary demands of the service. At any rate, the Senator's amendment should be so worded as to guard against that contingency, it seems to me; but the language is that no vacancy hereafter shall be filled. For my own part, I think that as the law stands regulating the number of chaplains in the Navy, it is proper that all the officers should be filled until Congress passes a law reducing the number. I do not think it altogether fair that the two gentlemen who have been recently nominated by the President, in accordance with the law as it now exists, should be defeated by their nomination to a side-wind of this kind; and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. SLIDELL. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, and I think I may safely say as far as every individual member of the Naval Committee is concerned, we are not at all anxious to diminish the character of the two gentlemen who are said to have been nominated to the Senate. I do not know whether it is exactly in conformity with the theory of our peculiar body and institutions that reference should be made to what has occurred, or may occur, and a period in executive session; but I will say hypothetically, that if such nominations have been made, they were made after the Naval Committee had informed the Secretary of the Navy that, in their opinion, the number of chaplains did not require the appointment of these additional officers.

Now, there are two means of meeting the objection of the Senator from Georgia. If the number of chaplains be so reduced as to be below the number required by the exigencies of the service, it will then be in the power of Congress to authorize the appointment of additional chaplains. It may be obviated in a mode much more simple. We have many more chaplains now than are required for the wants of the service; and to meet the supposed difficulty of the Senator from Georgia, we may simply say, whenever any vacancy occurs, that no appointments shall be made to fill the vacancies until the number shall have been reduced to fifteen, which is more than the service requires.

I will state further, that I have very great doubts of the policy of having any chaplains in the Navy. We have been exceedingly anxious to get rid of them on every hand; and I think, in some instances, remonstrances have been made by the Legislatures of the different States that some persuasion, I think the Protestant Episcopal Church, seems to enjoy a monopoly in the appointment of chaplains in the Navy. I should prefer to get rid of these objections altogether; but as the Senate may not be prepared to act on so sweeping a proposition as that, I shall content myself now with endeavoring to reduce the number to fifteen.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have no objection to the amendment, as modified, is in line one hundred and sixty-five, to insert after "grade," the words "or that of chaplain;" and, in line one hundred and sixty-six, after the word "vacancies," to insert "until the number of chaplains shall be reduced to fifteen." That is the object that the clause has in view.

Provided, That no appointment to this grade, or that of chaplain, shall be made to fill vacancies, until the number of chaplains shall be reduced to fifteen.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss this question, but simply to suggest to the honorable Senator from Louisiana that the subject of reducing the number of chaplains in the Navy, it strikes me, had better be connected with some general law, reducing the number of officers of the Navy; either providing for their being retired at a given age, on some pay, leave pay or half pay, or furlough pay; or for cutting down the number of officers in the Navy to those required for efficient and active service. I do not propose any amendments of that kind myself to the pay of the Navy; but this whole subject of reducing the superfluities in the Navy, it seems to me, can be provided for by some general legislation, by a bill that will meet the whole case.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that already, by common consent, as well in the substitute of the Senator from Maine, as in the original bill reported by the chairman of the Naval Committee, these reductions have been made in other grades—the grades of professors of mathematics and of sail-makers.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to record my vote against the amendment, and hence I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. HARLAN. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs another question: whether, by any regulation of the naval service, the chaplains of the Navy are required to conform to the regulations of the service?

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir; there is no such regulation whatever. The Secretary of the Navy would clearly be unauthorized to prescribe any form for service. The act of 1800, "for the better regulation of the Navy," was the original act which required uniformity of dress to be performed on board our vessels, and the regulation of the Department has simply conformed to that "divine service." I will say to the Senator from Iowa here, that every chaplain in the Navy conforms his services, whenever they are, to his own convictions and his own conscience, on best terms with the service, perhaps six different forms at the same time.

Mr. HAMLIN. The statement of the Senator from Florida may be law, but I do not think it is fact. I have no doubt he states accurately what is the law, and the rule the Department prescribes. I have also no earthly doubt that in very many cases the commanders of vessels have produced disturbance where the chaplain has not seen fit to comply with that kind of service which the officer thought it right to require.

Mr. MALLORY. As to that, there are controversies pending always between officers and chaplains, of course; the officers anxious to simplify the forms as much as possible, and the chaplains having their own convictions. That has nothing to do with the regulation of the service. When these complaints are made, the Department always notices them, and admonishes the officer that he cannot interfere with a thing of that kind.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Butler, Brown, Chandler, Chewett, Clark, Davis, Hamilton, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Green, Groves, Doolittle, Hays, Iverson, Kennedy, Leatham, McKim, Seward, Simmons, Sumner, Ten Eyck, and Wright—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in after line sixty-five of the original bill:

In no case shall any person occupying as chaplain receive compensation therefor who is not a chaplain.

Mr. MALLORY. Such a thing has never been done since we have had a Navy. It is entirely unnecessary. No such claim has ever been made.

Mr. HARLAN. Then it will do no harm; and I will propose it, merely for the chaplains of the Navy themselves.

Mr. MALLORY. It is an implication that naval officers have received pay for acting as chaplains. I say again no such thing has ever occurred since we have had a Navy; no such pretension has ever been made.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no controversy with the Senator as to the fact. The amendment can do no harm.

Mr. MALLORY. Very well; but I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. HARLAN. I have called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS: PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 1859.

NOVEMBER.....No. 87.

Mr. HAMMOND. Suppose there is no chaplain on board a ship: does the Senator intend to prevent anybody saying prayers?

Mr. HARLAN. No. Allow him to read the service, but read it without pay.

Mr. HAMMOND. But, think the language is, "shall officiate as chaplain."

Mr. HARLAN. Let the amendment be read. The Secretary read it.

Mr. MALLORY. My objection to the amendment, and the reason why I hope it will not be adopted, is, that it is an implication on the fair dealing of naval officers, that they would thus travel out of the legitimate line of their sea-duties on board ship to perform the duties of a chaplain, and ask pay for it; when I tell the Senator such a thing has never occurred since we have had a Navy, and such a thing cannot be substantiated. I have never heard the pretension made before. I do not think such an amendment is essential.

You might as well insert a clause guarding against naval officers taking pay for performing almost any other act. You might go on and multiply tens of thousands of things which they have not received pay, and never expected it. The usual course on board ships that have no chaplains is, for the first lieutenant or the purser, either the one or the other, to read prayers at the capstan, at which the crew musters on Sunday. I know that you cannot find an instance in the whole files of our Department where such a pretense has been set up for an officer to receive pay for acting as chaplain.

Mr. HAMMOND. I think there is a law which permits any one in the United States service for receiving pay for performing two services. I think there is a law already existing that no officer or sailor on board a ship shall receive any pay for officiating as chaplain—the law of 1842.

Mr. HARLAN. The amendment does not use the word "officer." The word "person" is used, and I have been informed that the whole difficulty in shipping chaplains originates in this; that many of the officers of the Navy prefer the society of other persons than chaplains, and by going to sea without chaplains, and appointing some individual who may happen to be on board to act as chaplain, and allow him to draw the pay, the compensation can be disposed of more satisfactorily to those on board than if it should be paid to a regular chaplain. I know not that there may have been very much foundation for this; but that impression is abroad, not only among the chaplains of the Navy, but among other ministers. It has been a matter of complaint with the members of churches away from Washington city and away from the sea-board. But if this abuse never has occurred, as the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs seems to suppose, then the amendment can do no harm; it will injure nobody. If the abuse ever has occurred, it will correct it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will ask the Senator if he can indicate one case, or suggest one name, or refer to one instance, in which the abuse exists as it has ever occurred in the Navy. If he will specify a single case, I may vote for the amendment.

Mr. HARLAN. I could do so, but I should think it unfair dealing to the gentleman whose name I might mention, and it might render his berth more uncomfortable if he were shipped.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is impossible for the Navy Department to pay anybody as chaplain but chaplains; they know who are chaplains. I do not wish to appear as an advocate of the proposition to correct an abuse; but this is no abuse; it is an impossible thing, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. MASON. I did not hear the whole debate; but will the Senator from Iowa say that there is an instance where an officer has ever received, far more asked for, compensation for performing the duty of chaplain?

Mr. HARLAN. I have not yet said that officers of the Navy did; but other persons have been called on by the commander of a ship to perform the service, who are permitted to draw the pay; and a number of chaplains have told me that the difficulties which occur between them and officers of the Navy frequently originate in that fact; that they prefer to let some other person officiate in case of deaths and other ceremonies when the services of a chaplain may be required; for they prefer the society of other individuals than the chaplains.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I should like to understand this matter; for if there is an abuse it ought to be corrected; and if not, vague generalities ought not to induce us to legislate. Chaplains in the Navy, if I understand it, are paid for their services by law a certain rate. If these chaplains receive their pay, how is it possible for the commander to manage to pay somebody else for those services? The chaplain, of course, receives his pay. Where does the money come from that is paid to other persons, who do the duties?

Mr. GRIMES. Whether there has been an abuse of this kind or not, it is no imputation on anybody to adopt this amendment. It prevents any abuse of the kind in future; and we all know the public mind has been very greatly excited in some portions of the United States in regard to these chaplains in the Navy. Had we not better adopt the amendment, and quiet the public mind on this subject? It seems to me better.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator says the public mind has been very much disturbed. I never heard of the suggestion before in all my life, and I have had something to do with naval affairs for many years. The idea is so novel to me that I cannot call to mind the slightest occasion on which I ever heard of it, beyond, perhaps, a few gentlemen particularly interested.

Mr. GRIMES. I will state to the Senator that religious denominations, in some portions of the North at least, have passed resolutions on this subject, and in connection with the chaplains which grew out of the transaction with Commodore Salust. I believe, on the Brazil station.

Mr. MALLORY. Passing resolutions generally on this subject does not meet the point that naval officers have ever charged, or pretended to charge, for doing the duty of chaplains, or any other person on board a ship.

Mr. GRIMES. The statement made by my colleague was that other persons had drawn pay for discharging the duties of chaplain, when those persons were not chaplains attached to a naval squadron.

Mr. MALLORY. Now, let me say to the Senator that that is impossible. In the first place, no man could get on board the ship at all, without the sanction of the Secretary of the Navy, other than those ordered to her. There is no man like him, and he would not be allowed there; not even one of the members of the captain's own family. Then there is a positive prohibition in the act of August 23, 1842, which meets every case, and this among them:

"No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emolument is, or are, fixed by laws or regulations, shall receive any additional compensation, or compensation of any kind, for any service, for the discharge of public money, or any other service or duty whatsoever, unless the same shall be authorized by law."

Now, the parties on board a ship are the commanding officer, his subordinate in the line of promotion, and the captain's secretary, allowed by law if he has a ship large enough. The duty of chaplain is done, by a regulation of the service, by a warrant or order of the commanding officer of the ship. That is the uniform regulation, and no other man does it unless they are sick. These are bare generalities, on the supposition that somebody on board that ship will be taken in preference to the chaplain. I can tell the Senators from Iowa that it is the current desire of the Navy Department always to send chaplains to sea; but we have no ships for them to go in. They cannot go in sloops for the reason I have stated; but on board these sloops divine service is performed every Sunday by the parties named in the regulations. If the Senator can give me one single instance where such an abuse has ever existed, or can state it upon any authority whatever, I promise to correct the error he has fallen into; but he cannot show one single instance, from the organization of the Navy down to the present time, when such a charge has ever been made before. I certainly never heard it. I can assure him there is no possible foundation for it.

Mr. KING. This subject of chaplains is one in which there is considerable interest felt in the country. There are a portion of our people who are opposed to the employment of chaplains at all, and we have had difficulties in some of our State Legislatures and in Congress on the subject. Some make this opposition because, they say, religion was in no way intended to be, and ought not to be, in this country, in any way connected with the Government. In my opinion the appointment of chaplains, both in the Army and Navy, in accordance with the practice of the Government, is very proper, and I think that any persons who perform these religious services in either case should be ministers of the Gospel, and should be chaplains, and the duty should not be devolved on other persons. Neither should the pay be drawn from the Treasury by other persons. It was the abuse in this respect which led to the adoption of the article in our Constitution which declared that in this country religion should be separate and independent matter from the Government entirely. It was that persons were selected to perform religious services on the ground that they were gentlemen. There are a great many persons in this country who would examine the character as gentlemen would not be questioned, who are very poor Christians, and who are entirely unfit to discharge the services which are required of chaplains and ministers of the Gospel in a great many of these cases. I myself think that this amendment is a very proper one, and I do not see any grounds on which it can be resisted, unless it be that it is desired to have this abuse practiced in the Navy, which certainly ought not to be.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator in his closing remarks says there is an abuse. If there was an abuse, I of course would be the first to try to correct it. I have been endeavoring to show that there can be no abuse. No man can receive a dollar as chaplain until he shows his commission. He is a commissioned officer, and if he went to the Department and asked pay for performing the duties of chaplain, they would look to the muster-roll and see if he was a chaplain; and if not, he would have to come here. Here is the place for men performing duties of another grade to apply for pay, world-wide examination. He would possibly get a dollar from the Department unless he is a chaplain. I want that understood. The Navy Department has no authority, either by regulation of law or custom, to pay a dollar to a man who does not hold the commission.

As to the other question, whether a grade old first lieutenant in performing these religious duties would have any influence on the honorable Senator from New York, or any more influence than the chaplain, that is an argumentum ad hominem issue which I will not contest. It is the example of the man at large on board the vessel which is sought to be attained; and the reason why they perform the service is, that a chaplain cannot be accommodated on board the ship in consequence of her construction. You have to displace him from the cabin, or the berth, or the stateroom; and I do not know that any chaplain has ever applied to go to sea in a sloop-of-war. If they have it has not occurred to me. They are not entitled to go but on frigates.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I remember to have seen a portrait of a certain statesman and very learned man said that the time seemed to be approaching when society would have to interpose to repress religion from the hands of the clergy. I am afraid, sir, that if honorable Senators, who entertain a sort of sympathy for An act (No. 106) authorizing the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States to enter a certain tract of land in the State of Wisconsin; An act (No. 108) for the relief of Mrs. M. E. Childs;

An act (No. 109) for the relief of John Hastings, executor of the last will of Henry and

An act (No. 306) to settle the titles to lands along the boundary line between the States of Georgia and Florida.

Also, that the Senate had ordered, on March 26, 1860, at twenty minutes after one o'clock, the passage of the usual number of copies of the memorial of Edward Larned, of New York, submitting a method for building a railroad to the Pacific by the present railroad companies of the United States.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SYSTEM.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so modifying the diplomatic and consular system of the United States, as to conform with the different requirements of this Government in foreign countries, except consuls, commissioners, and other commercial agents, and providing for the appointment of other agents of this Government to the consular districts for diplomatic purposes, in such special cases as may from time to time arise, when the foreign relations of this country may require it, and that the committee be permitted to report by bill or otherwise.

PONCA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 216) making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponca Indians and with certain bands of Indians in the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, for the year ending 30th June, 1860, upon which the previous question had been seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was taken on concurring in all the Senate amendments to the bill; and they were concurred in.

STEAMBOAT PASSENGER BILL.

The SPEAKER stated that the business next in order was the consideration of House bill No. 114, further to provide for the safety of passengers on vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam; the consideration of which had been postponed to this day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Its consideration was postponed till after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It was not so postponed, and I prefer to go on with the matter now.

The bill itself will not, I trust, invoke any very great amount of discussion. No man can be more fully aware than I am of the difficulties of passing a bill of this character; but I trust that, as gentlemen have had an opportunity of examining the bill, and as they undoubtedly have examined it, and have made themselves familiar with its provisions, they will be prepared to pass it at this time. I need not state that the Committee on Commerce consider it of great importance that this bill should be passed. It has been considered, not only by the Committee on Commerce of the present House, but by the Committee on Commerce of the House for the last two Congresses, and by one committee of the Senate. In the Thirty-Fourth Congress a bill substantially like that now presented was reported by the Committee on Commerce of the House; but no action was taken on it during that Congress, and it fell. During the last Congress a like bill was reported by the Committee on Commerce, and after discussion it was finally referred to that committee, and it came to be reached, but in relation to a bill of this character, where there may be very considerable differences of opinion, it must be evident—it is well known, particularly to every old member of the House—that if it is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the subject of the Union it will never be reached in a regular order. If it be brought before the House at all, it must be by a motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from its further consideration; and when thus brought before the House, it must be passed under the operation of the previous question. I wish, therefore, to say to gentlemen that, if there be a desire to pass this bill, it must be considered and voted on if it be sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will share the fate of the bill on the same subject that was sent there at the last Congress. It would be different if it were a bill for which there would be a majority of the House to come to the yeas and nays, and to vote on it up at any time, or discharge the committee from its further consideration.

This, sir, is a bill for the protection of the lives of passengers on vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam.

It is a bill in which the committee of the present law requires additional guards and restrictions. If we refer back, we will find that there was no law on this subject prior to 1838. A law was then passed which provided for the appointment of district inspectors, to be appointed by inspectors to be appointed by the judges of the district courts. Although that law was imperfect in detail, still the appointment of these inspectors, and the inspection of boilers and hulls made by them, were productive of the best consequences. It was, in fact, a very large degree, to the safety of human life.

Two amendments were made to that law, one in 1843, and one in 1849; they were amendments on particular points. In 1851-2, the subject was again brought before Congress, and another law was passed intended to be complete and perfect, and to cover all wants in that regard. That law was principally the work of one of the wisest and ablest men and legislators who ever sat in either branch of Congress—John Davis, of Massachusetts; but the Government of that law had not been tested, and further amendments are requisite, in order the better to protect life. The bill now reported by the Committee on Commerce is a bill of some thirty sections. If gentlemen will refer to the report made by the committee, they will find a full and complete statement of the provisions of the law. The first amendment proposed in this bill is in making the law apply to the ferry-boats, tug-boats, and freight-boats, which do not come within the provisions of the law of 1852. They do come within the provisions of the law of 1852, which, however, requires an inspection to be made by the inspectors appointed by the district courts. It is not required by that law that these ferry-boats, and tug-boats, and freight-boats, should have their pilots or engineers licensed.

Now, sir, it must be evident to every man who considers this subject, that there is an eminent propriety in bringing these ferry-boats under the law of 1852, so that they should be inspected, not by the inspectors appointed by the district judges, whose compensation consists of the fees, but by the Government inspectors, who are paid by the Government; and the fees received for that service go into the Treasury. We propose that the provisions of the law of 1852, in relation to the appointment of these inspectors, shall be repealed, and that these boats shall be inspected by the district board of inspectors, as provided in this proposed amendment.

There is, sir, I repeat, an eminent propriety in this. One of the most terrible accidents which has ever taken place in this country was upon these ferry-boats. The Governor of New York collected the inspectors in the Delaware river, on a ferry-boat, crossing from Camden, in your State, sir, to Philadelphia, where a large number of passengers, women and children, were destroyed, burned and scalded and drowned, in one of these ferry-boats, which had not been inspected before the House. It is not necessary to state that the necessity of such a board of inspectors is provided for in the proposed amendments. It is to remedy that evil that we propose, in the present law, to bring these ferry-boats, and these tug-boats, and these freight-boats, all of them, under the provisions of the first section of the law, which is now before the House.

I am aware, sir, that it is always the case when you undertake to legislate on we do by this bill, that you run after private interests, and that you find these steamboat proprietors coming here in order to defeat all legislation for the protection of the lives of passengers. They do not desire that the strong arm of the law shall be placed on them. They do not desire that they shall be required to furnish such guards for human life as we propose here. They do not desire that their passengers shall be limited to a given number—a number which they can easily satisfy and provide for as they should provide for them. But I may say, in regard to this, that unless it be that of a remonstrance on your table against its passage from any quarter; although it has been before the country, and its provisions are well known. I know of no remonstrance which has come up here against its passage, and I presume there will be no opposition unless it be that of a particular part of the country, where a very large steamboat interest is concerned. There is no remonstrance against it from the great West, from our steamboat men there, who are willing that there shall be reasonable provisions of law on this subject. There is no objection to it from the South, and none from New England. There is no objection anywhere, except, perhaps, from a particular quarter, to the passage of these amendments, and whether there will be any serious opposition from that quarter remains to be seen. That quarter is New York city.

We extend the provisions of the law of 1852 to sea-going steamers. We provide that the number of passengers in some of these sea-going steamers shall be limited to a reasonable number.

We provide that the inspectors, who are appointed by these local inspectors from time to time, in order that they may know, and in order that they through them the public may know, whether these steamers are sea-worthy or whether they are old, rotten, worm-eaten hulks, which the cupidity and avarice of steamboat proprietors would put upon our waters, and perhaps, under new names, entrap unwary passengers into.

We also provide that they shall carry a given number of life-boats and other means of saving the lives of passengers in case of an emergency, sir, when this bill was up two years ago, it was urged against it that we limited the passengers to too small a number. We propose to provide in this bill that no ocean-going steamer, running more than four hundred miles, shall carry more than one passenger for every hundred tons of tonnage, and that we believe to be an entirely reasonable limit, and one to which there can be no just objection.

Under the law of 1852—and I beg the attention of gentlemen to it in the supervising and real inspection has power and authority to limit the number of passengers in these steamers. The law of 1852 embraced, to some extent, the provisions of the law of the British Parliament on this subject, and under it these supervisors were authorized to limit the number of passengers on the ocean-going steamers. But in 1855 the attention of Congress was called to the flagrant abuses on the emigrant passenger ships; and so great was the interest felt, so great was the demand of the public that there should be some legislation on that subject, that on the 3d of March, 1855, a bill was introduced by me, limiting the number of passengers on board of emigrant ships. That act referred more particularly to sailing vessels. Before that time the horrors of the middle passage were revived on board these emigrant ships. Congress stepped in, upon the motion, sir, of the distinguished Senator from New York—Governor Fish—and they passed an act limiting the number of passengers to one to every two tons. By that act, the discretion was taken out of the hands of the supervising inspectors, and the same limit was placed upon the number of passengers which might be carried in steamers as in sailing vessels—namely, one passenger to every two tons. Congress overlooked the difference between a sailing vessel and a steam vessel—that from one third to one half of the tonnage of the steam vessel was made up by machinery and her place for fuel. They did not take that into consideration; and it will be seen that, taking this into account, the number of passengers we propose to allow steam vessels to carry corresponds to that allowed to sailing vessels, allowing for the difference in the use of machinery and her place for fuel.

Now, sir, it was urged, I think, during the last Congress, that this was unreasonable, that it would strike down trade, and that none of these vessels could afford to run if the number of passengers was thus restricted. It was said, for that, that it was a discrimination in favor of foreigners.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled a joint resolution for the relief of the contractors of the Post Office Department; when the Speaker signed the same.

STEAMBOAT PASSENGER BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It was, I say, contended that this restriction was against the interests of our commerce and in favor of the interests of foreign commerce, and that the ocean steamers of other countries were permitted to carry a larger number of passengers in proportion to their tonnage than the number here fixed. Now, by a reference to the acts of the British Parliament on this subject, which I have here before me, I find that the restriction in this is no greater, if as great, as the restriction imposed under the act of Parliament.

Sir, this act provides that no ship propelled by sails only shall carry a greater number of persons (including every person on board) than is the proportion of one statute adult to every two tons of her registered tonnage. Now, the English mode of registering the tonnage of steamships excludes everything pertaining to their motive power; so that by the act of Parliament which I have in my hand, the steam-going vessels of Great Britain will not be permitted to carry a greater number, if as great a number, of passengers as this bill provides that American steam-going vessels may carry.

Now, sir, to refer for one moment to some of the steam-going vessels which go out of the port of New York. You will see what limitation will be placed upon these steamship owners, and whether this bill bears unnecessarily heavy upon them. For instance, let us refer to the steamship Augusta, of thirteen hundred and seventy tons burden, running out of the port of New York; how many passengers will be allowed to carry under this bill? Why, sir, she may carry three hundred and seventy passengers. Is not that a sufficient number of passengers for a vessel of that amount of tonnage? Take, for instance, a foreign-going steamer of twenty-two hundred and forty tons; how many passengers can she carry under this limitation of one passenger to every three and a half tons tonnage? She may carry six hundred and forty passengers—literally a small army. Will gentlemen say that this is a restriction on Congress to allow a greater limit than that?

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. Is that the number inclusive of the crew?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. No, sir; exclusive of the crew. This bill allows the number of passengers I have mentioned, exclusive of the number of officers and crew which may be on board.

Then, sir, I will call your attention to the effect this law will have in reference to some of the steamships going out of the port of New York to Panama and other points. Take, for instance, the North Star, with a registered tonnage of eighteen hundred and sixty-seven tons; how many passengers can she carry under this bill? She may carry five hundred and thirty passengers. Is that not a sufficient number of passengers for that ship? Gentlemen come here from New York and say: "Why, you will break down our commerce." You broken down, with the permission to carry five hundred and thirty passengers on a steamer of less than nineteen hundred tons! The passage money taken for passage by these steamers ranges from two hundred to five hundred dollars for every passenger to California. Why, sir, every trip of one of these steamers makes for her owner what would be an independent fortune for a modest man.

Then there is a smaller class of steamers. Take, for instance, the Star of the West, with eleven hundred tons. She is allowed three hundred and thirty passengers. Then, going on the Pacific coast, let us see how the matter stands there. There is the Gortez, of eleven hundred and seventeen tons. She is allowed three hundred and twenty passengers. There is the Golden Gate, of two thousand tons. She could carry five hundred and ninety passengers, under this bill. Yet we are told that we are confining the owners of steamships to the carrying of a few passengers; that we are striking at a great interest.

Now, Mr. Spenger, I think I have convinced the House that the provision of law which is sought to be adopted in this bill is a provision eminently just, and demanded by every consideration of public interest as well as of humanity. The constituents of every man on this floor who have traveled on one of the California steamers, and who have told of the abuses which grow out of the crowding of these steamers as they have been crowded heretofore. Very often as many as twelve hundred passengers have gone out in one of these California steamers of one thousand or twelve hundred tons burden, and these passengers were crowded to sleep on the deck. A gentleman who had seen how these steamers going out of New York were crowded, remarked that the passengers were crowded together like hogs and fed like dogs.

That is one of the evils which this bill proposes to remedy. Then we propose—and I have referred to this provision before—that it shall be the duty of the inspectors to examine these vessels within a given time, to see whether they remain sound; to see whether the rot has commenced in them. There was a case which was referred to when this subject was under consideration in the last Congress—the case of the Illinois, which was supposed to be sound, yet when she came to be examined by the inspectors, she was found to be rotten almost from stem to stern. This bill provides that if a steamer periodical inspection is not made, and she is found to be unsound, she will be taken out of the service and she will be sound and safe—worthy or not.

Then we have a provision in relation to lights; and I will frankly say in this connection, that there are some things in this bill which I have no personal knowledge in reference to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Before the gentleman leaves the point of these inspectors, to which he was speaking, I desire to ask him a question in relation to the increased cost to the Government that will be incurred under this bill? I ask the gentleman whether more inspectors will be appointed than were provided for under the law of 1852? At what points are these inspectors to be chosen, and what additional boards of inspectors are now provided for?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think the gentleman from Georgia is right in his suggestion, for I might have otherwise passed over these points without sufficient explanation. By reference to the report, the gentleman will find that if the provisions of this bill are adopted—and I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the district inspectors who have heretofore been appointed by the judges of the district courts are done away with, and the fees, which under the old system were paid into their pockets, now go into the Treasury. If this bill be passed, then, you will know that system; you repeat a portion of the law of 1838, which provides for the inspection of hulls and boilers by inspectors to be appointed by the judges of the district courts; and in bringing in the ferry-boats, tug-boats, and freight-boats under the law of 1852, and in going away with the law of 1852, the New York and New Jersey laws have had to provide two additional inspectors to take their place. We have had to provide two inspectors, I repeat, to take the place of those who were appointed by the district judge under the law of 1838.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. If my friend will permit me, I will hand him a table, which I have taken the pains to prepare, showing precisely the increased expense of the execution of the proposed law of 1860 over that of 1852. If the gentleman will permit me, I will bring it to the reading.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman will have an opportunity to make his argument. I am not aware what are the calculations made by the gentleman from New York. Perhaps they may differ somewhat from my own.

Will the gentleman answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Georgia, (Mr. CRAWFORD.) In addition to the offices really created by this bill, in the State of New York, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, we have provided for an additional supervising inspector for that State.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That provision is made in the seventeenth section of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir. It is deemed absolutely necessary, in order to carry out the objects of the law, that this new inspector should be created. The gentleman from Georgia is aware that, under the law of 1852, nine supervising inspectors were provided to carry out the provisions of that law. The country was to be divided up into inspection districts, and to each district a supervising inspector was to be assigned. In this bill, we have created an additional supervising inspector for the State of Oregon. In addition to that, I have already alluded to, there are four boards of local inspectors created. That, I presume, is one of the matters which the gentleman from Georgia desires to come at. They are as follows: one at Memphis, Tennessee; one at Paducah, Kentucky; one at Oregon City, Oregon; and one at Galena, Illinois. Acting somewhat under the advice and by the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Committee on Commerce were very much indisposed to constitute these new boards, unless it was shown that they were demanded by the wants and interests of the country. If gentlemen will refer to page 16 of the report, they will find a letter addressed to me, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, by the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Guthrie, as far back as 1856. It is as follows, and deserves particular attention:

THESEY DEPARTMENT, April 21, 1856.

Sir: I have examined the bill to amend the act passed the 20th of August, 1852, for the better regulation of passenger vessels, and for the better regulation of the supervision of inspectors, and think the new provisions well calculated to secure the safety of the lives and property of passengers, and to secure the sanction of Congress, that the law can be better and more satisfactorily carried out.

I have also examined the provisions of the bill provided in the fourth section, which open the door to the creation of boards in many places where they were not needed, and have the honor to express my dissent to the too great multiplication of the officers. After a consultation with the board, and hearing their reasons for the establishment of the board at Galena, and for the propriety of boards at those places, and that the same necessity does not exist at other places; and that, with a prudent restriction upon the creation of the boards authorized, the law can be carried into effect without inconvenience to the interest involved.

In the bill, I think I can see that the law was executed, has sent an agent to visit and report upon the operation of the law and its execution in the several districts, and to attend the meetings of the board of general supervising authority vested in the Secretary. It would be more effectual to give the Department direct authority to do so, and to have the report of the board of general deliberations of the board.

To effect this, I submit the enclosed amendment to be added to the bill, in the section of the proposed act.

I am, very respectfully,

JAMES GUTHRIE,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. E. B. WASHBURN, Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

I have an official statement of the steamboats inspected at Galena, and many of them owned there. It adds force to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. By this statement it will be seen that the inspection of steam vessels at the port of Galena for the year ending 31st December, 1857, shows twenty-three steam vessels owned and inspected there, sixty-one pilots, and fifty-four engineers examined. Here are one hundred and fifteen engineers and pilots to be examined, and between twenty and thirty steamboats to be inspected, at the port of Galena. Now, there is no supervising inspector at Galena, and no board of inspectors. Michigan is five hundred miles distant. To have a steamboat inspected there, or an engineer or pilot licensed by a supervising inspector, we have to send five hundred miles, to Monroe, Michigan, for a supervising inspector to come and inspect, and to have a pilot, and a larger amount of tonnage than any port, except St. Louis, above New Orleans.

In regard to a new board for Paducah, Kentucky, that matter was examined into by the board of supervising inspectors; a board, sir, which was created in 1852, and was intended to be winding under the present law better than any other men. Upon consultation with that board, the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended the establishment of a board of inspectors at Paducah, Kentucky, as being necessary to meet the wants of commerce in that place. In the review of the case, the committee, though indisposed to create new offices, deemed it imperatively demanded by the public interest to provide for this new board. In regard to the Memphis board, I have only to refer the gentleman to the report of the supervising inspector, or the subject, of the gentleman who represents that district upon this floor. Here it is:

WASHINGTON, January 20, 1859.

Sir: In response to your favor of inquiry concerning the number of steamboats in the Memphis trade, the following table shows the necessity of the establishment of an inspector's district at that place, I beg leave to submit the following facts, which have been gotten up with as much accuracy as could be done with the means of so doing which I could command:

The Louisville, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Nashville, Evansville, Cairo, Tennessee river, Pittsburgh, and all the boats on the tributaries of the upper Mississippi river that run to New Orleans, invariably stop at Memphis on their downward and upward trips, making upwards of three thousand arrivals and departures annually at Memphis, exclusive of the regular packets above named.

A great many of the regular packets enumerated in the foregoing schedule lay up at Memphis every summer, besides others which lay up not in the regular trade.

I think, sir, that the above, although by an means a full and perfect schedule of the amount of business of this character transacted at the port of Memphis, is sufficient to satisfy any one of the great necessity of an inspection district at the city of Memphis.

All which is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully,

Hon. E. B. Washburne.

W. T. AVERY.

I trust I have explained the bill to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I suppose the gentleman has forgotten to state the amount of increased expenditure to the Government under the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There are four new boards of inspectors created.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Five.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. No, sir, four; at Memphis, Paducah, Oregon, and Cincinnati.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. And two assistants at New York.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have already stated that. They do not constitute a new board, but are assistants in New York to take the place of the two inspectors who acted under the law of 1838, upon the appointment of the district judge. They have no relation whatever to that part of the act about which I am now speaking. The salary of these officers is: for those at Oregon City, Oregon, $1300; and for those at Galena, Memphis, and Paducah, $600. It will be seen that the expenditure for them all is not a large sum.

I will make a remark or two in relation to the increased expense. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARK] says that he has a statement, am aware will show much more for a man get up here and talk about the creation of new offices. I am aware how susceptible the House may be to an argument of that kind. Now, sir, I have made a calculation on the subject, and by that calculation the increased expense under the act under law as it exists is $237. That is, by allowing the fees exacted for the inspection of boats, now for the first time brought under the law, I believe experience will show that the additional amount coming into the Treasury will pay all the additional expenses, indeed, I hardly believe that it amounts to that. The Government pays these officers their salaries, but it does not pay them large salaries. These supervising inspectors are the best men in the country, of high character and great experience, men coming from all parts of the country, and who understand the business.

And what salary do you think is allowed a supervising inspector? The pitiful sum of $1,500 per annum. Many of them are retired ship-owners, or steamboat-owners, or captains, who take an interest in this matter. I will refer to one man from Kentucky, known to all the members from Kentucky—Captain Schallcross—who informed me that he had run steamboats upon the Mississippi and its tributaries for thirty-five years, and had never lost a life, nor to an insurance company a dollar. He belongs to the class of men who have charge of this law, and who are endeavoring to carry out its provisions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that the expense to the Government, under this bill, will not exceed that under the law of 1832 more than $237?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I made a calculation of the comparative cost, and that was the result of my comparison. I was going on to say that this bill provides for the payment of fees which go into the Treasury, and that the salaries of the officers are paid out of the Treasury. If the gentleman from Georgia will look over the whole subject, he will find that there never has been a law upon our statute-book of so great use, which has been carried out at so slight an expense.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me say to the gentleman that, by taking the act of 1852 and comparing it with the present bill, and adding the cost of the new inspectors who are to be selected, he will find the expense increased over twenty thousand dollars per annum.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman is mistaken, and I will tell him why; there will be a very large amount accruing under this law for the inspection of ferry-boats, tow-boats, and freight-boats, which now goes into the pockets of the inspectors, but will hereafter go, if this bill is passed, into the Treasury.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman will allow me to ask him a question touching this matter. I desire to know if he is aware of the amount of money which is collected by the inspectors and paid to the Treasury.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have that statement at my room, and will bring it here and show it to the House. I tell the gentleman I have no concealment about this matter. I desire to mislead no man. If it be an objection to this bill that it increases the expense a few hundred dollars, or a few thousand dollars, why, gentlemen must make the most of it. While I believe that in fact the execution of the law under this bill will not cost the Government an additional dollar, yet if it did, when we take into consideration the objects accomplished by the bill, it is but as dust in the balance.

When the gentleman from Georgia interrupted me, I was going on to speak in reference to the matter of carrying lights. I was saying, as a matter of course, being no sailor, but only a "land lubber," I knew and could know nothing practically of the matter. But of great experience, seafaring men—experts we might call them—consulting with the supervising inspectors, have agreed in relation to a system of carrying lights, which I believe is satisfactory to the men who are engaged in navigation. It is a matter of very great importance that all vessels should be bound by law to carry its lights, and that we should provide a system of lights to be carried by them. In that respect I believe, from all the knowledge and all the information I can get, that the provisions of this bill are entirely satisfactory to those to whom it will apply.

The subject of carrying lights for the protection of life and property, is no new subject; but England and France have legislated in regard to it. This lends me to speak of some objections made to this bill, and which, as it respects discretion which is invested in these supervising inspectors and local inspectors. The laws of England confer a discretion far more extensive than that bestowed by this law. There they do not provide by law that the lights shall be left, but leave that matter to be regulated by a board conforming to our supervising inspectors—"the lords commissioners for carrying out the marine act of 1850." Those men prescribe what the lights shall be.

But the subject of carrying lights has not only been provided for by British law, but by the French law, which I hold in my hand. They provide for carrying lights for the protection of lives and property. In the report of the Minister of Marine, made in 1848, he says, (I translate from the Journal du Palais):

"Navigation of all nations have sought for a long time the means of preventing, during the night, the collision of steamships, and to prevent accidents which are the consequence of these dangers. The difficulties of the matter and signals admitted to be in operation, even at this day, are not fully of that extent which might be desired."

Therefore it will be seen that our country, in providing for this system of lights, is but following the example set us by the French and English nations.

Now, I wish to state, in reference to this bill, that there may be some amendments which gentlemen may think, and which the House may think, proper to be adopted, but I trust that no gentleman who is not desirous of killing the bill at the outset will vote to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; because I properly, if it should be amended, as I believe are required and demanded by a majority of the House, to put them into a substitute and have the substitute adopted in the place of my original bill. I am aware that some objections were made to this bill at the last session upon constitutional grounds. In reply to that, I have only to say that this bill goes no further in any direction than the bills of 1838 and 1852. If this bill has in it any unconstitutional provisions, both in the bills had them; and, sir, one of those laws has been in operation for twenty-two years, and its constitutionality has never been questioned in any court of justice, and so far as I am aware, the question has never been raised.

I do not propose at this time to call the previous question. If any gentleman has objection to the bill and desires any information I possess, I am glad to be pleased to give it to him to the extent of my ability.

Mr. TAYLOR. The subject before the House is one of as great importance as can engage the attention of the Representatives of the American people. The object aimed at by the bill is worthy of consideration. It is to throw additional safeguards around the lives of citizens who are compelled to have recourse to the different methods of transportation by steam upon the navigable waters of the United States. This Government possesses certain powers over the subject, and it is eminently proper that those powers should be exerted for the benefit of the people.

It is well known to this House that since the increase of navigation by steam, and the increase of travel, owing to the additional facilities afforded to our people by the growth of population and the multiplication of the means of intercourse, the community has been afflicted, from time to time, by accidents that have carried mourning to every neighborhood, and that have caused the death of members of thousands of families within the limits of the Union. The frequency of occurrences of this sort, growing out of accidents upon our rivers, or upon our lakes and bays—sometimes from the explosion of boilers on steamboats, sometimes from collisions between steamboats, or between steamboats and other vessels, and sometimes from fire—led to legislation upon this subject in the year 1838. The legislation of 1838 was ineffectual. These accidents still continued to occur. Families were still distressed by such accidents happening to their members, and the whole community was agitated, from time to time, because of a sense of the insecurity of those who were required by their necessities to travel upon boats propelled by steam. In consequence of this, the Congress of the United States legislated again upon this subject in 1840. It adopted a variety of propositions in reference to the manner in which vessels should be built. It adopted a variety of regulations in reference to the manner in which machinery should be constructed, and in which it should be tested. It required the exercise of great diligence on the part of those who were intrusted with the navigation of vessels, on the part of those who were intrusted with the management of the engine and machinery, and on the part of the pilots. Still, notwithstanding the multiplication of regulations of this character; notwithstanding the multiplication of penalties inflicted upon those who were in charge of boats on which accidents of this sort occurred, accidents still recur, and not a week passes by in which some portion of our people is not thrown into mourning, and in which the country is not called upon to deplore the loss of some valuable citizen by these accidents.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these facts, which are within the knowledge of every member of this House, lead upon us to look to the subject again, and upon the if there is not some defect in our legislation. For my own part, Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to the subject, because I have at different periods of my life witnessed the dreadful effects of accidents of this description, and it was one of my fortune to be on one of our steamers on which there was great loss of human life from the explosion of the boiler.

Mr. HOARD. If the gentleman will allow me, and if he is not familiar with the subject himself, will explain to him where the defect in that regard lies.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have given great attention to the subject, and I will give my own views as to the cause. In the instance which came under my own observation, because my family and my wife were passengers, it was the negligence of the passengers on board that there had been criminal negligence; not only criminal negligence, but positive misconduct. The case to which I allude occurred on Lake Erie. The steamboat from Sandusky, where I embarked, had repeatedly failed to make its connection, and the owners of that particular boat were injured in business because of the bad reputation it was acquiring in consequence of those who embarked upon it not arriving at the port of Buffalo in time to make the railroad connection. Because of this, it became a matter of importance to the owners that the speed of the boat should be increased, and every art that could be had recourse to was had recourse to, for the purpose of increasing the head of steam, and giving additional speed to the boat. It was the result of this that the accident occurred. After midnight an explosion took place, which destroyed every human being that was in the neighborhood of the machinery and engaged in its management. Not a single being of them survived to tell the tale. Every passenger who was in the immediate neighborhood of the machinery was destroyed. The broken fragments of human bodies were to be seen at different parts of the boat. The charred remains were thrown out in sight of the survivors. The boat, which was a wreck on the boom of Lake Erie, was taken in tow by another boat belonging to the same line, which came across it, and was taken into the port of Erie. I believe it was so taken to that port for the purpose of avoiding or defeating investigation; for when the explosion took place the boat was opposite Dunkirk. The surviving passengers on the boat were sent on to Buffalo, their respective friends. They separated, and no inquiry was ever instituted. The persons who were guilty of the negligence, some of whom survived, also departed, and no prosecution was had. These persons who were in charge, and were guilty of negligence, were unworthy of justice. There was no compensation made to those who met with loss. There could be none, of course, made to those who had lost their friends by death.

In another instance, something similar to that I have just referred to occurred. I have since given much attention to this subject, and the result of my observations satisfies me that the difficulty does not grow out of the inadequacy of the provisions of the law in reference to the construction and equipment of boats or of the machinery, but out of the failure to enforce the law. That is the result, and the cause of it is always the fault of the owners of the boats, of the masters in charge, and of the officers intrusted with the conduct and management of the machinery, that there should be no investigation; and there is no opposing interest to that, and no inquiry into the facts and ascertain where the fault lies. Besides, there is another difficulty. The penalties that are imposed by law are never enforced, because, in these cases as in others where the criminal law is attempted to be applied, the principle of the criminal law, which is that the punishment should be of no doubt, always operates so as to lead to his discharge; and, therefore, though there have been hundreds of these accidents, in which the conviction in the public mind has been complete that the destruction of human life has been the result of negligence and improper conduct, there have been no prosecutions; and when there have been prosecutions, these prosecutions have always languished in jail. For my part, I have never yet known an instance in which a conviction under the provisions of the existing law has been had, or a penalty imposed by the law has been collected.

Now, I will call the attention of the House to one fact within my own knowledge which illustrates the difficulty, perhaps I ought to say the impossibility, of enforcing penalties against those who are, in truth, responsible; who are really amenable to our existing laws. Less than two years ago, on a moonlight night, there were two steamers engaged in making voyages between the ports of Galveston and New Orleans, in the Gulf of Mexico. One was on a voyage from New Orleans to Galveston, the other from Galveston to New Orleans. They met, and came in collision upon the Gulf about midway between the two ports, and one of them was sunk, and a large proportion of those on board went to watery grave. Prosecutions were instituted in New Orleans. The officers of both boats were indicted. And though the testimony of persons who were on board of the steamers at the time of the collision showed that the night was clear, and that persons upon each of the steamers could and did see the other, yet no person on either boat, neither the master nor the pilot who was in charge of the wheel—though it is certain that those on one or the other of the steamers were guilty—was convicted of any offense.

Under these circumstances, for myself I am inclined to say that you legislate in vain, and that in the direction in which you have gone, and that it will be in vain; that you will not protect human life, and that you will not increase in any appreciable degree the security of passengers upon our steamers. If we desire to accomplish that, we must take the other side, and the bill before us is desirable to accomplish it—to my mind it is clear that we must take a new step, that we must invoke a new principle, or we cannot succeed.

This I now propose to do; and with that view, Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a bill which I wish to present to the House, and which I believe will bill now before the House, and which contemplates legislative action in another direction, and upon a new principle. Its provisions are very simple. There are but three substantive provisions in it, which indicate the principle invoked. All the others are merely intended to obtain information and to provide means for enabling all those who have an interest in enforcing the existing provisions of law to do so.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 216) making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponce Indians, and with certain bands of Indians in the State of Oregon Territory; Washington, for the year ending June 30, 1860; when the Speaker signed the same.

STEAMBOAT PASSENGER BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. TAYLOR resumed the floor.
Mr. WINSLOW. With the permission of the gentleman from Louisiana, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether this bill was reported from a committee, or was introduced by himself.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WINSLOW. Then the gentleman has no power to modify the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I can offer a modified bill as a substitute.

Mr. WINSLOW. I should like to move an amendment to the bill, to insert after the word "Severnath" the words "Wilmington, North Carolina," so as to supply a local inspector for North Carolina, without which I cannot support the bill. As Galena has one, I think it proper that Wilmington should have one also. I suppose there can be no objection to that. The modification would be nothing but an act of justice and fairness.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. In answer to the gentleman from North Carolina, I will state that I know nothing in relation to the wants of the commerce of Wilmington. We have had no memorials or petitions on the subject before the Committee. I have no amendments, and I have had no consultation with the supervising inspectors, or with the Secretary of the Treasury, in regard to this matter. If the gentleman had brought forward his proposition, we should have given it a fair examination. I will admit to a well-known fairness and candor of my friend from North Carolina, he should come here at this very late day and insist upon the adoption of a provision of that kind, without any examination, or refuse to vote for the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman will do me the justice to state that I brought this matter to his attention, and to the attention of the Committee on Commerce, during the last Congress.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the gentleman from North Carolina can probably present his amendment at a future time, and that it can be then acted on.

Mr. WINSLOW. I was only asking the permission of the gentleman from Illinois to offer the amendment at the proper time. I should like to know if he will permit me to offer it before me, and to state the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. My friend from North Carolina very well knows that this bill cannot be regularly amended in the House. He knows that very much better than I do; because he is much more familiar with the rules than I am. He knows that it cannot be amended in that way.

Mr. WINSLOW. Well, then, would it be in order to move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. TAYLOR. I believe so.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will repeat, for the information of the gentleman from North Carolina, what I stated before, that I propose to get the sense of the House in this discussion in regard to various amendments, and if the sense of the House is in favor of the amendments, I propose to put them in a substitute, which I shall offer for the bill now before the House.

Mr. WINSLOW. I only desire to get a vote upon my amendment at some time or other.

Mr. TAYLOR. The proceeding, which I was interrupted, to state the sense of the bill which I propose to offer as a substitute for the one before the House. The principle upon which that bill is founded is embodied in the first three sections. It proposes to make the interests of men subservient to the protection of human life.

The first section declares that no owner of a steamboat shall be competent to effect an insurance upon his boat unless the requirements of law in relation to its building, and in relation to the fitting-up and construction of its machinery, and in relation to the employment of competent men, and the escape of passengers in the event of an accident, shall have been complied with. It declares, in effect, that if he does not obey the law, he shall not have the aid of the law to shield himself from loss. It prohibits him from insuring his vessel; it forbids him to employ an operator, it allows the underwriters, who have taken a risk upon such vessel, to have the policy of insurance granted by them vitiated and declared invalid if they show that there has been a failure in fact on the part of the owner to comply with the requirements of law. The second section proposes to make it the interest of all those who are engaged with the management of vessels engaged in the transportation of passengers, to give that care and attention which is due from them to the human beings whose safety is due to a certain extent, to the skill and to the capacity of common carriers. The second section provides that no master of a steamer who is in charge when a fire occurs which destroys the boat or leads to the loss of human life or serious injury to the passengers; that no engineer or crew who is in charge of the machinery, that explosion takes place, which occasions the destruction of human life or serious injury to passengers; that no pilot who is in charge of the wheel and the direction of the boat when a collision occurs which terminates either in the loss of the vessel or in such injury as destroys human life—that none of these various officers shall ever be again employed upon any steam vessel or steamboat unless there has been an actual prosecution at law and the verdict of the jury has not only acquitted him of the crime with which they are charged under our laws, in such cases, but has declared affirmatively that those persons—each in their respective capacities—had been guilty of no negligence or misconduct, and were absolutely free from blame. That is to say, instead of allowing persons in such situations to continue in such occupations, because there has been a failure to condemn them on account of the existence of a doubt, of which the accused is always entitled to the benefit, under our system of criminal law, they are absolutely and forever excluded from employment, in any capacity, or situation, unless the jury, upon all the evidence presented to them, not only refuses to find them guilty, but decides affirmatively that they are absolutely blameless and free from all capture when an indictment has been preferred; and unless, in such cases where no indictment has been preferred, the grand jury, whose duty it was to investigate the facts connected with any loss of life in such cases, shall not only refuse to find any bill of indictment, but shall positively declare, by a written report to the court, that they find the accused free from any misconduct, negligence, or intention in the premises.

The third section of this bill prohibits the owners of steamboats, or other vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, or other persons acting for them, from employing on such vessels any person who is excluded, under the provisions of the second section, from such employment; and if one so situated is employed on any such vessel, and the vessel should be lost or suffer injury while such person is employed, it then declares any policy of insurance, or contract, for the benefit and advantage of the owners, to be absolutely null and void, and takes away any right of action upon it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be thought that some of these provisions are too strict.

Mr. SICKLES. I wish to ask the gentleman from Louisiana one question in relation to the section of the bill upon which he has been commenting. I ask him whether, when he provides these disabilities upon those employed on vessels in the case of accidents, he contemplates a verdict shall have been rendered by a jury, he should not provide: "upon complaint first being made?" Otherwise he may be injustice to these men.

Mr. TAYLOR. The design of the section is to make it the interest of all the individuals connected in any way with one of these accidents to have a speedy investigation into the circumstances involved in it whilst the witnesses are in reach and the facts are recent; for without this their occupation is gone.

The other sections provide the means of having a record made of the names and positions of all those employed on vessels of this description before their departure from any port on a voyage; and to provide the machinery for the collection of accidents given, for making the names of the persons connected with them known, and for having the information in relation to those accidents placed in the hands of the district attorney of the United States, whose duty it is to prosecute, and for having them recorded also in all of the custom houses in the United States, so that the owners of steamboats, and all others having an interest in knowing them may have access to them, and have them in their reach. And this is right. The best interests of society require, imperatively demand, that we should, if people, make it the interest of all persons concerned to have these steamboat accidents fairly and properly investigated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the provisions in this bill contemplate such a change in our legislation as will require us to comply, in the future, with the law for the preservation of human life, the same principle to the transportation of passengers which has obtained in every system of legislation from the earliest age of the world to the transportation of merchandise. Common carriers, under the common law of civilized countries, are responsible for their exist now and as they have existed for unnumbered centuries, when they receive a bale of merchandise, which is inanimate, which cannot suffer pain, become absolutely responsible for its safe delivery. If it is lost or diminished in value while in their possession, all presumption is against them; and they cannot be relieved from their liability to the owner of the merchandise unless they show affirmatively that the loss or damage has been caused by the act of God or of the public enemy. The principle obtained in common law will become the principle of trade require that the most perfect security should be given to the merchant against the loss or deterioration of his merchandise whilst it is in the course of transportation. It is in the interest of trade alone that the presumption of law will stand against the merchant, or the owner of the common carrier. If such a presumption is created in the interest of trade to protect a merchant against the loss of his goods from the negligence of the person he intrusts them to for transportation, why, I would ask, is it that it should be in the interest of the society, for the preservation of its members when their persons are placed in his care for transportation? Well, sir, that is the precise purpose of this bill. The provisions of the bill have this effect, and no more. If one is in charge of a vessel when an accident occurs which is fatal to passengers, he is presumed to be in fault so far that he is excluded for the future from that species of employment, unless he shows himself to not have been in fault; and this is solemnly declared by the jury empowered to try the case, or the officer of a grand jury, in due course of law, upon inquiry into the facts of the case.

Now, for one, I am anxious that this evil shall be remedied; for one, I am persuaded that legislation of the character which we have heretofore been endeavoring to bring about, and which is contemplated by the bill which is now before the House, will be ineffectual. You may pile up provisions as long as you please in relation to the mode of building vessels, or in relation to the construction of machinery; these provisions will be wholly ineffectual, unless those who are employed as masters of vessels propelled by steam, as engineers, as pilots, will exercise the proper care. No law will be effectual to give security to passengers unless it is made the interest of many to it is the design of this bill to make the whole body of underwriters, all connected with the business of insurance, active in enforcing the penalties for violations of our laws regulating the construction of steamers and of their machinery, and providing for their proper equipment; and to make the masters of such vessels, and the engineers and pilots employed on them exercise all possible care for the safe carriage of all who intrust themselves to their care. What it is the interest of men to do, that they are pretty sure to do. That is a principle of human nature.

If the provisions of the bill I have prepared are adopted, it becomes the interest of owners to comply with all the provisions of the law in relation to the construction of vessels and to their equipment. It becomes the interest of underwriters, those who take risks on steam vessels, to watch over the process of building and to inquire into every case of disobedience of the law. It becomes the interest of every individual who is connected with all the care within his power to prevent accident; for if unhappily an accident occurs while the engineer is in charge, or while the pilot is in charge, or while the master is in charge—any accident leading to the loss of human life—then the person who is in charge is afterwards excluded from the occupation he is engaged in, unless there is an investigation into the facts connected with the accident and there is a full declaration that he not only is not guilty, but that he is positively free from blame.

Now, sir, for one I am satisfied that the interest of society requires that we should depart from the beaten track; that we should attempt to invoke some new principle; that we should attempt to strike out some new line of legislation for the purpose of creating a new era in the history of the world, which common justice and the public interest require.

Mr. STEWART, of Maryland. Will the gentleman from Louisiana be good enough to state to the House what is the difference between his measure and the measure reported by the committee on Commerce? What is the gentleman's objection to the pending bill?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have not that acquaintance with the subject which would enable me to speak with any certainty in relation to the provisions of the bill relating to the construction of vessels or the arrangement of machinery. The amendment I propose is designed to enforce existing laws. It would as well operate, no matter what legislation was afterwards had in relation to the construction of vessels, to give a new view of securing additional safeguards providing new means to secure escape in the event of accident. I am perfectly indifferent whether it be adopted as an amendment, or whether it be adopted as a substitute. My own action is, that it will make our present law more perfect, and it will be a good substitute. Without its adoption, however, I do not believe that any additional legislation will give any increased security.

My only objection has been to call the attention of the House to the principle of this bill. I wish to present to them the importance of the subject, and to state my convictions in relation to the inefficiency of the existing laws, and my convictions that any amount of legislation in the same direction would still be ineffectual, unless we take a step in a new direction and invoke the principle of human interest in the protection of human life. And having done this, I will detain the House no longer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are, I think, Mr. Speaker, a good many objections to this bill, and I ask the gentleman to state to the House whether it would not be the better course, instead of considering it in the House, to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it can be fully perfected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Missouri. I will call the attention of the House to a vote taken on an amended rule, which I had lost sight of when I was upon the floor. If the gentleman will refer to the 50th rule of the House, as it was amended the other day, he will see that this bill can be considered and acted upon in the House with just as large facilities as it can be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; that it can be perfected as well here as it can be in the Committee of the Whole. Here is that rule as amended, and I call the gentleman's particular attention to it.

§ 50. The previous question shall be in this form: "Shall the main question be now put?" It shall only be adopted when demanded by a majority of the members present; and its effect shall be to put an end to all debate, and to bring the House to a direct vote upon a motion to commit, if such motion shall have been made; and if that motion does not prevail, then upon amendments reported by a committee, if any, then upon pending amendments, and then upon the main question. But its effect will be, if a motion to postpone is pending, that the House shall not be brought to a vote upon the main question. Whenever the House shall refuse to order the main question, the consideration of the bill shall be deemed as the case of the previous question had been made. The House may also, at any time, on motion seconded by a majority of the members present, close all tained, but the fees are not. At present, the fees received into the Treasury are little over $30,000, and the expenses are $61,000. Now this bill increases the expenses some $20,000, making the whole expense exceed $100,000, while the fees received may be $30,000 only.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If this act will make the cost $20,000 more, and will increase the fees received $30,000, what difference does it make?

Mr. CRAWFORD. But the Treasury will not receive $30,000 more in fees. The relative proportions, at least, must be the same. Taken under any circumstances, the amount of the amount of fees received in the Treasury; but it will also increase the amount of the expenses very greatly, as heretofore shown.

These are some of the objections which I have to the bill. The first section of the bill is objectionable, because it interferes with the rights of the States.

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, is aware that I concur with the gentleman from Georgia in the objection which he has just put forward; but the first section of the bill has a very little doubt that the gentleman from Illinois will be as ready now, as he declared he was two years ago, to consent to such an amendment of the twenty-eighth section of the bill as will remove the objection from the gentleman from Georgia and myself. I beg leave to call his attention to what occurred then.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I recollect the objection which was urged to that section when the bill was last under consideration, and in consequence of the feeling which some gentlemen seemed to manifest, I consented to an amendment to this twenty-eighth section, by striking out certain words. I am entirely willing, if gentlemen insist on it now, and if it will satisfy their objection, that the amendment may be made when we reach the section.

Mr. MILLSON. Then the gentleman consents now, as he intimated his readiness to do in 1858, to strike out the words in the twenty-eighth section:

"Upon waters which are navigable from the ocean by a direct and unobstructed channel, and upon the coast, or upon a lake or river whose waters are navigable by vessels registered or enrolled and licensed, as aforesaid, and from the houses or wharves of the United States or Territories, or of one or more States or Territories, and a foreign country."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I consented to that on the motion, I think, of the gentleman himself, when the bill was considered by the last Congress. I think I consented to the striking out of these words.

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman did so. I am from the gentleman's remarks then:

"I propose to make the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Virginia; and I make the further remark, that this section was drawn up by my friend from Virginia, in consultation with the gentleman from the Buffalo district of New York, [Mr. Haven]. Last winter, and for the very purpose of avoiding that objection."

And, if made, I trust it will avoid all objection, and, if made, I trust it will avoid the objection of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am entirely willing to make it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman will allow me to say that I have amendments which I desire to offer to this bill. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. TAYLOR] has intimated his purpose to offer a substitute for the bill; and, therefore, for the purpose of testing the sense of the House on the question, I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman will allow me to ask one question. I wish to know if my bill is now in such a position as that it will be considered as offered as a substitute?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I trust that, by the consent of the House, the bill of the gentleman from Louisiana will be considered as offered, and that he will have a vote upon it. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McKNIGHT. I prefer that the bill of the gentleman from Louisiana should be offered as an amendment. It strikes me that we should perfect the original bill. I have an amendment to offer when it shall be in order to do so.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I appeal to the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw his motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and let us proceed to the consideration of the bill by sections. Gentlemen can offer their amendments, and we can get rid of it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I prefer to take it as it is. Mr. CLARK, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will permit further discussion at this stage of the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. I was going to second the appeal of the gentleman from Illinois. We can certainly, under the new rule, complete the bill as well in the House as in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. This measure will be pending here for several years. It has been a special order time and again. The act of 1852 ought either to be repealed or amended. I am for amending the law. We have got an act now before us. The whole subject is before the House; and it does seem to me that we can consider it as well in the House as in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and so dispose of a question that has been pending here for the last four years—ever since my service in Congress began. I hope the bill will be acted on and disposed of now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will state very frankly to the gentleman from Kentucky, that I am not a friend of this bill; and I desire to make such a motion in relation to it as will be the strongest looking to its defeat. I apprehend that a question to lay the bill on the table would not be so strong as the motion which I have made, to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It is for that reason that I have submitted the motion.

In reply to the gentleman from New York, I would say that, unless the debate shall be limited upon this bill, he will be entitled to discuss and amend it in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. We shall not be limited in the Committee of the Whole to five minutes' discussion until after the House shall first limit the debate to a certain length of time after the consideration of the subject is resumed.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I propose to discuss some of the features of this bill; but I am indifferent when I do it.

Mr. BURNETT. I wish to say to gentlemen who desire to amend the act of 1852—and no one who has examined it will disagree with me in the proposition that that act ought to be amended—that the reference of this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would, in my judgment, be its death. I do not myself wish the bill as it is reported by the Committee on Commerce; but I am satisfied that there is legislation needed, in order to amend and perfect the act of 1852. If this House will not amend that act; if we will not give additional legislation for the protection, not only of commerce itself, but of the lives of passengers upon vessels; if we will not do that, then we ought to repeal the act of 1852.

I do not propose to discuss this measure at length. It has received the attention of two Committees of the Whole, and I do not agree to the

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Of three.

Mr. BURNETT. It has received the consideration of three committees of this House. It has been submitted, I believe, to two Secretaries of the Treasury. It has undergone the scrutiny of the board of superintendents. It comes before us with all the sanctions, at least, of a thorough investigation. Then let us take up the measure, section by section, in the House. If the bill is defective, as contended by the gentleman from Georgia, let us amend it section by section, and dispose of it in some way. The gentleman from Georgia is candid enough to tell us that he is the enemy of the bill, and desires to kill it. Do not, then, let us send it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it will never be heard of again. I hope the House will not agree to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GARTRELL. Before the motion is put, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether this bill was unanimously reported to the Committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It was, sir. Mr. GARTRELL. At the last Congress and at this?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir. Mr. GARTRELL. And it has been recommended by two Secretaries of the Treasury—has it not?

Mr. KEITT. Did any one ever read the bill except the chairman of the committee?

Mr. GARTRELL. I will send my friend from South Carolina, that being a little attentive to my business, I read it and the report too; and I am prepared to vote for it with the amendments indicated by the gentleman from Illinois; believing, as I do, that it is a salutary measure, and one demanded by the interests of the great masses of the people of the country, although opposed by monopolists, comprising the ship-owners of certain latitudes.

Mr. BURNETT. I am not sufficiently familiar with the rules of the House to understand whether a motion of this character would take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Georgia; but, if it is in order, I desire to move that the bill be taken up, section by section, and considered in the House.

Mr. KEITT. Is not the motion of the gentleman from Georgia first in order?

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union must be first decided according to the rules.

Mr. MILES. Before this question is put upon the motion, I would like to see the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in what respects this bill differs from the one reported by the committee in the last Congress? I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Commerce of the last Congress, and I am sure that the bill reported with some care, but I have had no opportunity of examining this bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will state to my honorable friend from South Carolina that there are no material alterations in the bill.

Mr. MILES. It is substantially the same as the bill which I proposed to offer as a substitute for the bill of last session.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in what respects this bill differs from the one reported by the committee in the last Congress?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not know whether the gentleman understood me or not, but I said so.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Did you say that Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I said that as I understood it, it received the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. NIXON. My impression with reference to the bill is that the chairman of the committee was authorized to report it without any sort of commitment on the part of the other members of the committee, as to whether we would support it or oppose it in the House. I appeal to my friend from New York, [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE] if that was not his understanding?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That is how I understand it. There was no dissent expressed by any member of the committee; but it was understood that if any gentleman saw anything in the bill on further reflection that he disapproved, he was at liberty to say so.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I understood that the chairman had authority from the committee merely to report the bill.

Mr. SICKLES. When this bill was up before the last Congress, I intended to send it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, not because I was opposed to the principle of the bill, but because I thought that it introduced new regulations with regard to the commerce of the country, which ought to be carefully considered by this House. I think that this interest which has occurred has proved that the provisions of the bill are, in the main, salutary, and that its passage into a law would be accepted with gratitude by the country.

Upon this subject, Mr. Speaker, we must adopt one of two principles: either to leave commerce, with reference to the safety of human life, entirely to the vigilance of interested parties, either ship-owners or passengers; or we must make this the subject of wise and careful governmental regulations. We cannot do the latter, unless we begin by leaving every one to look out for himself; or, if we agree that that is not wise, in view of past experience, we must avail ourselves of the result of experience and experiment, and embody into a statute such legislation as experience has shown to be best calculated to prevent the disasters which have become so frequent upon the sea and rivers.

While, sir, I am one of those always reluctant to interfere by governmental regulation where it is possible for private vigilance or private interest to protect itself, I do believe that the experience of all commercial nations—our own among others—has demonstrated that the wisdom of Congress should avail itself of the experience of the commercial world, and do something more than has yet been done for the protection of human life upon the sea, and upon the waters generally of this country.

Sir, let me call the attention of the House to a general observation which is made with reference to the safety to steam vessels in this country and in European countries. It is that probably more accidents occur upon the rivers of this country and upon the sea in American vessels than in those of any other country. Something of this may be attributed to another truth: the proverbial recklessness of Americans with reference to their personal safety in traveling.

But, sir, I call the attention of the House to the very great difference which exists between the vigilance employed by the Government of this country and the vigilance employed by the Governments of the European commercial countries, in reference to the safety of passenger vessels. Let me call the attention of the House to a very recent proof of the extreme care with which other Governments look upon the safety of their vessels. Five million dollars and more was expended in the construction of the Great Eastern, that marvel of the world. Upon that vessel were brought to bear all the resources of naval architecture which modern times had developed; upon that vessel was developed every improvement which science had discovered in reference to engines and machinery—every improvement which had been suggested in reference to the safety of passengers, and their comfort and convenience. What next? When the vessel was subjected to the examination of the English board of trade, they would not allow her to be cleared; and the reason was not defective in the machinery, but that they could not give her a certificate, without which she could not effect an insurance, or be cleared from a British port; because, in their judgment, great as had been the skill expended upon her, and lavish as had been the expenditure, she was not deficient in the necessary equipment of a country no such restriction would have been imposed. Vessels may be constructed according to the caprice of any owner, and they may be sent to sea without any governmental supervision except the very imperfect one provided by the act of 1852, in reference to the machinery; and it is that this striking contrast is exhibited in the fostering care exercised by the two Governments over human life, safety, and comfort, in traveling by steam over the sea; hence it is that we are obliged to confess—republish as that by reason is to our country, and injurious as it is to the prosperity of our commerce—that our steam vessels are fast disappearing from the sea, and giving place to similar craft constructed in other countries. Passengers instinctively, with a due regard to their own safety, prefer foreign-built vessels to American-built vessels.

Now, sir, freight soon follows passengers, and the mail soon follows passengers and freight; and the commerce of the world soon follows in the same channel indicated by passengers, mail, and freight, in the preference of foreign transportation. I hope, therefore, that this subject will be entered upon seriously by this House; that it will not be consigned to oblivion, or subjected to the delay that would come on its being sent to the Committee on Commerce. While the bill is pending, I hope that the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. WARREN, of Illinois], accompanied with as much force by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRANNETT], will be acted upon; that we shall take up the subject in the House, consider it, and pass it by action, and dispose of it within a reasonable time. I think by so doing we will only meet a just public expectation, and perform a high public duty.

Mr. CLARK, of New York, obtained the floor. Mr. BRANNETT. If the gentleman from New York is not particular in his opinion, in the consideration of the bill at which he makes his remarks, I ask him to allow the question now to be taken upon the proposition to refer the bill, and he will then be entitled to the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I prefer that the gentleman from New York shall submit his remarks now. I think perhaps the remarks he may submit will have some influence with the House in their decision of the question of reference.

Mr. MILES. If the gentleman from New York has no particular desire to submit his remarks at this point, I hope he will give way.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. On the whole, I think I had better go on and present my remarks. Mr. Speaker, the bill which is the subject of consideration to-day must be conceded to be one of unusual importance. It affects directly the great commercial interests of the country. It deals with every branch of our industry which is concerned in, or connected with, the navigation by steam of our lakes, rivers, and harbors. It reaches, sir, beyond these fields of inland commerce, and brings within its grasp the whole steam tonnage of the United States employed in the navigation of the ocean. The amount in value of the property which is sought to be subjected to its enactment is so large, and the number of our citizens whose interests are to be affected by it, should it become a law, is so considerable, that I am constrained to concur with gentlemen in the opinion that the bill and its several provisions are entitled to the most serious attention of the House.

The title of the bill must be regarded as a taking one; for surely no gentleman upon this floor can fail to sympathize with any well-directed effort towards increasing the security of human life. All the enterprises which are engaged in, in which life is exposed upon that peculiar element, which, while we have been enabled to subject it to our use, we have as yet been unable to reduce to our control.

If the honorable gentleman from Illinois shall have succeeded by the scheme of his bill in depriving the seas of their ancient terrors, he will have rendered a distinguished service to his race, and have securely laid the foundation of perennial fame.

I feel, sir, as the gentleman has doubtless felt, regret that the limitation of debate, which results from the hour rule, forbids the effort to bring before the House the field of examination and inquiry necessarily opened by the provisions of this bill. The most that I can attempt is to state the contents of the bill, to suggest the advantages of its proposed provisions, and to call the attention of the House to the alterations proposed, and to the practical effect of the proposed alterations upon the commerce which is the subject of our action.

All the acts of Congress regulating the carriage of passengers by vessels propelled by sails or steam extend back to about the year 1819, when, if I mistake not, the first act regulating passenger ships was passed. Congress seems to have then asserted full power over the whole subject of ocean transportation; and it may now be too late to question the existence of the power, or to attempt to place limits upon its exercise. I have not time to enter upon the discussion of that branch of the subject. From 1819 down to 1855, various enactments were passed having reference to the general subject of passenger transportation upon the ocean.

In the year 1855, an act was passed entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers," &c., in which was contained a substantial repeal of all the existing laws relating to passenger transportation upon the ocean, except the statute of July 7, 1838, and August 30, 1852. These two acts have special reference to vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and, together with the act of 1855, to which I have referred, and which by one of its sections was made in some particulars, applicable to steam vessels, remain in force.

In these acts of 1838, 1852, and 1855, are to be found embodied the existing laws regulating passenger carriers on our inland waters and upon the sea.

The act of 1838 was passed before the problem of the practicability of the navigation of the ocean by steam was fully solved, and its provisions were chiefly confined to the establishment of a system of inspection of the hulls, boilers, and machinery of steam vessels on the lakes, bays, lakes, and rivers of the United States.

The inspectors, whose offices were created by that act, are appointed by the district judge of the United States within whose district any ports of entry or delivery may be, and their compensation is derivable from fees allowed them for the annual inspection of hulls and the semi-annual inspection of the boilers and machinery provided for by the act. These fees are paid by the owner and master of the vessel, and were fixed by the act at five dollars for each inspection. This act entailed no expense upon the public Treasury. Its machinery was simple and its provisions clear and well defined. The persons appointed by the act as inspectors have been the means of securing the faithful execution of the law. So far as my knowledge extends, there is no substantial ground of complaint against it.

The act of 1852 was an amendment of that of 1838, to which I have referred, but of more drastic proportions. Founded upon the same policy which dictated that of 1838, and with the same professed objects, it brought into being a new set of inspectors, clothed with vast powers, and rendered capable, by reason of its peculiar provisions, of becoming the possessors of vast revenue. From the small beginnings of the act of 1838 has arisen the magnificent system of steamship and steamboat inspection which now prevails in these United States—a system gigantic as the commerce of the country, provided for by a body of men who, by means of the extraordinary extension of their governmental charter, exercise to-day a power over the maritime and commercial interests of our people, of the extent of which many of the members of this honorable body have no conception.

This act of 1852 has relation as well to steamers registered as enrolled, and the powers of the inspectors created by it now extend to every description of vessel propelled in whole or in part by steam, and owned by a citizen of the United States, to which is excepted the machinery of ferry-boats, tug-boats, tow-boats, and steamers, not exceeding one hundred and fifty tons burden, used in whole or in part for canal navigation. These descriptions of steamers are exempt from the operation of the act of 1852. They remain under the supervision of the inspectors created by the act of 1838. Public vessels of the United States and vessels of other countries are also exempt from the act of 1852. But, with these exceptions, not one single steamer's wheel can turn without the approbation of these gentlemen first had and obtained.

I do not purpose to examine in detail the provisions of the act of 1852, for it is not essential that I should do so for any purpose, and that is to satisfy the House, if I can, that no good reason exists why the act of 1852 should be extended over the humble craft which were expressly exempted from its reach by its forty-second section.

I am not apprised of any public grievance which can be remedied by this proposed extension of the act of 1852. I am not aware that any advantage can accrue to our people by reason of the transfer to the inspectors appointed under this act, of the powers and duties conferred by the act of 1838 upon the inspectors therein directed to be appointed by the district judges. The same considerations which impelled the Congress of 1852 to exempt this small craft from subjection to the cumbersome machinery of the act of that year, operate with increased force in favor of the continuance of such exemption. It is true that the powers of the inspectors existing under the act of 1852, have been greatly increased if this scheme shall be adopted; but I can conceive of no advantages to result therefrom, except to the inspectors themselves.

It may well be questioned whether Congress has the constitutional power to lay its hand upon the fees which in many of the States are run under licenses granted by municipalities—and subject them to the control and management of the inspectors appointed by the act of 1852. The city of New York holds ferry franchises under a charter older than the Constitution itself, and must be presumed to be competent to make such rules and regulations as are essential to the safe management of the tug-boats, tow-boats, and ferries, in which ply in the harbor of New York and upon her great river.

I can see no good reason justifying the delegation by Congress to this board of inspectors of the power of making rules and regulations governing the small craft. The ostensible scheme of this bill is to provide for the safety of passengers on steam vessels. These tugs, tow-boats, and freight-boats do not carry passengers. Interference with them cannot, therefore, be conducive to the alleged purpose of this bill. By the proposed act, Congress will subject them to more and different inspection, and their owners to new expenditures; but I think to no useful purpose.

Under the provisions of the act of 1859, the inspectors appointed thereunder are authorized to examine and license all pilots of steamers carrying passengers, and by the tenth section of the act it is declared unlawful for any person to employ, or any person to serve, as pilot on any such steamer, who is not licensed by the inspectors.

By the thirty-first section of the act the pilot is required to pay to the inspectors, (for the use of the United States, as I understand the bill), for their license, the sum of five dollars upon the granting, and the further sum of one dollar for each renewal of the certificate of license.

This seems a trifling tax; but I am unable to discover any other reason why Congress should prohibit the owner of a steam-tug or freight-boat not carrying passengers, plying about our harbors, from selecting himself the pilot or engineer to whose care he sees fit to intrust the management of his business, and to whose prudence he subjects the safe-keeping of his property. I am quite unable to appreciate the wisdom of the policy which would impose such restrictions upon this petty commerce.

I have prepared and submit a statement of the increased expense of the execution of this proposed law, over and above that of the act of 1859:

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether there is no restriction as to the number of passengers carried by the Eastern mail steamers to New York?

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Not by tonnage. There may be by space.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. I notice that the Persia does not carry a greater number of passengers than the Vanderbilt.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. In that trade I think all the ships can carry all that apply. This thirteenth section of the bill does not operate oppressively on such ships as the Persia and the Vanderbilt. It would still permit such large ships as the Atlantic voyagers ordinarily offering. It is a smaller class of steamers that strikes those of from one thousand to eighteen hundred tons. When honorable gentlemen say that they are in favor of the people against the monopolists, I feel that I can assure them that such measures as this do not aid the people. They may discourage the capitalist; but it is very difficult even by a scheme as palpably unjust and oppressive as this, to strike down all the advantages of accumulated wealth.

Now, I will illustrate the practical effect of this proposed change in the law upon one particular passenger-carrying trade—one which has been at times remunerative, and may be still regarded as a compensating enterprise to the capital employed in it: a trade conducted exclusively by American coast steamers. I refer to the steamship trade between our Atlantic and Pacific States.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman who has the control of that entire trade this side of Panama?

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure. The control of that trade on the Atlantic side is in the hands of a corporation created by a law of the State of New York, and known as the Atlantic and Pacific Steamship Company. The control of that trade upon the Pacific side is in the hands of a corporation also created by a law of the State of New York, and known as the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; and the carrying trade across the Isthmus of Panama is in the hands of a corporation also created by the State of New York, and known as the Panama Railroad Company. The capital embarked in the entire enterprise exceeds ten million dollars.

Now, this trade is undoubtedly worth preserving. You may do what you please about the Atlantic trade; you cannot wound deeply in that quarter. You may make a law, if you see fit, providing that no American citizen shall cross the Atlantic ocean in an American steamer. I should, of course, vote against it; but, at the same time, it would not do much harm. But it would be unfortunate if your legislation should paralyze this branch of the coasting trade. That trade is carried on by steamships of about eighteen hundred tons; and those steamers, under the law as they now exist, (the tonnage allowance being reduced by the space requisition of the act of 1855,) can carry seven hundred and fifty passengers. The average price of passage from New York to California is $110, including the Isthmus transit, the price of which is $25.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman be good enough to state what length of time this service has been running? The price was five or six hundred dollars a short time ago.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I heard the gentleman make that statement in his opening speech in support of this bill, and designed to suggest to him to correct it. He has been advocating this measure, as I am informed, for four or five years; but if he had made inquiry upon the subject, he would have been informed that, for eight years at least, the price has not been as high as he has stated. It is true that, on the first opening of the California trade, the price was very high; but competition intervened, and the price fell at once to $300. It has very frequently fluctuated, but always below $300. Within a year past it has been down to fifty dollars. Yes, sir; these "wealthy monopolists," of whom gentlemen speak, have carried passengers from New York to San Francisco, and back, for twenty miles, for fifty dollars, and often for forty dollars; paying, therefrom, twenty-five dollars to the Panama railroad company; and receiving, of course, but the remaining fifteen or twenty dollars for the carrying and boarding the passenger on the voyage.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Certainly. Mr. SCOTT. It is well known during the last Congress, of which I had the honor to be a member, I delivered a speech in regard to the bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois. Now, sir, I know full well that in the early history of my State, as the gentleman alleges, the price of the passage from New York to San Francisco was from five to seven hundred dollars. A certain company, known as the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which has been recognized and acknowledged as a monopoly in that State, had the price put at $750 or $300.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. That was in the cabin, I suppose.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir; $300 first class, and $150 in the steerage. Now, I am willing to concede, that when the Vanderbilt line was placed on, and came in competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, no long as the competition existed, the price went down to fifty dollars in the steerage; in the first class to $100; and in the second class to seventy-five dollars. But I wish to call attention to the fact that the Vanderbilt and Pacific Mail Steamship Companies have since been consolidated; and though it is true, as the gentleman says, that the prices are lower than they were under the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, I tell him that they have risen—in the steerage, from fifty dollars to $100; and in the first class, from $100 to $300. Now, I do not know what guarantee he can give me that the present existing line will not feed upon and prostrate California interests, as former ones have done. I have no confidence in these monopolies.

So far as this matter in regard to carrying one passenger for every two tons is concerned, the gentleman confessed in a portion of his remarks, just now, that they carried as many as they could get.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. In the European steamers.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, they carry as many as they can get in the California steamers, too. I have crossed the Isthmus of Panama eight times, and I am willing to certify on my responsibility that an ordinary steamer of one thousand tons, carrying five hundred passengers, it carries from twelve to fifteen hundred, packing them as sheep and hogs are carried to market.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Well, they must do so under the existing law.

Mr. SCOTT. They will violate the law.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Then it is hardly worth while to legislate further on the subject.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think it is, so far as the monopolists in New York are concerned. None but wealthy men can get to California by these steamers. We get our population—the population we want—from the Northwest; the men who bring their picks and their shovels, and their wives and families in wagons.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Before gentlemen determine to strike at this trade, let them look at the statistics, and consider the practical operation of this proposed change of the law upon the earnings of the classes of steamers employed in it.

When it is suggested that any particular branch of industry should be protected, we always inquire as to the effect of the deprivation of the protection sought upon the particular industry. With equal justice, when it is proposed to enact a law to reduce the amount of the gross earnings of a ship in a particular trade, by reducing her capacity so that she will be unable to carry as many passengers as she is now capable of carrying, we are warranted in inquiring as to the effect of the injury we shall inflict upon the particular branch of industry which needs to be crippled.

Now, take a steamer of one thousand tons. Under the law, as it existed when she was built, and as the law exists to-day, she can carry five hundred passengers. She is fitted up and equipped to accommodate that number. If in the California trade, and a full complement of passengers offers, she can earn (at the present average price of $110) for her round voyage, the sum of $110,000. Deducting the railroad fare for five hundred passengers out, and for the same number home, at $25, there would be left for the ship, as her gross receipts, the sum of $65,000.

Under the restriction proposed by the thirteenth section of the bill, she can carry but two hundred and eighty-five passengers. She would then have the capacity to earn, for her round voyage, the sum of $62,700. Deducting the railroad fare for her two hundred and eighty-five passengers out and home, there would be left for the ship, as her gross earnings, the sum of $48,450. The statement in gross receipts which would result to that steamship, from this change in the law, would therefore be $36,550 for her round voyage.

Now take a steamer of eighteen hundred tons. Under existing laws, she can carry seven hundred and fifty passengers, but allowance for tonnage rule being reduced, as she has been advertised, by the space requisition of the act of 1855. If a full complement shall offer, she can earn, at present prices, for her round voyage, $165,000. Deducting $27,500, the amount of the railroad fares of her passengers out and home, there would be left for the ship, as her gross earnings, the sum of $137,500.

Under the restriction of the thirteenth section of this bill, she can carry but five hundred and fourteen passengers, and by the same rule of computation her gross receipts would be reduced, after deducting railroad fare, to $87,380; thus making a difference against her of $40,120 for her round voyage.

The corporations associated in this trade, and forming a continuous line to San Francisco, and from the ports of New York and San Francisco three steamships per month. Upon each of these voyages, this proposed change of the law will work a similar diminution of the number of the steamships upon the two oceans would, therefore, under this law, be deprived of upwards of a million dollars per annum. The expenses of the voyages are not, of course, correspondingly reduced. The only diminution of expense would be that resulting from the provisioning of a less number of passengers on the voyage. The expenses of the ship, for coal, wages, &c., and the general expenses of the business, would remain undiminished.

Now, if this mischief is to be done, the inquiry naturally arises, what particular interest is to be benefited, and which is to suffer? The scheme is to help the poor against the rich, is it? Let us examine this suggestion. I know that it may be deemed by some the road to popular favor in these days to clamor against the wealthy; others may deem it the road to worldly success, and the rich as oppressing the poor. I have no doubt that there are masses of men who would be willing any Saturday night to divide up the wealth of the community. But I was surprised to hear in this place that the same persons who would be so ready to divide up the wealth of the community, as the gentleman shall have secured the passage of a law which must deeply injure a great branch of trade, somebody must suffer. Who is it that will sustain the loss? At the rates of passage now established, the steamers engaged in the California trade could not live. Under this law, they could not pay for the coal they burn, the wages and disbursements, and the provisions which the passengers consume. Who will finally feel this loss? It will fall upon the poor, who will be made more honorable and free, while he is engaged in this crusade in behalf of the people against the "wealthy monopolists," that the blow may recoil upon the people, for the plain, palpable effect must be, either to drive the American steamers out of the trade, or compel their owners to double their rate of passenger fare, and thus my friend from California [Mr. Scott] may lose a portion of his honored constituency.

Mr. SCOTT. Upon that subject I desire to call the gentleman's attention to a letter which I received from Mr. Augustus Schell, the collector of the port of New York, from which it appears that in two years there sailed from the port of New York for California, twenty thousand and ninety-five passengers; and arrived at that port from California in the same period of time, twenty thousand one hundred and sixty-one passengers—making a difference of about three thousand. But when you take into consideration the number lost by sickness on the Isthmus, and the number whose destination was South America and Central America, I believe that the aggregate gain of population to California, through this medium, was not five hundred persons in the two years.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Well, sir, I was going on to say that if it proposed to strike still another blow at the carrying and boarding the carriage trade. It is proposed to take from them the carrying of the mails, for which service a large sum has heretofore been paid by the Government, and to send them overland.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman does not find that in this bill.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. No, sir; but I find it in another bill which is pending before the House, reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Well, I do not intend to say that. I think that it is well enough to try the experiment of sending the mails by land if the proposition shall be ascertained to be practicable and as economical as the present plan of transmission.

Now, let me say to my friend from California, that I presume, notwithstanding what he has said about the high rate of passenger carriage, he does not wish to see the ocean steamer communication between New York and California broken down, at least until one of the railroads to the Pacific coast shall have been constructed; certainly not until there has been established, by some means, a more frequent communication across the plains than now exists; and I take it for granted that he has no desire to see the price of passage by the ocean route cut off by the gentleman here referred to. I am informed of a cheaper rate of transportation than can be elsewhere found upon the face of the globe. The rates are now established at $200 for first class, $150 for second class, and $100 for the third class. If your bill becomes a law, if Congress shall be so good as to reduce the capital employed in this trade as to reduce the carrying capacity of our ocean steamers nearly fifty per cent., then the rates will rise. Somebody must pay, and my friend from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] may yet be misled by some of his constituents that when he was hitting at the monopolists, he was really hitting his constituents. This sort of legislation is unjust to the ship-owners, whom you have encouraged by your laws, and who, by the whole course of your legislation from the foundation of the Government, have been led to believe that their capital might be safely invested in the carrying trade; and that if you would not protect, you would refuse to destroy. It is not right to make this law applicable to ships already built, and now running in accordance with existing law. If the House should fit to make this law applicable to steamers hereafter to be built, I do not know that there will be objection to it. Ships are built to carry passengers and to carry freight. I admit that the less the number of people who go to sea, the less will be the number liable to be drowned in shipwrecks. If you seek to save the lives of every one of our American people from that danger, you ought to prohibit them all from going to sea at all. That is the motto by which you would reach the root of this alleged evil, and make a substantial improvement in the bills of American mortality. I submit it to the intelligence of the House whether it is just, or even expedient, that a provision so radical, that a change so enormous, shall take effect upon steamers long used in accordance with and in behalf of which we contend that they have secured vested rights against this kind of legislative invasion?

Mr. Speaker, there are features of this bill not yet referred to in this debate, which certainly require careful attention. There is a series of provisions, designed for the security of life in case of shipwreck or other accident incident to the sea. The twelfth and fourteenth sections of the bill provide that every seagoing steamer shall have on board a sufficient quantity of lumber to make rafts adequate to carry one half of the maximum number of passengers and crew, specified in the certificate of the inspectors, and boats enough to carry the residue. This seems somewhat plausible at first impression; and I am not aware that ship-owners would object to an equitable precaution, having in view reasonable security for human life in case of accident. But the fact is not as disregarded, that passenger ships have not as yet been so constructed, in any part of the known world, as to enable boats and lumber to be in an indefinite extent to be carried in such manner as to be at all times instantly available. If Congress shall see fit to insist on this novel requirement, it is difficult to understand upon what principle foreign steamers and sailing ships, carrying American citizens from our own ports, ought to be relieved from its application. The lives of Americans are as worthy of protection from casualties to foreign ships, as from accidents which may happen to ours. English steamers carry boats in accordance with the provisions of an act of Parliament. The law of England on this subject has some regard to the construction of a ship, and some reference to the interests of commerce. It requires that a ship shall carry boats in proportion to her tonnage; but that, under no circumstances, shall she be required to carry a greater number of boats than are necessary to preserve the lives of the passengers and crew on board. This would seem to be a sensible rule. The object of running a steamer is not to carry boats or lumber. You may fill her with lumber and boats, and if she has no passengers there will be no passengers to save. The object of carrying boats is to save life; and it would seem to be practical wisdom that we should regulate the number of boats a ship must carry by the actual number of passengers on board. The bill now before us requires that a number of boats a ship shall carry, not with reference to her actual passengers and crew, but with reference to the maximum number she is by law permitted to carry. Thus, if a ship can, under the law, carry one thousand passengers, and is in fact but fifty, this act would require her to carry boats enough to save five hundred, and rafts enough to save five hundred more. In there, Mr. Speaker, any practical navigator who would not smile upon reading the special provisions of the fourth section. But the law of 1852 does not provide that any of the inspectors shall be a seafaring man, or familiar with the incidents of marine disaster, when man must rely for his safety upon the providence of God, and the precautions of men become tantamount to unavailing.

[Here the speaker fell.]
Mr. CRAWFORD. I have been requested by gentlemen upon both sides of the House to withdraw the motion I submitted that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to ask the yeas and nays on the question on Commerce whether he will agree to a postponement of the further consideration of the bill for two weeks from this day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. WATSON in the chair.) A motion to postpone is in order upon this bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that gentlemen will not postpone the consideration of this subject.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have had a conference with more than a dozen gentlemen upon this bill, and they all admit that it has not been sufficiently well examined on their part to enable them to present to vote satisfactorily upon it. I can see no reason why the gentleman from Illinois should object, if, by consent of the House, the further consideration of the bill is postponed for two weeks, and made a special order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not see why we should not go on now under the new rule, and in the House take up and act upon the bill, section by section. Every member here will have the opportunity to know what is in the bill, and every provision of the bill. I hope the gentleman will not press his motion for a postponement.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman from Illinois will consent to a two weeks' postponement, I will move upon a vote upon the yeas and nays to refer the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; otherwise, I will.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to press the consideration of this bill at this time against the manifest disposition of the House, or any large number of members. I had hoped that gentlemen would have examined the bill and come here prepared to act upon it, and to perfect it as it came before us, section by section. There are other matters which will interfere with the speedy consideration proposed. There is the codification of the existing revenue laws of the United States, which will come up upon the 3d of April next.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That will come up next Tuesday; and I propose that the further consideration of this bill be postponed for two weeks from to-day.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If it be the general understanding of the House that this bill, if postponed, shall come up two weeks from to-day as a special order, and be then disposed of, I do not know that I will interpose further objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I propose. Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. It is of little use to postpone this bill and then to discuss it two weeks from to-day, unless there is an understanding that it shall be taken up and read and discussed by sections.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I take that to be the understanding of the House—that the bill shall be taken up by sections, and discussed and disposed of.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. Then I do not object.

Mr. MILLSON. I think, sir, that we are wasting a great deal of time in the discussion of preliminary questions. If the bill is to be postponed, let us take a vote on the question at once. Let us take a vote on the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and, if that is not carried, then let us go on and consider the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the bill is postponed, it is the understanding, I trust, that there shall be no dilatory motions interposed to its consideration, section by section, and its disposition at the time to which it is postponed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist that I shall not interfere with the morning hour; that it shall not come up until after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not object to that.

Mr. MILLSON. I claim the floor. I am about to make a motion, and I want to introduce with a remark or two in reply to the observation of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VALLANDIGHAM]; and because a number of members, as well as himself, seem to be under an erroneous impression in regard to the effect of the amended rules of the House.

This bill is now, without any agreement or consent, open for debate in the House, section by section, as if it were in the Committee of the Whole. Heretofore, I have always voted and urged that this bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but since the amendment of the rules—which amendments were made with the very object of avoiding the difficulties before existing—we can now go on and discuss this bill precisely as in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and the House may, at any time, suspend the debate upon every pending amendment, and then go on to the consideration of a subsequent amendment. For that reason, I should have voted against the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. And now, with a view to terminate the debate, and bring the House to an immediate vote upon the motion to postpone—our new rule providing that the previous question, when a motion to postpone is pending, shall apply only to the motion to postpone—I call for the previous question upon the motion to postpone.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have objected to postponing this bill; but I desire to know whether the motion is to postpone to the specified day, to be taken up after the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is to be made the special order after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The understanding, I believe, is, that the bill shall come up then for the purpose of being considered section by section, without any motion to refer it, and without any dilatory motion. [Cries of "Yes," "Yes!"]

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof, the motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up the Army appropriation bill.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HINDMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to introduce a bill for the purpose of referring it to the special committee upon the Pacific railroad?

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman will have an opportunity to do that on Monday.

Mr. HINDMAN. I would like to do it now, for the purpose of having it printed.

No objection being made.

Mr. HINDMAN introduced a bill to authorize contracts and make provisions for the safe, certain, and more speedy transportation, by railroads, of mails, troops, munitions of war, and military and naval stores, between the Atlantic States and California, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the select committee on the Pacific railroad, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. CLOPTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the resolutions upon the matter of the public printing, heretofore referred by the Committee on Public Expenditures, and the report of the majority of the committee, submitted on the 26th of March, be recommitted to that committee, with power to send for papers and papers, and examine further witnesses.

Mr. GROW. I object to that. It has been disposed of once.

JAMES W. BREDLOVE.

Mr. TAYLOR. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio, I desire to move that the papers in the case of James W. Bredlove be withdrawn from the Committee of Claims and the Committee on the Courts, and that the same be referred to the Court of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a personal explanation. There was, I understand, a resolution offered in this House yesterday, by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BLAKE], the purport of which I do not know, except by reading the Globe this morning. When the vote on it was taken, and when I was present, I was not in the House. I was in Baltimore with my wife, who was starting for Kentucky. There were, as I understand, though it is not reported in the Globe, some reflections upon me in consequence of my absence, which I very much regretted; and I desire to state so much as I can in my personal explanation, in order to set against that resolution, because I am opposed to it throughout—preamble and resolution.

I desire further to state, that in the first time I have ever known, so far as my limited observation extends, that gentleman's absence was called in question. I should not have deemed it important for me to make an explanation, except for the fact that I saw in the Globe that my absence was alluded to by certain gentlemen present in this House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The presence of a couple of gentlemen was questioned yesterday.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kentucky. I do not know how that was. I desire to say in addition, that in looking over the vote I see that a great number of members were absent. I suppose, I do not know; but I take it for granted they were absent for sufficient reasons. I was not in the city, but with my family at Baltimore.

I address those who thought proper to throw imputations upon me in consequence of my absence, and I say, if they think proper, cast imputations upon me, or to make imputations against me, for not voting upon that proposition, that I am not to be intimidated, not to be threatened, and not to be whipped into the Democratic ranks, if that is the object.

Mr. HINDMAN. I will state that I am one of those who remarked upon the gentleman's absence from the House. The circumstances, to my mind, did seem a little significant, especially when taken in connection with the fact that the gentleman had, upon a previous occasion, voted for a Black Republican candidate for Printer of this House. As to intimidating, threatening, or whipping the gentleman into the Democratic ranks, I am the last one who would desire any such result.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kentucky. And that is the last place where I should desire to be. I have no apology to make for voting for a Black Republican for Printer. Under similar circumstances I would do so again.

Mr. BARR. Had we not better stop this right here?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kentucky. Only one word more. Had I been here, I should have voted against that resolution. My absence, as I stated before, was the consequence of the fact that I was called, with my family on the way home, to Baltimore to meet friends.

PUBLIC PRINTING—AGAIN.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to appeal to the gentleman who objected to the resolution of my colleague, [Mr. CLOPTON], that he will allow my colleague to make the motion to recommit the report of the Committee on Printing which was made yesterday. He deserves it upon the ground, I understand, that he has obtained information of a witness whom the committee, or a portion of the committee, desire to examine upon this same subject. I take it for granted that gentlemen will hardly vote against a recommitment of a report with a view to examination of a witness, under these circumstances, with the same power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. SHERMAN. The chairman of that committee is not here; nor is the gentleman who objected.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the report will be recommitted to the committee with the original powers over the subject. There can be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are objections. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] made one, and I make it again.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object, because others do.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is no reason why you should object.

Mr. GROW. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman objects to the examination of witnesses under these circumstances, of course I cannot insist upon it.

Mr. GROW. It is not necessary to give any reason for the objection that the gentleman has reported.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask whether the matter of the further examination into a case before the Committee on Printing, and which has been partially reported on, is not a privileged question?

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The subject is not within the House. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken on Mr. SHERMAN's motion; and it was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. [Mr. GROW in the chair,] and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 305, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1861.

Mr. SHERMAN moved to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and that it be taken up and read by sections, for amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with; and the Clerk proceeded to read the bill by sections, for amendment.

Mr. DELANO obtained the floor.

Mr. BOTELER addressed the Chair.

THE CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. DELANO. I give way to the gentleman from Virginia, because I presume he intends to propose a similar amendment to that I desired to offer.

Mr. BOTELER. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "two hundred and fifty," and inserting the words "four hundred and forty," in lieu thereof the words "four hundred," so that the clause will read:

For the manufacture of arms at the national armory, $400,000.

I have no desire in the world, Mr. Chairman, to impede the progress of this bill through the House, but I have many unsuccessful attempts at my passage, as reported by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. But I should be derelict in the duty I owe to my constituents and to the country if I did not offer this amendment, and urge its adoption on the House. I have very little to say, Mr. Chairman, in support of it, except to make a simple statement of facts which have come to my knowledge, showing how it happens that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has reported a sum of $250,000 for the armories; instead of the usual amount of $400,000. Being very much surprised when I saw the report, I asked the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means how it was that this money was reported. He referred me to the estimates; and, to my great surprise, I found that the estimate for the manufacture of arms, which had been sent to the Committee of Ways and Means, was identical in amount with the sum which he reported. I then went to the Ordnance Bureau, and had a conversation with the chief of Ordnance upon the subject. I knew very well that the distinguished gentleman who presides over that bureau felt deeply interested in the prosperity of the national armories; and I was naturally solicitous to ascertain why the same appropriation that was made last year, and which I knew had proved disastrous to the interests of the armories, had been recommended this year. He assured me of the interest he felt in the armories; and told me that the report which he made for the manufacture of arms at the national armories recommended the sum of $400,000—the sum which I propose in my amendment—but that this amount had been stricken out by his superior officer. Failing to have an interview with the Secretary of War, I saw his chief clerk, and learned from him that the War Department had reported that that reduction in consequence of the legislation of last year on that particular item of appropriation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, being well acquainted with the effect of last year's legislation on the armory in our distant States, I am fully satisfied that the amount granted us was utterly insufficient to carry on the armories for the fiscal year; and having seen that some of the best armors—men who had been educated there, who had been living there for years, and whose services were indispensable in the Government, had been discharged, and that they were deprived of employment, and driven from their homes to seek a livelihood in other parts of the country, on account of the inadequate appropriation, I was extremely solicitous that this year there should be not only a restoration of the usual appropriation, but also of the deficit of last year, so that the year should be made up by the present Congress. These armors have been looking hopefully and trustfully to this Congress for some relief, and they have applied to me to use my utmost efforts to get them their money. I have done my best to sustain them; but when intelligence reached Harper's Ferry a few days ago that the estimates for the armory for that district reached only $125,000, it felt like a crushing blow upon the hearts and hopes of these people. Letters have been pouring in upon me ever since, and I am sure that I am sure that if the House could only see them, and could understand the circumstances which surround the writers, their sympathies would be excited in favor of my unfortunate constituents at Harper's Ferry, and it would vote for this amendment.

I send to the Clerk's table one of these letters. It comes from the master armorer at Harper's Ferry. I am sure that, if I were stand here until the sun shall rise to-morrow, appealing to the common sense and generally and liberally toward that branch of the public service, I could say nothing more calculated to arrest their attention, command their respect, and secure their sympathies, than is said in this letter. Before it is read, I desire to say that it was meant for no eye but mine. It was not intended to come before the House, but I take the liberty of calling the attention of the committee to the statements it contains.

The Clerk then read the letter, as follows:

UNITED STATES ARMY, HARPER'S FERRY,
VIRGINIA, March 17, 1860.

DEAR SIR: This day in my hands the printed Army bill, providing, by appropriation, money for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1861, and, to my extreme regret, I find the item referring to the manufacture of arms at the national armories, proposed only $250,000, one half of which, I suppose, will be paid for the manufacture of arms at Springfield, giving each $125,000—a sum only sufficient to successfully operate this armory across the country, being at least one hundred and fifty per cent of the armory, and will so effectively cripple it as to render the whole system of armory manufacture of the future. It is the sum granted last year, which has most effectually compromised the work of starvation and acquiescence, which this bill, if passed, will not only continue, but drive from the employment, and consequently

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 88.

security and safety is found in the fact that we have no foreign possessions in which to quell rebellion; and too often, to conquer peace, England finds a necessity for expensive military preparations in her foreign possessions. I have seen it stated that it cost England $450,000,000 to quell the Sepoy rebellion, to say nothing of the unparalleled butchery of human life. In the fact of our having no foreign possessions is but one reason of our safety from any just apprehension of war. Another ground of safety is that we have no powerful neighbors with whom to indulge those petty jealousies which have so long characterized the controlling Powers of Europe. If we look to the north or south, we find only Canada or Mexico, which are more loving in the hands of others. If we look to the east or west, we are greeted by the returning waves of the two great oceans of the world—those mighty guards of nature which separate us from the complications which so often convulse the whole of continental Europe.

Again another ground of our safety and exemption from the casualties of war is to be found in the good sense of our people—their enlightened judgment—which is worth more than all the standing armies of the world. But, sir, I do not wish to, in this late hour of the day, to prolong this discussion. I know that our Army is small. I know that our Navy is small. I trust the good sense of the people will ever keep them so in time of peace. So long as we cherish and net upon the arms of the Government, we are in danger, that "standing armies are dangerous to the liberties of free people," so long will we continue to be safe from the evils which will ever afflict a people who support and maintain them. I think the Secretary of War acted wisely in sending on this reduced estimate, and I believe the House will follow out his recommendation. Especially in these days of proposed reform should we apply this measure of retrenchment to this branch of the public service. It will not suffer if this reduced estimate is adopted; it will not be improved if the larger sum is allowed.

Mr. PHELPS. It is proposed in the next ensuing year to expend some four hundred and fifty thousand dollars in the manufacture and procurement of arms, to be distributed for the use of the militia of the several States, as they shall be returned to the Department, and to be deposited in the various arsenals of the country for the use of the standing Army, or for such purposes as may be designated by the Government.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOTTLER] proposed to restore the estimate as originally made to the Secretary of War by the chief of ordnance, for the support of the national armories. Now, I am unwilling to increase that estimate. I am unwilling to make any further appropriation beyond the sum of $450,000, as contained in this bill, for the manufacture of arms by the national armories. The gentleman from Virginia has had a letter read, which shows the fact that perhaps some of the workmen employed in the armory at Harper's Ferry may be discharged unless the appropriation is increased. Well, sir, I have yet to learn that this Government is bound to furnish employment for the workmen and citizens of the country; I have yet to learn that we are to increase our appropriations in order that some laboring men may be employed and their wages paid them by the Government.

Mr. FOUKE. I will suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the appropriation of $250,000 is not a sufficient sum to carry on the national armories with economy to the Government. If I am correctly informed, the expense is precisely the same whether the arms thus manufactured are per month manufactured, or twenty-four hundred, so that when twenty-four hundred stand of arms are manufactured per month, the cost of a gun is only $2 50, while, with the capacity of the armories reduced, as it must be with a reduced appropriation, the cost of a gun may be increased to twelve or sixteen dollars. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be a matter of economy upon the part of the Government to make an appropriation sufficient to continue the armory up to its full capacity of manufacture, until we have a sufficient supply on hand, and then suspend the works.

Mr. PHELPS. I must ask the gentleman from Illinois not to take up more of my time. We are now acting, as I understand, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FOUKE. One moment more. I wish merely to suggest, in addition, that there is a bill before us appropriating $600,000 for the distribution of arms to the militia of the several States; which, if it passes, will require all the arms which we can manufacture at the national armories. But, however that may be, it seems to me that it would be the part of economy for this Government to make appropriations sufficient to keep the armories up to their working capacity, or else suspend the work in them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark, in reply to a suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri, that we are acting under the five-minute rule, that such is not the fact. This bill was made a special order in the committee, and, under the rule adopted, debate must be confined to the subject-matter of the bill; the debate has not been limited in respect to time.

Mr. PHELPS. I do not concur in the suggestion of the gentleman, that it is cheaper to manufacture a large number of arms at this time. The manufacture of arms, too, depends upon the number of workmen you may employ. For many years before the commencement of the Mexican war, and even since its conclusion, up to within two or three years last past, the total annual appropriation made for the maintenance of the armories was $250,000. At the last session of Congress, when the Secretary of War submitted a bill for $400,000, for the maintenance of the armories; but Congress saw fit to withhold that amount, and to grant no larger appropriation than had been previously extended for that purpose. I am unwilling, sir, to increase that amount. Why? Every day we are making new improvements in our armaments. It is but a few years ago that we were engaged in the manufacture of muskets. Now we are employed in changing those muskets to rifles—rifling the barrels so as to make them a more effective arm. Since the manufacture of muskets, the Colt arm has been invented, and we have had Maynard's rifle, and Sharpe's rifle, and several other important improvements. They are great improvements upon the old arms, and they are improvements upon the arm now being manufactured at our national armories.

I am willing to maintain these armories. I am willing to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to keep them in operation, and to retain some of the valuable mechanics who have been educated and trained in them. I expect to see the time come when we will produce a different kind of arm than that now manufactured—when we shall be engaged in the manufacture of the improved arms lately invented by the people of this country. The Government, however, must wait until it has obtained the use of the armaments which have been granted for them. This matter was discussed to a considerable extent at the last session of Congress, and then gentlemen, members of the Committee on Military Affairs, referred to some of the recent improvements which had been made in firearms.

If there be a necessity to retain these workmen at the national armories, the Secretary of War has only to do this: to direct the $200,000 of annual appropriation under the act of 1860 to be expended in the manufacture of arms at these two armories, and to distribute the arms thus manufactured to the several States, according to their militia returns. It is left discretionary with him either to go into the market and expend this $200,000 annually in the purchase of arms, which shall be distributed to the States and Territories, or to expend it in the manufacture of arms at the national armories. If he does the latter, that will make nearly half a million dollars to be expended in the manufacture of arms at the national armories. I have stated these few reasons why I cannot concur in the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOTTLER].

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very unwilling to detain the House at any length at this late hour of the day. If I remained silent, however, I should feel that I had very much failed in discharging my duty to a very respectable and worthy class of mechanics who reside in my district and are attached to one of these national armories. It will be no difficult matter to show that the Government is under most signal obligation to this class of its employees. From the very foundation of these national establishments they have been within the respect, care and fostering protection of the Government. And it has been a part of this paternal policy to create a relation of mutual dependence between themselves and the Government. Many of them have grown gray in the service; and being thus connected and dependent upon the employment to be obtained at the armories, if their occupation is withheld or stifled, it must be seen that it is impossible for them to go elsewhere and obtain the same employment.

Now, sir, the operation of this bill will be, as I understand it, that the year has been, and this band that community of employees. It may not be known to gentlemen upon this floor, who have not given this subject their attention, how extremely complicated and delicate is this business of the manufacture of muskets. I am informed, that in the course of the year, there are made something like three hundred distinct processes involved; not in this community of some three or four hundred persons I have described, every man has his specialty. His functions and skill extend to that, and nothing else. Now, sir, here comes the crisis of the Government's employment from that community the usual appropriation except as it is reduced by some two hundred thousand dollars a year. What becomes of them? There they are, many of them, with their money invested in homesteads and without the power to find the same specialty employment elsewhere, and of course their subsistence gone. In brief, that, sir, is their condition.

But, sir, I will not dwell upon their exigencies. I come in once to what I consider a stronger and more emphatic appeal to this House than any claim of private individuals, and that is, that the honor of the nation is staked upon the adequacy of its armament. One honorable gentleman says that there is no occasion for the manufacture of more arms, and that he would rather disband the infantry armories than appropriate another dollar in addition to that suggested in the estimate. I ask that gentlemen whether he can tell me—and before he made a statement, such as I have quoted, he ought to have had the information—what is the effective armament for the infantry service of this nation at the present time? I am informed that there are very few upon this floor who have well considered that question. I say it, then, upon the highest authority, that such has been the radical character of the improvements in the infantry arm within the last half a dozen years, that by the mere operation of these improvements the nation has become practically defenseless. This, sir, if realized as a fact, would undoubtedly have its just weight with members when considering appropriations. We find, sir, upon the reports of Secretaries of War, that in the year 1855, that one million of small arms is considered the normal complement for infantry service.

Yet, sir, at this hour—as the reports fully show—we have but fifty thousand stand of arms that we should dare to put into the hands of our infantry for use in case of an emergency. That, sir, I think, ought to settle this controversy in favor of the allowance we ask.

To understand how this comes about, you have only to look into the reports of the Secretary of War, and you will see how the mode of life, which was an infantry arm up to 1855, has been superseded by the model of that year; the old arm was discarded, and we have not yet manufactured make no objection to that reference. I wish it understood, however, that it is the bill of the Committee on Military Affairs, and not the bill of the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that it came from the committee of which the Senator from Mississippi is chairman.

Mr. CLAY. Then the Committee on Pensions might be dispensed with if the Naval Committee should also take jurisdiction of pensions belonging to that branch of the service.

Mr. DAVIS. The Committee on Military Affairs do not take jurisdiction of pensions, but of pension laws—general provisions for the Army. However, I am perfectly willing that this bill should go to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read a second time, with a view to its reference. The bill was read a second time, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ASSISTANT DOORKEEPER.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following resolution: Resolved, That the Assistant Doorkeeper of the Senate be allowed the same rate of annual compensation as the permanent committee clerks of the Senate, commencing with the present fiscal year.

The subject is one that was before the Senate when the officers of the Senate had their compensation increased, and this seems to have been the only omission. I should like to have the resolution considered now.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. A statement was made to me yesterday, that the pay which is proposed to be given is the same as that given in the House of Representatives, and will be more than the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate himself receives. Is that so?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not propose to give that pay. The pay which is proposed to give is that of the permanent committee clerks—$1,850, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no objection be interposed, the resolution will be considered at this time.

Mr. CLAY. I object to it. I want to know what he gets now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it will lie over.

ST. CLAIR PLATS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate now take up bill No. 37, making an appropriation to complete the claim to the St. Clair Plats. I do not desire to press this bill at this time, if the Senate will grant me a day when we can have a direct vote on the bill. The President, in his veto message of the St. Clair Plats bill of last session, has put forth some new and rather strange propositions. I should look upon a veto against this bill as a vote in favor of these new doctrines. If the Senate will assign a day when they will permit a vote to be taken on this bill, I shall not dissent it now. I call their attention to the fact that up to the date of this veto message I had not occupied thirty minutes of the Senate's time on this subject. Neither do I wish to press this matter pertinaciously. I simply ask, what I think any Senator will say I am entitled to, a direct vote on the proposition; and if the Senate will fix any day, near or distant, when they will take a vote on it, I shall have nothing further to say at this time. I move that the bill be taken up and made the special order for Monday next, at one o'clock.

Mr. SEWARD. There is a special order for Monday.

Mr. CHANDLER. Well, say Tuesday, or any other day that will suit the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is, on taking up the bill for consideration. The Senator from Michigan moves to take up the bill (S. No. 37) in relation to the St. Clair Plats. The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that it be made the special order for Tuesday next, at one o'clock.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have no objection to the Senator being heard on his bill at any time he desires. I think it is his right to be heard upon it; but it seems to me that we had better not make it a special order. If we do, it may interrupt other business. We cannot assume that nobody else will want to debate it. I presume he is not anguine of its becoming a law. Still, I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall, either now or at any time when it is convenient to himself, speak upon it. I would rather not make it a special order, because it will probably give rise to a general debate; and it seems to me we had better attend to legislation that is more likely to be passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will not occupy ten minutes of the time of the Senate upon this bill, if Senators will permit a vote to be taken without extended debate. I simply ask for a vote, with or without debate; and it is perfectly immaterial to me which. The question is perfectly understood by the Senate and the country, and it need not occupy ten minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. SLIDELL. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that we can vote now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would prefer fixing a Monday day. The Senate is not full now. I would prefer to fix a day when the Senate will be full.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Michigan permit me to suggest to him that the resolutions of the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Davis) have been made the special order for Monday. They will run into Tuesday, and there are special orders that will consume all of that week. As he is willing to take a more distant day—and I recognize his right to be heard on the question—I would leave a week further off.

Mr. CHANDLER. Well, say Monday week. Mr. MALLORY. I will vote with the Senator to make it the special order for Monday week, or take it up now and vote on it, without debate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to make the bill the special order for Tuesday week, April 10. The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HAYES, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had this day ordered the printing of the following documents:

Letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the condition of the banks throughout the United States—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes, p. m.

Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of New Mexico for payment of certain militiamen called into service against the Apache Indians by the acting Governor of the Territory—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes, p. m.

Memorial for the payment of volunteers under Major Ramon Luna—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes, p. m.

Memorial for the payment of militiamen and volunteers—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes, p. m.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 247) for the relief of Mary E. Castor.

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. MALLORY. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which was introduced yesterday. It is not quite one o'clock, but we shall gain a little time by taking it up now. The business was unfinished. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BLOKE], I know, wishes to make a motion to take up another bill. He has another important bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business comes up regularly at one o'clock, but it is the right of the Senator to move to take it up at this time.

Mr. BIGLER. If the Senator from Florida will indulge me a moment, there is a bill of a very important character which I desire to bring before the Senate for consideration. It is a bill which I think the Senate can dispose of very readily; it has been fully considered by the Committee on Patents. It is the bill (S. No. 10) in addition to "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts." I know it is bad policy to interfere with a bill which has been so far progressed with as that of the Senator from Florida; but I almost despair of getting up this bill unless I can get it made a special order, and I ask the Senator from Florida to consider me in this respect, and make the special order for—say Wednesday next.

Mr. MALLORY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BIGLER. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 10) in addition to an act to promote the progress of the useful arts.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BIGLER. I move that the bill be postponed and made the special order for Wednesday next, at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

BANK ISSUES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SLIDELL. I certainly do not approve of this system of making special orders, and accumulating them; but I find it is impossible to resist the habit, and that there is no other mode of getting along with business that one may have special orders made. The bill (S. No. 20) regulating the banks in the District of Columbia be taken up now, for the purpose of being made the special order of the day for Wednesday of the week after next—the day after the special order of the Senator from Michigan—and I shall then expect that the bill will be passed upon. It has already been debated very fully.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish the Senator from Louisiana would persist in what his judgment tells him ought to be the practice here, and that the Senate would agree to go on with business as it stands upon the Calendar. I am satisfied it would economize time, and every bill would then have its fair chance. This way of pressing in to get a special order made, and giving one bill a preference over another—and frequently preferring one bill to another in a particular bill—has always, I thought, since I have been in the Senate, embarrassed the business of the body, and gave the go-by to measures of importance which were in the hands of Senators, who perhaps were less important than others. I will unite with the Senator at any time in moving to the Calendar, and shall be glad to have a test of the feeling of the Senate on the subject, to see if we cannot go on with business as it is reported by the committees.

Mr. SLIDELL. I agree fully with the Senator from Illinois; but I think it is a little strange that this objection should now present itself to his mind for the first time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have stated it before. Mr. SLIDELL. He certainly did not object to the special movers already made to-day—some proposed by the Senator from Michigan, and the other by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I shall concur with him heartily hereafter; but I have yielded long enough, and I hope the Senate will indulge me now in taking up this bill for the purpose.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was postponed to, and made the special order for, this day two weeks, at one o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

As message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. HAYES, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had concurred in the first and second amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 241) authorizing publishers to print on their papers the date when advertisements expire, and had concurred in the third amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested; and had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill.

NAVY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. BRIGHT. I think this would be a very good time to take up the bill for the enlargement of the public grounds.

Mr. MALLORY. My motion is pending. I only withdrew it temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan desires to take up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. BRIGHT. Which is the naval pay bill. I should like very much to take up the bill for the enlargement of the public grounds. I doubt whether it will take much time.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope we shall be allowed to go on with the unfinished business.

The motion of Mr. MALLORY was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 229) to increase and regulate the pay of officers of the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN], which is to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause, and to insert what was read yesterday, which is in fact a new and separate bill. Both done, and that is the principle the committee object to.

I will say in addition, that of the class of 1840 we speak of these officers in classes, who graduated in certain years—forty-one of them, averaged nineteen and half years in the Navy, average thirty-three and a quarter years of age; they served as midshipmen and passed midshipmen, from fourteen to fifteen years before they got any promotion. The grades were all filled, and they served then on a very low scale of pay, and they received then only a few hundred dollars. They were doing the duty of lieutenants about six years before they were promoted at all; for which, of course, they could get no pay, unless they were appointed occasionally especially in some expedition to do the duty of a lieutenant, because an officer does the duty of a higher grade, temporarily, gets no pay for that duty. The great majority of these officers are married, and have families; and under the amendment of the Senator from Maine, not one of them would receive a cent increase.

My objections to the amendment are principally based, as I say, on the provisions as to the grade of lieutenants; because, when you thus ignore one hundred and eighty of these men who are the backbone of our service—forty of those sixty-eight now, who graduated in 1841, and who will have twenty of them are married, and have large families—when you ignore this whole class of men, and at the same time put up pursers and surgeons, the country cannot recognize any justice in it. The committee reporting the bill have no such desire. The Senate is present in it. It is pretty accurately graded, according to the duties and responsibilities of each grade. If you preserve that scale, the pursers get, I think, what is precisely right. Their increase of pay is about twenty-five per cent, on their leave, and about twenty per cent on their pay, and on their other duty pay; and I think that both the Senator from Maine and myself have made a much better arrangement for the pay of the pursers and surgeons than was made before.

Another objection to the proposition of the Senator from Maine, though I would not make this a material one, is, that it provides a leave pay for professors of mathematics, who, under no circumstances, I think, can be ever placed on leave, except to attend to their own business, at their own request; and then there should be no pay allowed to them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I made a mistake there, which I intend to correct. I have made an allowance for sea-service there; but they have no sea-service to perform at all. I mean to make that correction.

Mr. MALLORY. I point this out, because the bill of the committee has provided what is right on this point. Another important error to which I drew the attention of the Senator, and which I know he will correct, is in placing the pay of a trustee and a half per cent on their pay, and the pay of a commander. The importance of keeping the pay of the several grades as separate as the grades themselves; the importance of not paying an officer of junior grade precisely what you pay an officer of the higher grade. I know need not be argued by the Senator.

I may as well say that the bill of the Senator from Maine decreases the sea-pay of captains of ships at $3,375. I understood his objection to be that $375 was a fraction. He said that if the committee had reported $320, he would have given for it perhaps; but he dislikes fractions. I will say to him that you cannot take your pay-roll now without seeing fractions. That is a matter for the accounting officers, not for us here. We pay surgeons now for the first five years after the date of their commission $1,000 on leave, $2,250 on other duty, and $2,500 at sea, receives no such thing.

Another objection that I have to his amendment is a very important one. There is a class of commissioned officers in your Navy who receive what they know in their hearts to be a bogus pay; that is, a commander, who, according to the present pay list, should receive $1,800 on leave, $2,250 on other duty, and $2,500 at sea, receives no such thing.

According to the reform act, as it was called, those officers receive only a modified pay, because that act provided that the aggregate pay of the Navy was not to be increased; and it has not been increased. Consequently, when a commander goes to sea in place of a captain, he does not get the pay of a captain; but the pay of a captain is divided between the two, and the commander gets the difference of pay which the captain loses by not going to sea; which decreases the commander's pay, as a matter of course, from what it should be. There are a few of these officers only. I thought I had on my table the precise number of officers drawing this bogus pay. The Register shows it. I perceive, however, that there are twenty-eight lieutenants drawing this bogus pay. This is the most important matter, and I submit that the Register, after the new pay bill shall be passed, should show precisely what every officer receives. But we shall be unable to tell what officers receive, if a portion of them receive this modified pay; and therefore the committee have provided for abolishing it altogether. That is one of the means of paying them; and they will not get the pay the committee propose, unless this measure of abolishing that feature of the reform act shall prevail.

Now, as to the general policy of increasing salaries. I would call the attention of the Senate very briefly, for I desire to get a vote on this bill to-day, if possible, to the fact, that since 1835, when the pay of the officers of the Navy was fixed, we have increased the pay of every man in this service. I would call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the money value of everything has vastly increased since 1835. Flour, the stuff of life, you may say, at that time was worth $4 25 a barrel. Now it is a hundred per cent more. Of every article, all the essentials of life, except one, everything has increased. The price of wheat has risen from fifty to one hundred per cent. I state that as a general proposition. That was what induced the increase of the pay of the other branch of the military service. We have increased our own pay. We have increased the pay of the judges of the Supreme Court from $4,500 to $6,000. We have increased the salaries of the heads of Departments from $6,000 to $8,000—thirty-three per cent. We have increased the pay of chief clerks of bureaus, and all the clerks of the Executive Departments, from twenty to thirty per cent. The pay of the five per cent is the average increase that the committee have proposed for the lieutenants' grade here. A young clerk just appointed in a Department gets $1,200, precisely the pay you give to a lieutenant who has been twenty years at sea in your Navy, who is fifty-five years of age, and has a family of perhaps a wife and eight children to sustain. We give our Auditors $3,000. We have increased their pay. We have largely increased the pay of the Senate's officers. The pay of our Secretary amounts to $1,680, and of our chief clerk $2,500 to $1,850. The very first day he enters on his duty, gets thirty dollars a year more than the oldest lieutenant who has seen twenty years' sea-service, and been in every quarter of the globe. Even our messengers get more pay than you give our lieutenants. David Porter, who would be an ornament to any navy; who has seen twenty years of sea-service, and is now over fifty years of age.

Sir, I will not protract these figures. I am quite familiar with the details of this bill, and I shall be very happy to afford Senators information, so far as I can do so, on any of its details. Upon this subject of the lieutenants, and giving them pay according to their sea-duty, we have only concurred in the uniform opinion of the Navy Department itself under all Administrations, and in the unanimous and unanimous sentiment of the point, and I should exceedingly regret, having the best interests of the Navy at heart, if the Senate should abandon that principle. I would not propose to reduce the pay provided by the bill, in any of the grades, as a matter of course. The amendment which I offered to the bill is, I think, principally introduced because of the fact that the pay register does not show accurately the pay of the surgeons. That is the only grade I think. The Senator from Maine was mistaken, I think, in saying that the new table was wrong in many particulars. I think he will find it is wrong in no particular but that of surgeons. The pay table alleges that they receive for the first five years after the date of their commission $1,333 33; but in 1848, by some very adroit management, a provision was put into an appropriation bill by which they were at liberty to date their commissions back to their first commission, which gave them fifteen years' priority instead of five years, but the corresponding provision never having been made on the face of the pay table, the error has been handed down to this day; and although they have received this increased pay, the Secretary of the Navy, through ignorance of the fact, the accounting officers were ignorant of the fact, and hence it was that the committee erred in the sum in calculating the surgeons' pay; and as an act of justice to the surgeons, yesterday I offered an amendment by which we increased that pay from $1,366 66 to $1,900, and in the manner shown through the different grades, according to their sea-service. With these explanations, though the subject is a fruitful one, and I have not presented the claims of these officers as my own convictions would induce me to do, I will, to save time, yield the floor, with the request that the Senator from Maine and myself at least may so accommodate this matter as to get a vote on the bill to-day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection to a vote being taken to-day at any time. I offered the amendment which I submitted on the table, in pursuance of the policy of duty which I have in mind with regard to the subject-matter, having been the unfortunate author of a motion that the committee should change their first bill, and report one fixing a specific sum, in dollars and cents, for the pay of all the officers of the Navy. The purposes have been accomplished; but I wish to say to the Senator that, after all, I think he should have some clause in his bill, if it is to pass, that this pay now fixed by law is to be in full of all allowances, and repaying other acts. Otherwise, these some little extra percentage on the pay allowed by law will be in existence and operative, and we shall give them this pay in dollars and cents, and they will get percentage besides.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the Senator if he does not think that is perfectly provided for in the first clause of the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not.

Mr. MALLORY. That is the design.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Read it.

Mr. MALLORY. "That from and after the passage of this act, the amount of pay of the officers of the Navy, now on the active list, hereinafter named, shall be as follows."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Exactly. That is their annual pay, and the other acts read precisely in the same way; but then, acts were passed giving some of their percentages on the existing pay. There is a very serious question whether those percentages would not be calculated after the passage of this bill. I merely suggest to the Senator that, in order to accomplish the object, he ought to make it say distinctly that all allowances

Mr. MALLORY. I will do that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now, sir, allow me to say that the idea I have had from the beginning is to increase the pay of the Navy, and my desire has been to do so in a manner which would be least burdensome particularly, because I supposed that they most needed no increase. I did, however, commit one mistake, among others, in not adhering to the fact that a very large class, nearly half of them, if I understand right, were appointed lieutenants in 1835 in consequence of the change that was made by the retiring board. On looking at the Navy Register, I find that a very large number of that class dating back from 1855, perhaps about one half, and consequently, as the Senator says, they would not for about a year come within the provisions of my amendment. Well, sir, I think it is not unreasonable to provide for them, as the Senator proposes; but he will allow me to call attention to the fact that when the bill for the retiring board was passed, it was an argument in favor of that these young officers wanted an increase of rank, not an increase of pay. They all repudiated the idea that they were seeking money. The argument on this floor was, "these gentlemen want the honor of a higher grade; they have been in the service for a long time, and are long enough; they want to be used as lieutenants and commanders, and so on; but they do not want any money." Now, however, the argument to day is that it would be very unfair that these gentlemen, although they did get some increase of pay, though not the increase they were entitled to according to their higher grade, should not receive a larger sum of money.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator will allow me to say one word. I trust he will not embrace me in the category of those who admitted that the officers did not want any more money, because ever since I have been in Congress I have been endeavoring to get their pay increased. I have not ceased in that effort.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am speaking of the argument used for the increase here, that so many were kept in their grade that they were anxious for the increased honor, and cared nothing about increased pay. I do not blame these gentlemen for wanting increased pay. They ought to have it, in my judgment.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to say one word just there? What he says is undoubtedly correct; and under the arrangement that was to be made after the return from the retiring board, it was understood that these gentlemen would be rapidly promoted. Congress, the year after, restored to them the whole of the retired officers to the active list, and broke the engagement. If they had stuck to their engagement, as I allowed the officers to retire who were retired, then they would not have claimed anything but promotion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know that the argument which I have stated was urged; and I have the comfort of reflecting that I opposed that whole action from the beginning to the end. We cannot legislate here with regard to the Army or the Navy on any fair principle. It is out of the question. Do anything in regard to either of these arms of service, and there is one universal howl, not only over the country, but in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. Why? Because every Senator and every Representative has somebody in the Navy or the Army that he represents here; and the moment you attempt to do anything for either service, you are surrounded and overwhelmed in every possible way, so that it is almost utterly out of the power of Congress to do anything on fair principles in regard to these matters at all. That is the truth of it. Now, sir, I understand that it is a fact that we have restored to the active-service list all the officers who were retired at that time; and I am told as a fact that seven tenths of those who have been thus restored have broken down and they have been put on the active service, showing the correctness of the decision at that time.

Mr. MALLORY. Allow me to say one word. The Senator from Maine and my friend from South Carolina are equally mistaken. Out of two hundred and one removed from the active list, but fifty-eight have been put back, and eighteen of those fifty-eight were not put back by the course of inquiry which tried them, and before which they had a fair trial, but by presidential and congressional action.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand that those since put back have proved the correctness of the first decision of the board. However, that has no great connection with this question. In regard to these officers, and particularly the lieutenants, I am not only willing to see the increase of pay, but to put their pay on a fair basis; and if I have made a mistake, as I did make in not advertising to the fact that so large a class of them were created so late as 1855, I wish to correct it, and I mean to correct it, in the future, by changing the principle upon which I based my amendment.

Allow me to say that I have not the slightest expectation that my amendment will pass; because, the committee being united, and the Senate always taking the report of a committee as gospel when they have taken the report of a committee, members of the Senate attending to the matter at all, but a very few, we know how it goes. I did not have any hope of it from the beginning, but I offered it simply because I made the movement in the first place to provide that the pay should be fixed on dollars and cents, and I felt myself bound to go through with it, and at any rate to express my own views about it. How it comes out I am not responsible for, and I do not care a great deal about it one way or the other; but mean to offer an amendment to reduce the time from the date of the commission when the lieutenants' increase shall take effect; that is, to fix it at three, six, and nine years, instead of five at all, and fifteen. That will place them all on a fair basis.

Mr. MALLORY. But ignoring sea-service. Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes; and I will tell you why I ignore the sea-service. I said something in the subject yesterday. Let me give you a few illustrations of how your rule will work, and how it does work. Take the case of the very officer that was advanced yesterday on account of his special services, and to whom we agreed to pay $4,000 a year during life—Captain Dahlgren. Suppose we had not looked out for him in particular, by this special provision for his benefit. He might have been discovered, at an early time, to be a gentleman of fine attainments, and it might have been found out, as it was, that he would be very useful if employed on shore in experiments in gunnery. He stays on shore, under orders of the Department, at the navy-yard here, discharging and rendering great service to the country; while another man, who has no such capacity, goes to sea. Now, how does your bill work in such a case as that? Captain Dahlgren remains on shore, and the end of the matter. The first man who has not his capacity, and does not render his service, goes to the top of it.

Take another case. I understand that a commission has recently recommended that certain officers who have shown ability for doing particular things, and have fine abilities and scientific attainments, form a school for experimental practice and otherwise, under Captain Dahlgren, on shore, for the benefit of the Navy generally. When you look out for them, you pick out your finest officers; you put them on shore, they stay on shore, they perform their duties, for two, three, four, or five years. On account of their ability and superior attainments they are kept at the lower end of the list, while the ordinary men go to the top, in regard to pay. That is the necessary operation of the commission. In the year-end examination, the first scholar in the class is kept there as a teacher, or put on board a receiving ship to teach seamanship. The man at the bottom of the class, who is fit for nothing but to go to sea, goes into active foreign service, at sea, and he goes to the head of the list as to pay in a few years. The best scholar in the class stays at the bottom of it. A man meets with an accident, and is wounded, and stays on shore, and the result is the same in regard to him. Fine officers are selected to go on long expeditions, and are kept on shore, and they must be kept on shore necessarily for two or three years bringing up their work after they come back. Nobody else can bring it up. They are losing their sea-service, while those who go to sea get it. You can pay them by passing special acts, but you predicate the law upon sea-service.

Now let me tell you that in my belief the trouble is in the Department. If every Secretary of the Navy has said that he could not get men to sea because of the influence of Senators and Representatives, and if every Secretary of the Navy has been unfit for his place and ought to have been turned out of it. Cannot we get a man in the office of the Secretary of the Navy who has any manliness, who can resist the persuasive powers of the honorable Senator from Florida, or any other honorable Senator, when he wants to keep a friend on shore?

Mr. MALLORY. He might with me, but not with you.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Well, sir, if we have any one who cannot do his duty in that office, and who is inclined to favor an officer because he is solicited to do it by Senators and Representatives, I say again he is unfit for his place; and if that has been the case with all of them, we have had a pretty miserable set of officers in that place, and they ought to be laid aside as a general rule. The mistake is in the men that you have in the administrative places of your Government. Undoubtedly it may be true that some officers may want to stay on shore. If they come forward, as I said yesterday, with excuses which are not valid, they ought to be laid aside as a general rule. In my judgment, it takes place in but very few instances. The great majority of the instances of those who stay on shore, and those who have very good reasons for it, and the great majority of those who go to sea prefer to go. They seek the place.

Again, the committee's bill graduates all on sea-service. A trip to the Mediterranean is a very nice thing. Everybody wants to go and say there three or five years on sea-service. You place it on the same ground that you do a trip to the coast of Africa. One year's sea-service on the coast of Africa or China is worth half a dozen and should count for half a dozen years in the Mediterranean and some other places, and yet it is all counted the same way, and you have a service on our home squadron, sickly as it is now, should count more than in other places. All these things show the entire irregularity in the system that you propose to have. It is intended, evidently, from the Senate bill, to give a special grade to that has taken place and for the men now in the Navy, and not to establish a system that will work for all time. I will state my object in proposing the amendment, and putting it upon a different service. Take it for granted that officers in your Departments will do their duty, take it for granted that men against whom no charges have been brought have done their duty; what is the true rule upon which to predicate the pay?

The true rule is to graduate it according to the time the officer has been in a grade, if you make my distinction, and they stay in a grade as long as my friend from Illinois has suggested, no distinction should be made if they stay in a particular grade only a reasonable time; but such is the nature of our system, such is the character of it at the present time, that they stay in a grade as long as twenty years more, and it is not fair that a man should go into a grade and stay in it until he is an old man, without an advance of pay. If promotion was rapid, the distinction should not exist; but promotion is very slow—necessarily so in our system. I would not be so ready to be willing to make distinctions which I should not be willing otherwise to make; and that is the answer to the objection that was suggested by the Senator from Illinois. At any rate, it is my view of the answer.

Let me state the actual date of the commission in all these cases, give these gentlemen at the present time as much as they ought to receive, and pay them liberally according to the time they have been in the service. I propose to pay them liberally by the amendment I have made in the bill. I will establish a system which will last, applying not only to those now in the service, but applying to all who come after them, graduating the pay according to length of time in the grade to which they belong, and not according to the number of years they have been in a service since they entered the service as boys. The bill of the committee makes inequalities. My amendment may perhaps suffer some man like the lieutenant from Florida who does not deserve much to escape; but by the system of the committee you will be punishing others who stay on shore, not from their own will and desire, but because they were compelled to do so by the orders of the Department, or for some other reason; for there are many such in the Navy, as I am informed, and have no doubt. I wish, as said before, to have a system which will be one of justice to the present time, and do justice to those who are at present in the service, but will apply to all time in future, graduating their pay according to the time they have held a commission in their grade. The bill of the committee is a system of going to grade without making a distinction; and if we could do justice to those who are there now, that would avoid the injustice which must necessarily be done to those who have not seen a particular amount of sea-service.

The honorable Senator says that the amendment that I propose is evidently a bill for the benefit of the pursers. I will say that his bill is not only for the benefit of lieutenants, but for the benefit of a portion of the expense of the war. That is the amount of it. It works so, as I showed yesterday. Men who have had a commission for a short time comparatively to others will draw according to their sea-service, not from the time they became lieutenants, but from the time they entered the Navy in the first place, without reference at all to the reasons that may have caused or prevented a service in different cases.

The honorable Senator has spoken of the sufferings and services of lieutenants more than once, with a view evidently, in his attack on my amendment, to encourage the idea that I have designedly put them down. It is not so.

Mr. MALLORY. I said you had made an error.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I admit the error in a certain case, but not to the extent the Senator supposes. I have desired from the beginning to put all classes of lieutenants, as well as others, up to the places where they belonged, and give them precisely the amount of money they ought to have to support themselves respectably in the position to their station. If I have made a mistake in reference to the amount in a certain case, I am perfectly willing to correct that mistake; but I do not propose to correct it in the way the Senator proposes, by doing injustice to the benefit of another party. If I could be supposed, in any event, to insinuate that it was possible for my friend from Florida to make a mistake in a matter relating to naval affairs, I might say that he had made a mistake in his calculations in regard to the merits of this particular class in making the distinction, and he has from the beginning.

But, sir, I want to show him the reason why my bill was drawn as it is. The only ground upon which he states that it is drawn for the benefit of the class of pursers is, that I have reduced the last ten years' service that is to say, I have reduced the highest pay after fifteen years', instead of after twenty years' service. Have I not done the same with regard to lieutenants; with regard to surgeon; with regard to everybody in the service? Has the Senator any objection to that? I stated so for it yesterday; that I thought after a man had been in a grade fifteen years, appointed a man at thirty years of age, he wanted as much money as he ever would, and was capable of performing as much service as ever; and therefore, I was disposed to reduce the time fixed by the committee for the payment of the highest compensation to pursers and surgeons. I applied it to both. The Senator well knows that in the British navy a purser is paid higher than a commander, although ranking with him; and surgeons almost but not quite so high. Why? For the same reason. It is because pursers and surgeons never can get beyond a certain grade; they come in as men; they stay in during the period of their maturity and ability for labor, and for life generally; they get on to a certain point, and then they retire. They never can come up to the pay of captains and commodores. Another thing: pursers are under heavy bonds; they are responsible for large amounts of property; if it is lost, they must pay for it; and that is another reason why their pay is so high. The Senator is for the lieutenants in the British navy pursers are paid higher than commanders.

Mr. MALLORY. A portion of them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think all of them; I have the Register here.

Mr. MALLORY. No.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There may be one class that is not; but three classes of them are certainly above the pay of commanders in England. However, sir, I want to show the Senator that the change I make is not what you are making the time at which they shall receive the highest pay; while his change has placed the amounts paid, even to pursers, higher than I did. In fact, in the first place, I followed his bill. Now, let me see. I provide that for the second five years after the date of their commission, pursers shall receive, on sea-duty, $2,500; on other duty, $2,000; or leave or awaiting orders, $1,500.

The Senator's bill gives $2,100 for these pursers on other duty. The leave pay in my bill for pursers is, $1,250; in his, $1,400. For pursers after the second five years, I have increased five years after the date of their commission—$1,500 in my bill; in his, $1,600. For pursers of the third grade, $1,750 in my bill; in his, $1,800. Here, in four different instances, he proposes to increase a higher pay than I do, whereas I have raised the pay of pursers in no instance at all; and the only difference I have made is to bring the pursers forward to the highest rate in the end of fifteen or twenty years. That is advancing some of them at a time which I thought to be fair; but in any case, whether or not, it is the same rule that I applied to every other class. Now, with what propriety can the Senator say that my bill is drawn for the benefit of pursers, when I have applied no rule to them which I have not to every other class, and when he himself has put their pay higher than I have?

Mr. MALLORY. It is very evident how I can do it. I am very much surprised that the question should be asked at all. The honorable Senator, who seems to be so desirous to avoid fractions, has put pursers' pay at $1,450 and $1,550, and I have put it at round numbers, increasing fifty dollars, because I have put surgeons and pursers on leave pay on a par. Pursers have no responsibility; they are not under bonds when on leave, and there is no reason why their leave pay should not be that of surgeon, according to the act of 1835; and when I say that the Senator has given them the highest pay of their grade in fifteen years and I at twenty, it is not any explanation of the matter, but the pay of pursers. More of the grade must get the highest pay under his bill than under mine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have increased it, and so has he; but he has made the general increase more than I have. I have only brought them forward in point of time five years, and he has made an increase pay to the several grades in point of time. But what I complain of is, not that the Senator should say that my bill did that, but that he should use the expression that my bill was drawn for the benefit of pursers, as if I did it intentionally.

Mr. MALLORY. I disclaim any such thing, and the Senator should not attribute it to me. I said that if it were drawn up for the benefit of pursers it would be drawn as it is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I say the same thing.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope the Senator will not understand me as saying that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator disclaims it, very well.

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly I disclaim it. I say it is a pursers' bill, because it reduces every line officer, and gives what I propose to pursers. Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the Senator say that the pursers wish to reduce the line officers?

Mr. MALLORY. If the Senator wants my candid opinion, I am sorry to believe that some of them do.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can only say to the Senator that I did not know of it. So far as my experience has gone in reference to these naval gentlemen—I am very sorry to say it—they seem to be in a state of mind to trouble me with the increase of other grades, as they are that they themselves are not increased enough.

Mr. MALLORY. I assent to that entirely. There is no harmony of principle among them; and when I say that some of the pursers wish to reduce the line officers, I believe the statement is of some of the line officers themselves. I would not draw any invidious distinction; but I would say, that in this as in all military services in all countries, there is a pride of grade which induces a man, however much he may be contented with his own individual pay, to become discontented when he contrasts it with the pay of somebody else. That is the way in our own service, and I have never known harmony to exist between them, either in the Army or Navy on this point. Mr. FESSENDEN. All I want to say is, that I want to set that matter right in reference to the statement of the Senator, and to show that he, in his bill from the committee, has increased the pay of all these grades without exception, and that I have applied the same rule precisely to one that I have to others. I have made no distinction between them; but I have made fifteen years the period from which the highest pay is to date. I have not confined it to one more than another. I apply it to surgeons, lieutenants, and all.

Mr. MALLORY. But you cut down line officers.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Unquestionably I have cut down some, and I will give the reason. I cut down the officers in the highest grades, because I think the increase I propose to give them on their present pay is more than they need. It is the necessity for increasing the pay of the high grades of captains and commanders, that there is for increasing the pay of lieutenants, and the Senator says so himself. His argument is so. He has stated here, from his place, within half an hour, that the most meritorious class of officers, and the poorest paid, are lieutenants. I have cut down the highest officers from what? From their former pay? Not at all. I have increased it.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not say the lieutenants were the most meritorious. I said they were the poorest paid.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I thought he was eloquent on the watches they kept, and the services they rendered, and the storms they buffeted, and I do not know how many other things they did—all, I take it, in the line of their duty, and for which they are entitled to no very particular credit. No man is entitled to particular credit for doing no more than his duty. I am not disposed to glorify anybody for doing service that he ought to do. The Senator is entitled to as much credit for the attention he gives to his duties, in his place here, as a lieutenant for his. This attempt to make distinctions that ground is entirely useless, in my judgment. But what I was saying was, that I have not reduced the pay of the leading officers of the Navy from what it was before. I have increased it, I think, in every instance. The only difference is that I have struck off two or three hundred dollars from the committee's estimate. That is the difference.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator says he has increased the pay. I will remind the Senator, with his permission, if he is under the impression that he has not reduced the pay of the leading officers, that he has at least not increased it. He has not reduced the leave pay of commanders. It is now $1,800; he keeps it at that. He has cut down from the proposition of the committee $375 from the sea pay of the captain.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How much have I increased it over the present pay by law?

Mr. MALLORY. You have increased it slightly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The complaint of the Senator is that I have not predicated my bill on his.

Mr. MALLORY. No; I understand the Senator to say, that in every instance he has increased the pay of the grade from what it is now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think I did not say in every instance, but in many instances, and I believe in all.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say that in captains, in commanders, and in lieutenants, I do not see this increase.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask what a captain commanding a squadron gets now?

Mr. MALLORY. Four thousand dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This bill of mine gives $5,000. What does a captain get when commanding a single ship?

Mr. MALLORY. Three thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In my bill it is $4,000. What does he get on other duty?

Mr. MALLORY. Three thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Three thousand five hundred dollars now?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; and there is where the Senator does not increase it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does a captain get the same as a lieutenant?

Mr. MALLORY. Precisely.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think he ought, according to your own plan of paying more for sea-service.

Mr. MALLORY. Neither do I.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How much does he get when waiting orders?

Mr. MALLORY. Twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have left that.

Mr. MALLORY. Now as to commanders. They receive $3,000 as is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I propose to give $250 increase. On other duty I give them $2,350.

Mr. MALLORY. That is an increase.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On leave or waiting orders?

Mr. MALLORY. There the Senator has not increased it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Commanders of five years' standing I give $3,000 on sea-duty; and $2,700 on other duty, and so on. In some particular instances I have not increased; but my statement was that I had increased the pay of all classes of officers.

Mr. MALLORY. You have in some cases, but not in others.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Of course.

Mr. MALLORY. You have not increased captains, commanders, or lieutenants, in some instances.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That may be; but it does not follow, because an increase is necessary in some instances, that therefore it is necessary in all. I do not hold to any such logic. The question after all is, whether it is enough, not whether it is increased, but whether it is sufficient pay; whether it is honorable pay; whether it is all they ought to receive, and what they ought to be satisfied with. This is a matter that you must judge for me according to his rank so much beyond the amount that you pay to others who happen to be a little younger, and not so fortunate in relation to that matter, as all idle to my mind. The question simply is whether, when you pay a captain $4,000 when in command of a vessel, $2,500 when in command of a navy-yard, where he has a house and servant at his disposal, and $2,500 when he is doing nothing, you do not pay him enough. If the Senate think otherwise, of course they will pay more. I am not particular about it; I am not quarreling about the dollars and cents. If I have made an error in reference to that, I shall be very glad to correct it; but the fact is, that it seems to be nearly impossible for any error to be made on our side. Nobody believes we can ever pay officers too much, under any circumstances. I believe we may in some grade. I do not say that we do; but if I have made a mistake about that, of course I am perfectly willing to have it set right.

The truth is, Mr. President, that in legislating on these matters we are pained altogether too much by the solicitations of those about us. If it was possible for the Senate and House of Representatives to be rid of the continual and the contradictory and diverse statements of those interested, we might legislate with some hope of success. For myself, I have been very far from the beginning of raising the pay of our naval officers, putting it up to a reasonable point, so that men could be well and even handsomely paid for their services in all the grades. I have been anxious, too, that in passing a bill we should get one that would accurately express the policy, and not only go through this body, but go through the other. My fear is that by grasping at too much you will lose the whole; that it will be found impossible to pass any bill. I hope it will not be so, but that is the fear I entertain.

With regard to the last section which was spoken of by the Senator, I have no sort of care about it; I merely put it in for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is what is called this bogus pay. If anybody moves to strike it out, I am perfectly willing that it should be struck out, if such is the sense of the Senate. Now, sir, before I sit down, I will, for the sake of setting this matter right—although, as I have said before, I have not the slightest expectation of my amendment passing; for as to contending against a committee, whose members are all members of the committee attend to the question, it is useless—make a few modifications in my amendment, to which, I presume, there will be no objection.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor in the chair.) No action having been taken on the Senator's amendment, it is in his power to modify it as he pleases.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-nine I move to strike out "$750" and insert "$500," so as to bring it back to its proper position in regard to lieutenants commanding at sea. That will allow them $2,500 instead of $2,750, as I at first proposed. The Senator from Florida says that I have got too much; that there should be a distinction between a lieutenant commanding and a commander, and he has moved to strike it out of his bill. In line thirty I propose to strike out "five" and insert "three," and the same alteration in line thirty-five and in line forty; and in line forty-five to strike out "fifteen" and insert "nine." That would place very nearly every lieutenant at once in a proper position, and he will certainly ought not to complain. That will give lieutenants the increased pay at the end of each three years instead of each five. I wish to make my bill conform to the Senator's in regard to pursers, by inserting the word "thousand," in line eighty-eight, "one hundred," so as to read "$2,100 on other duty;" and by striking out, in line ninety-seven, "six," and inserting "eight," so as to give them $2,800 after fifteen years' service. In line one hundred I strike out the words "at sea $2,000, or other duty," so that it will read, "professors of mathematics shall receive when on duty $1,500, and on leave or waiting orders $1,000."

Mr. MALLORY. Strike out your bogus pay. Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator can move that. I want the Senate to understand it. The Senator proposes that every lieutenant raised in consequence of the action of the retiring board shall have full pay. If the Senate think that ought to be done, I have no objection. I propose also, in line three of section three, to strike out the words "Navy and," and insert "at;" so as to make the substitute conform to the original bill. It seems to be the general sense of those with whom I have conversed that the proviso to the first section of my substitute should be stricken out; so as to abolish the bogus pay, and put all the officers on full pay. I am willing to modify it in that way, to strike out the proviso, beginning at line one hundred and sixty-five, and that will tend to the necessity of striking out the word "further," in line one hundred and seventy-three. These are all the modifications I propose to make; and the Senate having the amendment before them can do with it as they may see fit. I care no more about it than any other individual.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to suggest an amendment or two before the question is taken. I prefer the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the original bill, because it is less complicated; out the age, my judgment, than the main grade in both; there are too many nice distinctions as to various terms of service. I want to suggest some modifications to the amendment, and to draw the attention of the chairman to them, to know if they would not make it better than even his amendment, agree with pretty nearly everything the Senator from Florida said about these naval officers; but I think his bill contains too many grades, and at the same time it conceals what I believe to be a fact, that these terms of service will place pretty nearly every man, when he reaches a lieutenant's pay, at the very highest pay. Most of them served in lower grades than that of lieutenant, for about the term which he has named as giving them the highest pay. I have heard him state how long he serves as midshipman and master and agree with me, and I have calculated it out that it would reach pretty near the time for the highest pay by the time he gets a lieutenant's commission. I think one fatal difficulty in making these grades is, that the committee do not consider that the expense of these officers of all classes is greatly owing to their social position, and in that respect they all enjoy the same social position. A midshipman enjoys the same social position as a commander or a captain—I mean in society; I mean in supporting his family at home; and therefore I think the lower grades will get more claims on regard, and will have their pay increased, than the higher ones.

The Senator from Florida has but two rates of pay for commanders; and I should like to know why there should be any more for other officers. He has in his bill, that commanders on shore, for the first five years shall receive $2,800. They now have $2,500. That is an increase of $325. For the second five years they are to have $3,150, which is an increase of $650. Then every commander on other duty, for the first five years, is to have $2,625. That is an increase of $160 over what he now has. For the second five years he is to get $2,825, which is an increase of $925 on $1,900—very nearly fifty per cent. I can see no propriety in making such a large increase in that class of officers. They are well paid now. I like to see the grade of lieutenant raised.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the Senator to state his figures over again, as to commanders. I think he is mistaken.

Mr. SIMMONS. Commanders now receive $2,500 when on duty, and when on shore for the first ten years in the service. The Senator has increased them in one instance $325, and in the other $650. When they are on other duty they get $1,900.

Mr. MALLORY. Twenty-two hundred and

Mr. SIMMONS. The book says $1,900.

Mr. MALLORY. That is the bogus pay you have got.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have got such pay as is printed in the Register. The amendment of the Senator from Maine gives them $2,750, and after five years $3,000. Now, I want to call the attention of the Senator to the first grade of lieutenants. The bill gives them the same pay when they are on sea-service and on other duty. The Senator from Florida says he wants to encourage lieutenants to active sea-service.

Mr. MALLORY. That pay is so low that you cannot encourage them to active sea-service.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the very reason why it ought to be increased. I say the Senator's bill conflicts with his argument. He wants to make a distinction between lieutenants on sea-service and on shore-duty; and yet he puts them both alike in the first grade. That, I think, is wrong. I have drawn an amendment that I propose for these lieutenants, and I should like to ask his attention to it particularly. I propose that for the first seven years after the date of their commission as lieutenants they shall receive $1,800 a year when on sea-service duty; that is $500 more than he gives the first grade—and $1,500 when they are on shore-duty—the same as he gives them. I think if lieutenants were paid that much difference for sea-duty, they would desire to go to sea-duty, and I think it would be impossible for the Secretary of the Navy to get them on shore; but if they have no more pay at sea than on shore, there is a great inducement for them to keep on shore. I think it is proper to raise the pay of these lieutenants immediately when they get their commission.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say to the Senator that there are but fifteen lieutenants of that grade.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not go by numbers. I go on the principle.

Mr. MALLORY. The principle has no application. There are but fifteen who will be supplied this equalized pay of $1,500 afloat and on shore.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator if he can justify his bill according to his argument, when it gives them the same pay on shore as at sea? It is no matter whether there is one or twenty of them; the principle is wrong. I would put it, that after seven years from the date of their commission they should go to the highest pay, $2,250 at sea, $2,000 on other duty, and $1,500 on leave or waiting orders. I should like to have his assent to that principle, but that is the fair rule. Make but two grades of it.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say to the Senator in reply to that, one word. No man is made a lieutenant before he has seen six years' sea-service; and the Senator proposes to give him the highest pay after he has seen seven years' service as a lieutenant. That makes thirteen years' sea-service altogether, which is precisely the point at which the committee have provided the maximum.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I do not want so many intermediate steps. I give them, when they receive a lieutenant's commission, $1,800 if they are actually at sea, and $1,500 on shore. You give them $1,500 at sea and $1,500 on shore. I think there is a propriety in raising them as soon as they get their commissions, and not making them depend on sea-service. I know the fact that midshipmen in the Navy fifty years ago were competent to navigate any ship. I happened to be at sea in a storm about fifty years ago, when we lost the navigator and lay to. We fell in with the frigate Constitution, and Captain Hull put a midshipman on board who carried us into a port and was as good a commander as the one we had and who was lost overboard. He managed the ship as well as any one could, and he was a mere midshipman—perhaps twenty-five years old. They are competent to do so now, before they are to be lieutenants, to sail a ship anywhere; and they have seen a good deal of service.

My opinion is, that when a lieutenant gets to be thirty years of age, which I understand is about an average age when they are appointed, that he has seen some of life, that his expenses are nearly as large as they ever will be; and, as I said before, the social position of even a midshipman and lieutenant is precisely the same in society as that of commanders. Their expenses are very nearly the same. I will put it this way, I think the time will come when they are when they begin life, and not to let them commence in debt and go wading through life under a load of debt.

I hope the Senator from Maine will accept my amendment in reference to the lieutenants, to have but two classes of them: the first class to receive for the first seven years $1,500 at sea, $1,500 on shore-duty, and $1,500 when waiting orders; after seven years from the date of their commission, $2,250 at sea; on other duty, $2,000; on leave, $1,500. It is much more simple.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I really think it stands better as it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. The first action in reference to commanders has only two classes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection to it if it meets the views of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. It will simplify the bill very much. To make those young officers wait three years on precisely the same pay they have now, is a hardship. I certainly think they are more entitled to the increase of pay than any class except midshipmen, and I am glad they have been increased.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Any amendment stands now, in regard to those lieutenants who receive the lowest pay, in the first three years of their service; that is, it is understood that it will apply to that grade of officers who are promoted in consequence of the action of the retiring board, and there are but few of them. I do not suppose there are a dozen on the Register who come under it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not go into the retiring board, and inquire how these men came into the Navy, but propose to fix a rule that shall last and be based on principle. Whether they come into the Navy by accident, design, or in some other way, I hold that every officer of the Navy is ready to do his duty, and that if he does not go to sea it is not his fault. I will give them more encouragement to go to sea than either of these bills does, by giving them larger sea pay for the first seven years. I think that is the way to encourage officers to go to sea, and not have this sea-service performed when they are acting men as midshipmen, and then pay them fifty per cent. advance after they get to be lieutenants, not because they have gone to sea and done duty as lieutenants, but because they did the service before they reached that point. If the Senator will accept my suggestion, his bill will be very much improved, and I should greatly prefer it to the bill of the committee in reference to the lieutenants.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state to the Senator that in November next there will be not four lieutenants on the list who will not have been there over three years.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why should you cut them down?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not cut them down; but they have just come into the Navy, and I think it is fair that they should serve three years before receiving an increase.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not wish to make any distinction in this class of officers from the date of their commission to the time they have served seven years.

Mr. HAMMOND. I wish to offer an amendment to be inserted after the fourteenth line of the bill of the committee:

All other captains, one per centum per annum, on their present leave or waiting-orders pay, for and on account of every year of their sea-service, as shown by the records of the Navy Department.

The Senate will perceive that this is the same amendment which was offered yesterday by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEABODY], with two important alterations. He moved to strike out the fourteenth and fourteenth lines, and insert the provision in lieu of them. The effect of his amendment would have been to give this one per cent. per annum to all captains on shore-duty; but the intention now is to give it only to those who are waiting orders, and those who are upon leave; and it is so stated in the amendment. I do not propose to make any speech or explanation further than this; and I think the less speaking and explanations we have at this stage of the bill, the better for the prospects of the bill.

Mr. HUNTEE. I should like to know how the amendment can be introduced.

Mr. HAMMOND. On the pay fixed in this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that the present purpose is to try to get the pay of these officers in dollars and cents, to be shown on the statute-book, and these percentages and all sorts of cetera only confuse it. If the pay fixed for captains when waiting orders and on leave is not enough, raise the amount in round numbers; but do not put in a percentage, so that we shall never know what an officer has. That is the great objection to the present system.

Mr. DAVIS. I object to this whole system of accumulating pay by length of service. I favor the system of accumulating pay by length of service; but to vary it according to sea-service is a discrimination which I should consider injurious to the Navy and to many individuals of it. It is not the option of an officer whether he goes to sea or not. The number of our officers exceeds greatly the vessels we keep in commission. Thus it may happen that an officer spends a large portion of his life applying for orders to go to sea. This is a proposition, then, to reward him who has been the favorite of the Department to the injury of him who has not. That is with me a radical objection.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, that I am very much of his opinion; and if the Senate would prefer to put it on the table, I have no objection; but I have followed what seemed to be the views of the Senate; and particularly of the chairman of the Naval Committee, in putting it on sea-service. About one-half of one per cent. for each year in commission would be about equal to this, and perhaps more so. If the Senate perceives that I shall propose one-half of one per cent. for each year in commission. Perhaps, however, it would be better first to test my amendment in its present form.

Mr. DAVIS. The necessity for the increase of pay depends very much on the length of service; more than upon grade. It is well known that the wants of an officer, particularly if he be an officer having a family, accumulate with years, and not with promotion. The reformation which I think it would be proper to add to the branches of military service would therefore be an accumulation of pay in periods of years, or an annual accumulation, so that there should be a constant increase, independent of that pay which attached to the grade.

Another objection. An officer, from his extraordinary merit in a particular branch of the naval service, may be required on shore. The Navy has no scientific corps. An officer peculiarly skilled in ordnance—a case which we were considering yesterday—may, for that very reason, have a short period of sea-service. He would have a right to claim, under such legislation as this, however necessary his service might be on shore, that he should be permitted to go to sea; and it would be rank injustice to keep him on shore for the public service, and cut down his pay because he has not been allowed to go to sea. This is another objection to the whole system of graduating the pay by length of service.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I move to strike out on the 24 page of the original bill lines twenty-two, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty, and insert in lieu thereof:

All other commanders, $2,250.

The line to be stricken out provide for commanders on leave or waiting orders; the preceding lines provide for those on sea or other duty. I see, by an examination of this bill, that surgeons on leave, who have been in the service twenty years and upwards, are to be allowed $2,250. So, in respect to surgeons, there is to be allowed the same amount after the same period of service. Now, sir, there is not a commander in the Navy who has not been commissioned more than twenty years. The most of them have been in the service for double that length of time. I see no propriety in proposing to pay a commander, who has charge of the flag and of the whole vessel, $300 less per year than you propose to pay to the person who merely has charge of the ship's finances, and pays off the crew, or to the person who may have cured a fever or cut off a leg. It seems to me that there should be very different lines between the pay, so far as those officers are concerned, the commander should receive a higher pay than the surgeon or the purser; and I hope the chairman of the committee will find it agreeable to accept my amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I suppose the object of the Senator from New Jersey is to equalize the leave pay of commanders in the Navy and pursers?

Mr. TEN EYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. I have no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not very familiar with the rules of the Senate. I understand that both these bills are in the Senate, and are considered; but if the amendment of the Senator from Maine be adopted, will the original bill be still open for amendment?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) No, sir. The motion is to strike it.

Mr. GRIMES. It is therefore necessary to perfect both of them before taking the vote. Well, sir, I propose an amendment to both bills:

And be it further enacted, That there be, and there be hereby created a bureau of registry and detail, which shall be presided over by an officer of the line of the naval service, in which shall be kept complete registers of all the officers and men attached to the service, and which, under the authority of the Navy, shall have the assignment of all officers and men to duty, and general charge of the personnel of the Navy. The duties of the bureau shall be to receive and detail shall be maintained, as far as practicable, to those of Adjutant General in the Army of the United States.

I do not know, Mr. President, that I have very fully clarified affairs required in this amendment, for I have not had much experience in that line; and I have not offered it with the most remote idea that it will be adopted; but for the sake of ventilating the subject, and drawing out from the chairmen of the committee the views on Naval Affairs, and other gentlemen who are more conversant with the subject than I am, their views. It has occurred to me, and I think it is the opinion of a great many friends of the Navy, that that branch of the public defense is altogether too much under the charge of the civil department. I have no argument under the control of naval officers.

I have no more to make in favor of its adoption, and merely submit it for the consideration of the Senate, acting upon the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina, that the less that is said by Senators like myself on this subject the better.

Mr. MALLORY. I perceive that the Senator understands this part of the subject thoroughly; but I trust he will not offer the amendment to this bill. I concur with him entirely that our Department of naval affairs requires reorganization; and I hope to see it effected, and in far more numerous respects than the one he suggests. We want many things; that, perhaps, is as essential as any. The bill before us is confined entirely to the question of pay; it does not touch the organization. If there are errors anywhere in naval affairs, they are in the organization, and the fault is with Congress, and not with the Department. It is impossible that our naval affairs can ever be administered properly as they now stand. I admit that; and I admit that it is the duty of Congress to legislate. Perhaps the Senator may not know that a suggestion has been made, within a month past, that the committee should turn its attention to a thorough reorganization of the Department of naval affairs. This is only one of many important matters which are necessary; a bureau of detail, of personnel, in the Navy, similar to that in France and England. I suggest whether it is proper on a pay bill to seek to incur it with this. I will go heart and hand with the Senator in the measure he proposes, and other measures of reform, on a proper occasion.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am satisfied that the Senate was not aware of the character of my amendment which was voted down a few moments ago; and, in order to have the privilege of presenting it again, I leave a chance to the majority, which will obviate the only objection that was made to it. I now offer it in this form, to insert after line fourteenth:

All other captains, one-half of one per cent. per annum upon their present leave or waiting-orders pay, for and on account of every year from the date of their commission, as shown by the records of the Navy Department.

In every other grade of the service, except the grade of captain, the leave pay has been increased by this bill; but, strange to say, there has been no increase in the leave or waiting-orders pay of captains; whereas, after all, perhaps, the most meritorious class in the Navy. Much is said of lieutenants. Nothing can be said against them. Their merits and their claims are all that have been asserted of them; but I may now be more meritorious than the captains. I have been brought up in the school in which old and faithful servants are tenderly provided for; and to cast captains off in their old age, when they have served their forty, fifty, or sixty years in the Navy, with large families around them, and to refuse to give them the same advantages of an increase of pay that you give to officers, seems to me unjust.

Now, sir, the ground upon which we profess to raise the pay of the Navy is, that the cost of living has increased from fifty to one hundred per cent, since 1835. If the increase of the cost of living renders it necessary to raise the pay of captains in the service, does it not render it equally necessary to raise the pay of captains on leave? Can they live cheaper comparatively than any other captains, or any other members of the service? I think it is highly unjust that every other grade should receive an increase of pay while waiting orders, and the captains none. It is particularly unjust; because, as the chairman of the Naval Committee has said, most of the seafaring life is in the early part of an officer's life; and, as he grows in years and in service, he has less opportunity to perform sea-duty. We may have five lieutenants in a ship, but only one captain; and it is, therefore, impossible for all the captains to go to sea; and the few that do go, are not receiving better pay, they are receiving worse. I think that it is not right; and I trust the Senate will allow this addition to their present pay.

Mr. MALLORY. If the Senate think proper to adopt this amendment, I shall be very glad of it; but it is done by the Senate, that is about to reject it, except the Committee on Naval Affairs have not proposed it. In the committee it was agreed not to recommend an increase of the leave pay of the captains; but the committee were governed in that determination rather by expediency than by what was due to the officers.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will say this to the chairman: as such a bill as this, it is very difficult for one not better acquainted with naval affairs than I am, to recollect particularly all the details; but I know that it would be highly anomalous in the committee that the pay of captains were raised from ten to twenty-five per cent, and I really do suppose, until after the bill came in here, that it went clear through the whole pay. It may be that the chairman stated at the time that it was not to apply to the captains on leave; but I made on such impression on my mind, and I really was of opinion that it went clear through.

Mr. MALLORY. The effect of the amendment, as I understand it, will be to give the captains on leave a half percent. upon their leave pay, which is $2,500, for, during every year they have held a captain's commission. Perhaps the effect of it will be best shown by taking the oldest and the youngest captain. The oldest captain's commission bears date February, 1831, twenty-nine years ago. The oldest lieutenant is Captain Shulcrick, (for the senior captain is a flag officer)—has held his commission twenty-nine years, and therefore fourteen and a half per cent. on $2,500, would be given to Captain Shulcrick on his leave pay. The youngest captain has held his commission since March, 1857. It would give him one and a half per cent. on his leave pay. These officers would get this increase only upon their leave pay. It is of course directed to this contingency. This bill does not touch a number of old officers who have had their commissions at an already advanced age, and whose commands on shore already; and going down the list of captains, before their time shall be reached again for a command, they will have retired from the world entirely. The bill does not in any wise increase their pay, because the leave pay of captains is not included in the bill, but only for that class of officers. They are an old and meritorious class of officers, who have served the country very faithfully. It is for the Senate to say whether it will take cognizance of their claims or not, or leave them to their own fate, as it is now. The committee did not bring forward the measure. I think the committee were unanimous on that. Perhaps my friend from South Carolina was not present when the committee came to that conclusion.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not rise particularly to discuss this amendment, but the pay as fixed by the bill of the Naval Committee, so far as it regards captains, I believe I shall be found to agree as any gentleman on this floor to give perfectly liberal pay to every class of public officers. I desire the passage of this bill. I think the main necessity for the passage of the bill is in the inferior grades of the Navy; I should not agree upon that. I think there is danger that this will not pass, because the rate of increase in the higher officers, as reported by the committee, is too great—not that I should not be willing myself to allow that rate of pay; but I know that opinion is not shared very generally by the House, and certainly not in the other House. If we pass the bill as reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, I am afraid it will fail, and being a friend of the bill, I desire to amend that portion of it which provides for the pay of the higher grades of the Navy.

The honorable Senator from Maine has presented a substitute for the bill of the Naval Committee, in the principles of which I do not concur. I agree with the committee in the principle of depending a rate of compensation in the Navy upon the rank of the officer, and the length of his service; and I should be for putting a clause in the bill providing for those cases of injustice to which the Senator from Mississippi has alluded, and the Senator from Maine also—making some provision for the case of officers who are determined by reason of peculiar qualifications for their service on shore, that service should be computed in their pay as sea-service. I would thus provide against doing injustice to that meritorious class of officers; but keep up, for the general benefit of the Navy, the short very generally the pay depend on the length of sea-service, and not on the length of time an officer has served in a particular grade. I do not go into that question, because I do not desire to delay to postpone the passage of the bill; but in looking at the pay of the officers of the higher grade in the first section of the bill, I desire to offer words of two amendments—not that I would be indisposed, as I said before, that the rate of pay should remain as they are in the bill reported by the Naval Committee, but rather to compromise differences of opinion both in this and in the other House. The Naval Committee has reported for captains under $4,375. The bill of the Senator from Maine proposes $4,000. The Senator from Maine says he did it principally because $75 was a fraction. If Senators would put it at $350 a month, which would be $4,200 a year, it would be a fair compromise between the views of the Committee and the views of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask the Senator if he is proposing the amendment now?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am going to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. My amendment is pending.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand that; but I am speaking about that, and I was going on to propose to make the pay of a captain on duty at sea $4,200, which is $350 a month, a little more than the bill of the Senator from Maine proposes, and somewhat less than the committee proposed. Then give the captain on other duty (which the Senator from Maine proposes to put at $3,500, and the committee at $3,975) $3,800 a month, making a difference of fifty dollars a month between the pay on other duty and the pay at sea; and then I would, instead of taking the leave which the Senator from South Carolina proposes for the captains on leave or waiting orders, increase the amount of their present pay from $2,500, and make that $2,750. Thus the pay of the three grades of captains would be $2,750, $3,600, and $4,200. This would strike a middle course between the proposition of the Senator from Maine and the proposition of the Naval Committee; it would be a compromise between the two bills, and in that shape, in my judgment, the bill would have a much better chance of passing the other House.

So far as the remaining items in the bill are concerned, I have no objection to the report of the Senator from Maine, for the reason I have stated. I should like to preserve the feature of making the increase depend on sea-service; but I am afraid the rates of increase in the higher grades are too great to allow the passage of the bill in the shape in which it is now reported. I make this statement with a view that if we shall vote down the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, which has that objection: that it renews the old practice of percentages, and keeps us in the dark about what the officers are getting—if we vote that down, I shall then move to increase the leave pay of captains from $2,500 to $2,750.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to see my amendment put in its real shape, but I was not in position to propose that the percentage should begin from the first commission in the Navy.

The Secretary read the amendment, to insert after line fourteen:

All other captains one half of one per cent. per annum upon the leave pay or waiting orders, as increased on account of every year from the date of their first commissions in the Navy respectively, as shown by the records of the Navy Department.

Mr. HAMMOND. I differ from the Senator from Louisiana in taking his views as to the proper organization of a navy, and as to the proper mode of graduating the pay of a navy. In the Senate, and in the other House, there is nothing of which members are so utterly ignorant as they are of a navy and of naval affairs, and the proper organization and regulation of it, and its proper scale of pay for a navy. I doubt if there is a member in either House, unless it might be my friend from Florida, who could command a gunboat; and yet here we undertake to legislate on our own scale of things. I have seen a gross ignorance; that we have better imitate some State that has been successful in organizing a navy, and I think that the closer we imitate England the better it will be for us.

The English navy has been organized on a principle which the reverse of that proposed by the Senator from Louisiana. In the English navy the pay of the subordinate officers is inferior to our pay. When you reach the grade of captains in the English navy, they give them about the same that our captains get, $3,500 a year. It seems to me that the English navy is not so much inferior to the British navy. If the British navy had been arrested at that point, England would never have ruled the seas for these two hundred years. There are eleven grades in the British navy above the rank of captain, and the grades command a higher price, and it is in the struggle for these high prices which has made the British navy what it is.

Sir, I do not know how it may be to those who are accustomed to the sea; but for myself, I would rather have a navy in which the pay of the officers was paid through the hardships of the naval service up to the rank of captain. No one would do it, I think, unless he was driven on by enthusiastic love for that profession, or by a great panting for renown, or by patriotism, or by the hope of some great pecuniary reward within his reach in the future.

In England, the moment a man steps into a grade beyond the rank of captain, his salary doubles instantly. As the captain of a squadron, he gets nearly as much as it is proposed to give to the captain of a ship. The pay of a captain is nearly $500 more than we propose to give to the captain of a squadron. The moment he steps from that into the rank of a first-class commodore, or, what is nearly the same thing, a rear admiral, his pay is doubled, and he is increased to within fifty dollars of $11,000. When an officer lands there, as he commonly does, after forty to fifty years of service, he is in smooth water; he is in port; he has a competence. He has at length reached the point, after his long career of hardships, where he is safe, and his family provided for. It is by this system that the British have built up their great and glorious navy.

In a few years he passes from grade to grade, and the next rank of vice admiral gives him a salary of about $13,000. The rank of admiral gives him a salary of $15,000, and the admiral of the fleet gets about $16,500. In addition to all this, the British officers in command upon naval stations get a percentage upon all the gold and silver they carry, which sometimes amounts to a few hundred pounds from a single cruise of a thousand pounds in a cruise. Besides, whenever they carry a flag officer or ambassador, or any distinguished person, they are allowed by their Government, for table money, from half a guinea to a guinea per diem. All these perquisites pertain to subordinate officers, who, by command in addition to the prize money they get; and this, for they are always at war, gives the subordinate officers, on the whole, perhaps greater pay than ours.

But the grand object in the organization of a navy is to secure a port and an independence in old age to the weather-beaten sailor. If we were to organize upon this same principle, we have a commodity who would remain in the length of his service, be admiral of the fleet, and entitled to the pay of one. I do not propose to give here so large a salary as is given in England; but my idea is, that we ought to assimilate to it, and encourage the young men of the Navy to undergo all the difficulties of their early years, that they may at length enter a harbor of safety. We have, besides, an officer in our Navy who would be a vice admiral; and we have seven who would be rear admirals, according to their date of service, and who would come in, on anything like the English system, for an immense increase of pay. Now, we have nothing higher than a flag officer, and only six of them; and the pay that flag officers get in our service, when at sea in command of a squadron, will even by this bill be less than the table mark that would be allowed to such an officer in the British service.

Sir, we boast of our Navy; we boast of our shipping; we speak of ruling the sea; but I assure you that on the miserable pittance you are now giving your officers your Navy would ultimately sink. I would sooner apprentice a son of mine to any trade than apprentice him in the Navy under the present system.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest to the Senator that if he would offer his amendment so as to make it a specific sum, he could probably not increase of the shore pay. It seems to me it would be unjust that we should increase every other officer, and not increase the pay of the captain on shore. I think the Senator from Louisiana proposed a specific addition.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move it as an amendment, then, to the proposition of the Senator from South Carolina, to insert after line fourteen a provision making the pay of captains on leave or waiting orders, $2,750, instead of $2,500, as it is now; and I would have no objection to $3,000.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will take $2,500.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am willing to move that as an amendment. If that be adopted, I shall then move to make the other changes I have indicated, and the result would be, that captains on leave or waiting orders would get $250 a month; captains on other duty than commanding at sea, $300; and captains commanding at sea, $350; making fifty dollars a month difference in the different grades of captains.

Mr. HAMMOND. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana in lieu of my proposition.

Mr. MALLORY. We have already adopted an amendment making the leave pay $2,500. I suggest that the Senator propose to strike out $2,500, and insert $3,000.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I did not know that amendment had been adopted. I move to strike out " $2,500," and insert " $3,000," as the leave pay of a captain.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I now move to amend the bill in the eleventh and twelfth lines, by striking out "$4,375," and inserting "$4,300." That will make the pay of captains on duty at sea $350 a month, or $125 a year less than the Naval Committee recommend, and it is about half way between their proposition and that of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I now move, in the thirteenth and fourteenth lines, to strike out "$3,937," and insert "$3,600." That will make the pay of captains on other than sea-duty, $3,600, or $300 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend the original bill in the seventy-fifth line, to make it correspond with the bill of the Senator from Maine, by striking out the words " $850," and inserting " $1,000," so that it shall read:

Every passed midshipman, when on duty as such at sea, $1,000.

The bill of the Committee on Naval Affairs increases the pay of a passed midshipman only $100, raising it from $700 to $800. I believe the chairman of that committee admitted him to-day that those now at the Naval Academy will not pass through this grade and become lieutenants until they are in the neighborhood of thirty years of age. In the mean time, they will have discharged twenty ten or twenty years efficient service to the country acting as masters, or, at any rate, in the grade of passed midshipmen. I think it is unfair to require them to perform that duty at a pay of only $850, when you are paying your other officers so much more, in proportion to the amount of time they have been receiving.

Mr. MALLORY. I have no objection to the amendment. I hope we shall have a vote.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON. I offer an amendment as an additional section to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the increased pay heretofore provided and allowed, shall apply to officers on the reserved list who entered into active service, and during the time of such service.

Mr. President, under the act "to promote the efficiency of the Navy," it was provided, in relation to the officers who should be retired by the retiring board, that:

" Shall relieve the leave of absence pay, or the forgoing pay to which they may be entitled when so placed, according to the report of the board and approval of the President, and shall be entitled to further increase of pay, subject to the orders of the Navy Department at all times for duty."

That law left the retired officers subject at all times to be called upon by the Secretary of the Navy to re-enter service. The act of 1857, which amended this law, provides that:

" So much of the act of February 28, 1855, entitled 'An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy,' as renders reserved officers ineligible to promotion, be, and the same is hereby repealed."

So that officers who have been placed on the reserved list are now eligible to promotion; but the act provides that:

" Reserved officers may be promoted on the reserved list, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; but such promotion shall be subject to the condition that, should they be called upon to re-enter service, or should they, by such promotion, take any higher rank," &c.

So that, according to the present law, an officer on the reserved list, although he may be promoted, can never draw any pay higher and above that which was allowed to him at the time he was thus promoted. Therefore in the present condition of things a lieutenant may be promoted a commander, and he may be called upon by the Secretary of the Navy to perform the duties of commander, and yet have nothing but a lieutenant's pay. He may go even beyond that, and after a while be promoted to a captaincy, and he may be called by the Secretary of the Navy into active service, and he may command a ship, or, indeed, he may command a squadron, and yet, while performing all these high and responsible duties, he will be entitled to nothing more than the pay of a lieutenant. The Senate, I think, will see how unjust this may operate on the reserved officers. Several of those reserved officers, I understand, have been called into active service.

Mr. MALLORY. Let the amendment pass. It does not require argument.

Mr. IVERSON. If the Senator from Florida says there will be no objection, I have no desire to detain the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. When these officers are called into active service, they should have the pay I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. IVERSON. The bill did not provide for it. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON. It is in order now to offer a substitute for the original bill, as well as for the substitute of the Senator from Maine.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) It is not in order, because there is an amendment to that effect already pending.

Mr. IVERSON. At what time would it be in order?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. After acting on the amendment now pending.

Mr. IVERSON. Can I not propose to amend the substitute of the Senator from Maine by striking it out and offering a substitute for it?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be in order.

Mr. IVERSON. Then I propose as a substitute for that of the Senator from Maine, to strike out all of his amendment after the word "that," and insert:

"From and after the commencement of the present fiscal year, the pay of every officer in the Navy shall be that established by the act of 1855; and that the pay of every commissioned and warrant officer be increased (in addition to the pay of such officers) the commissioned officer be, and he is hereby, entitled to receive from the above date one additional ration for each and every five years of service in the Navy; and that the compensation pay of officers' subsistence be thirty cents per ration: Provided, That no officer commanding a squadron shall receive more than $5,000 per annum; and no officer commanding a single ship or performing shore duties shall receive more than $4,000 per annum; and that no officer on leave, furlough, or waiting orders shall receive more than $3,000 per annum."

This is a simple proposition, I think, which everybody can understand. It is to add twenty dollars a month to the pay of all the officers of the Navy, and to give them what is called the service ration which prevails in the Army. The bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the proposition of the Senator from Maine, to some extent, seem to me to be of such a complicated character that I cannot say I understand it. At least I have found them so, and I do not very much whether all the various propositions which are contained in these bills—the various gradations of pay and rank and service, together with the comparison between the pay which these bills provide and the pay which at present pertains in the Navy—can be or have been very well understood by Senators. I confess, at any rate, that I have not been altogether able to comprehend them, and I question very much whether any one but a Philadelphia lawyer could be able to understand them, unless a person who had made the subject his peculiar study as the Senator from Florida, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has done. The bills are complicated, and it seems to me to be exceedingly difficult to understand them; and I will simply the whole matter by a proposition which everybody can understand, and which I think will operate fairly and justly on every arm of the service.

It has been complained that the pay of officers of the Navy has been too small, and I admit it. I think their pay ought to be increased. The pay established by the act of 1835 is too small for the present condition of things. The expense of living has increased since that act was passed, and I think that it is not unreasonable to well substat on the amount of pay which is allowed them by law. It ought to be improved; but one of the great complaints which the officers of the Navy have been constantly urging against their present pay is, that the officers of the Army have been better provided for in this respect than they have been. They say that you have increased the pay of the officers of the Army and you have not increased their pay. You have made them inferior in position to the officers of the Army so far as pay is concerned. They say that this injustice has been done to them in this way. When you increased the pay of the officers of the Army, you added twenty dollars a month to the pay of every person in it. I propose to do the same act of justice to the officers of the Navy by increasing the pay of each officer of the Navy by an amount of $240 a year; and I propose to put them on an equality with the officers of the Army in another very important matter, and one which perhaps is more important to them than the other; and that is, to give them what is called the service ration; to provide that for every five years of service they shall be entitled to an additional ration to be computed at thirty cents a ration. In this way the object of the Senator from Mississippi can be accomplished, and I think there was great reason in his remark that as an officer advances in years he is entitled to more pay than he is entitled to receive by way of an advance in grade. As an officer advances in years, his responsibilities, cares, and expenses increase. I meet that by this proposition to give an increased ration for every five years of service; so that when an officer grows old, he has a large and expensive family around him, who will have an increased pay to meet that exigency on his resources. I think there is eminent justice in this; and it puts officers of the Navy, in both branches of my proposition, precisely on an equality with officers of the Army. We have no objection to the pay of the officers in that branch of the public service twenty dollars a month, and they live according to law, a ration for every five years of service, which is commuted at thirty cents.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the Senator from Georgia if he means to give twenty dollars a month additional to the young midshipmen of the Navy?

Mr. IVERRSON. No, sir; they are not commissioned or warrant officers of the Navy, as I understand. They have no warrant or commission until they pass out of the naval school and go into active service. I propose to put officers of the Navy and officers of the Army precisely on an equality. I have made a little calculation to see what would be the operation of this provision upon some of the terms of service. An officer of the Navy who has been forty years in the service would receive eight additional ratings, which, at thirty cents a rating, would be two dollars and forty cents a day, and would make, for a year, $576 additional compensation. That, added to the twenty dollars a month, or $240 a year, would make the total increased compensation for an officer who has been forty years in the service, $1,116. According to that, if there were no limit to the proposition, if he was in command of a squadron, he would, his present pay being $4,000, receive, with this addition, a compensation of $5,116 per annum. An officer who has been thirty years in service would receive three extra ratings, which will be worth, for a year, $176, and added to the monthly increase of twenty dollars, would make his increased pay $576 a year; which, added to his present pay, if he commanded a ship, would give him $4,116 a year. It goes on in the same proportion, through the lower grades, according to the term of service.

The objection might be urged that, without any limit to this proposition, the pay of these officers, some of them who have been in service for fifty years or more, would be much larger than what is proposed by any of the bills. That is not so now before us. I therefore propose to limit that by the provision I have attached, which provide that no officer in command of a squadron shall receive more than $5,000 a year, which I believe is about the limit proposed both by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Iowa, and that no officer in command of a single ship, or upon duty on shore, shall have more than $4,000 a year, which I think is about the amount allowed by the other bills to captains who command single ships at sea. I also provide that those who are on shore, or on leave, or on furlough, as the case may be, shall never receive more than $3,000. That is in accordance with the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana, which has just been adopted by the Senate.

I guard all these various points by the provision which I have inserted, and I put the officers on an equality. An old officer who has been fifty or sixty years in the service, without these restrictions, if he was waiting orders or on furlough, drawing the service ration and the $240 a year additional pay, would receive $4,500 or $5,000 a year when he was on shore doing nothing. I guard against that by the provision. These provisions do not reach the case of the senior commanding officer of the Navy. I allude to Commander Stewart, or any other officer who may hereafter be in command of the Navy. He will receive, under the operation of my substitute, if it be passed, his present pay, with $240 a year increase and one service-ration for each five years of the whole time he may have been in the service. If he has been, for example, forty years in the service, his pay will be $5,116. If he has been sixty years in service, his pay will be larger than that. I do not propose to limit the pay so far as the senior officer of the Navy is concerned. Let him take whatever amount his age and services may entitle him to demand.

This seems to me, Mr. President, to be a simple proposition, which will operate justly on all grades; and it will accomplish one other result. The complaint is that the subordinate officers of the Navy, the lieutenants, are not as well paid in proportion as those of the higher grades. While I propose to give to the higher officers an increase of $240 a year, I propose to give the same amount of increased pay to the lieutenants and all the inferior grades of commissioned and warrant officers. When you add $240 to the present pay of a lieutenant and the same sum to the present pay of a captain, you perceive that you raise the proportionate amount of the lieutenant more than you do that of the captain, and therefore you do in this way provide a larger proportionate compensation to the lieutenant than he now gets according to the present system.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLAY] asks me how far under the provision of my substitute will compare with the pay of the same grades in the bill under consideration? I answer, that there will be very little difference, I think, because my limitation precludes the pay from going much beyond the amount contemplated by the bill. I only ask that the years and ratings shall be taken.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. As to the order in which the questions are taken, I understand that the amendment of the honorable Senator from Maine has been perfected in form, and the vote was about to be taken between that and the original bill. Now I understand the honorable Senator from Georgia to move to strike out all of the amendment of the Senator from Maine and substitute his proposition for the original bill. It seems to me that it is not in order to do this, because the result in the natural order. We should first take the action of the Senate between the amendment of the Senator from Maine as perfected and the original bill, and if that amendment is voted down then try the other.

Mr. HUNTER. As I understand it, this is an amendment to an amendment. It is the usual order in which we vote. We vote on the proposition of the Senator from Georgia as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Maine. If that is voted down, then the vote comes up on the proposition of the Senator from Maine, and last on the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You cannot substitute one substitute for another.

Mr. HUNTER. A substitute is nothing but an amendment. There is no such thing as a substitute known to parliamentary law. It is an amendment, only it is a larger amendment than if it proposed to strike out a particular section.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand from those more experienced that it is not in order.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not in the audience or substitute in the present stage of the proceedings because I was informed by Senators around me that if I waited until the bill got into the Senate, without offering this amendment, I could not then propose it. I am not familiar with the rules of motion, and am, therefore, guided by other gentlemen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK.) The Chair will state to the Senate that it is strictly in order for the Senator from Georgia to move his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Maine; and if it prevails, it takes the place of the amendment of the Senator from Maine, and then the question before the Senate will be as between that and the original bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand the rule as stated by the Chair; but I wish to state the fact that a substitute was strictly an amendment. It is now proposed to substitute the entire amendment of the Senator from Maine by a new amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I would inquire of the Senator from Florida if he has examined into the effect of his proposition upon the warrant officers? I understand that we have carpenters now in the service who are receiving $1,242 a year. He proposes to increase their pay $240, making it $1,482, as much as you pay your lieutenants who have been in the service, some of them twenty-five years.

Mr. IVERRSON. I really am not very familiar with the various grades of the Navy, and I supposed that warrant officers were confined to those who had commissions; for instance, captains and lieutenants and midshipmen and passed midshipmen and masters. I did not suppose that warrant officers included various subordinate stations, such as carpenters and others; but I am willing to take them out and provide that they shall be excluded from the operation of the law. I do not know that their pay ought to be greater than it is.

Mr. MALLORY. I trust that this amendment has no chance of passing here. I do not see what benefit we can derive from passing it over either of the bills. Of course I prefer that from some consideration, but I think it is a waste of time. It will have in view in increasing the pay. I do not know, nor can any man state, what pay this amendment of the Senator from Georgia gives. As to these service rations, I am opposed entirely to paying officers by stipends in this way, by rations or by any percentage, so that the Register does not show at a glance the precise pay each officer receives. That is the fact, I have ascertained with other tables, that they do not show the pay. I have instituted no comparison with the Army, and I wish to institute none. The Army receives a cent of pay too much. I will, therefore, for fear of saying anything on that subject in reply to the Senator from Georgia, but I am so sure, that the warrant officers now receive, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, some of them, $1,240. They are boatwains, carpenters, gunners, and sail-makers. This is an increase that the Senator did not contemplate, I know. His amendment will affect various other points that he does not see now. If the sums, as he says, approximate to those in the bill of the committee, then I do not see any object to be gained. I think it will complicate matters very much.

So far as the Senator's remarks go that this bill is difficult to understand, I will say that nothing can be more perspicuous. It provides that every officer doing such a duty shall receive so much money. It follows out the pay table that has been in use since 1835. Nothing can be more plain. There is no concealment. The bill shows the precise pay which the officer will receive—and he can receive no more—in dollars and cents. Every grade is mentioned, and there is no ambiguity, no possibility, I think, of misunderstanding. But we would take a good deal of calculation to ascertain what any officer would get under this amendment. I think the Senator's object is the same as mine—to give the officers a fair rate of compensation; and I think he will attain it best by the committee's bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I propose to strike out the word "warrant" in my amendment, and confine the increase to the commissioned officers, so as to obviate the difficulty the Senator from Iowa has suggested. Now, the Senator from Florida says that it will be difficult to ascertain what will be a fair rate of compensation under this provision. I do not think there is the least difficulty on earth. The act of 1835 establishes the pay of each one of these grades. If a man has served five years in the service, is the Senator unequal to understanding that he has served five years? A child can understand that. The honorable Register will show you the date of his appointment, and the expiration of the five years will show that. Nobody can misunderstand that. Then, when he has served five years, he will get an additional rating of thirty cents a day. Cannot the accounting officers ascertain very easily how much pay he will get? If he has served ten years he will get two additional ratings, at thirty cents a day. There is not a page in the Senate who cannot tell you in five minutes, or in less time, how much additional pay he will receive. I do not think we will not be able to ascertain the pay these officers would get under my amendment. Surely the Senator cannot be in earnest. Any man, no matter how little sense he may have, can tell you in a moment how large will be the pay. I think that the Senator from Florida has no weight whatever.

Then, what I say about these bills is comparative. I know anybody can understand what is meant when it is said that a captain commanding an squadron is paid $3,000 a year, and that you raise our grades, from captain down to midshipman, and you are increasing their pay, and who can understand what is the relative increase from the present pay of all these various officers? Here are comparisons made. Some say a lieutenant ought to be paid $1,000 a year, and some say a captain ought to have more than a lieutenant; and there are comparisons between the various grades of officers, and the time of service in the Navy. You are regulating this by a general provision. I say it shows some confusion in the Senator's mind. I intend to proceed with the officers of the Treasury, I suppose, and the Senator from Florida may be able to work it out very well; but I confess that, at the first blush, I do not exactly understand the operation and effect of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I think I have said all I have observed, I will say that Congress has never as-terfered to fix the price of the service ration in the Navy; but it has done so in the Army. In the Navy it is left to the President of the United States. He changes the service ration according to the actual value of the ration. It stands now at twenty-five cents. I should be very sorry to see any interference with it. He also fixes the rates of wages to seamen, according to those paid at the mercantile ports. I should regret to see any change there. So far as any complication goes, I say the bill is good for every officer's pay appoints his grade, and, in opening the pay table, it is impossible to mistake it. I say the amendment requires a computation or estimate, and I think we ought to compute at as much as possible. We ought not to be required to make a computation, but when we open the Register we should have the pay distinctly set before us. I do not know anything that the amendment is aimed at which is not better attained by the bill, and it aims at some things which I think we had better let alone.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend from Georgia, in sustaining his amendment, thought proper to refer to the Army pay; and he has shown us very clearly that he does not know anything about it. He does not understand the difference between the Army and the Navy allowances; he does not understand the difference between elements and things which are not such; and hence he arrives at his conclusion. There cannot be a worse method of increasing the pay of a body of officers than giving the same sum to every one of them. I do not think a worse method could have been adopted of increasing the pay of the Army when it was done, than by giving twenty dollars to every commissioned officer. The wants of officers, the expenses of officers, the just claims of officers, vary with their service and their rank. That I think, is now to be found in the present arrangement of the Army; for, though a lieutenant does not get by some five hundred dollars as much as has been repeatedly stated here—I will correct that now once for all—I believe he gets too much when he first enters the service. A man's pay, compelling him to the most rigid economy, would improve the efficiency and future independence of the officer of the Army, as I doubt not it will in the Navy.

I think the Senator from Iowa very well asked whether this proposition did not raise midshipmen. Are they neither warrant nor commissioned officers when they are at the Academy? If not, then how do they get there? What is a commission? It is not a necessity that a commission should be conferred by the Senate. It is a letter of authority granted by the President, or one of the heads of the Departments acting for the President. I think you will find in strictness that these midshipmen are commissioned officers. I have the same opinion in relation to cadets. I think the question of the Senator from Iowa was well put.

Again, as to the matter of an increase in the ration: it was a method adopted, and by a large portion of the Army never approved. They decidedly preferred that a sum of money should be paid each man each term of service. There is a bill now pending before the Senate, introduced from the Committee on Military Affairs, which recommends that we shall change the system, and, instead of giving a ration every five years, give the value of a ration for every five years. But the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, while he has properly, as I think, and certainly very politely, avoided making a comparison with the Army, still refers to the fact that by a reference to the Navy Register you can see exactly how much the officers get. I ask him, are there no allowances that do not appear in the Register? Mr. MALLORY. I know of none.

Mr. DAVIS. Do ratings at sea appear in the Register? Is that commuted and charged to the pay of the officer? Mr. MALLORY. I do not call the ration the officer receives at sea an allowance. His pork and beans and bread do not appear.

Mr. DAVIS. Do the lights appear? Mr. MALLORY. The lights are for the use of the ship. The officer gets none that I know of. Mr. DAVIS. Do boys to wait on the officer? Does that appear?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly not. They are mustered among the crew.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the furniture of the officers occupy at navy-yards appear?

Mr. MALLORY. They are not allowed any. They furnish their own quarters.

Mr. DAVIS. Have they none in their quarters?

Mr. MALLORY. It was abolished some years ago. I think improperly; and I think it ought to be restored.

Mr. DAVIS. I agree it ought to be restored. It is right to be granted to the Army, too, but it never was; and all these allowances are charged in the return as the officer's pay, and announced here from year to year as so much received by the officer. He moves about from post to post; is compelled to sacrifice his furniture at one place, because it is the Government's interest to send him to another. There are frequently no quarters furnished him. Then we have an annual report, showing how much he got for commutation of quarters; how much he got for forage for his horses, when it is well known that the allowance for forage does not half cover the expense, if he keeps them in any of the principal cities of the United States. It does not cover a third of the expense, if he keeps them in this city, if you include the equipments of the animal. These, which are taxes on the officer, summe which he can get only by encountering expense, are to be added to the Army pay, and constantly paraded to show how much they get. On a proper occasion, I think I shall endeavor to show that the pay of the Army is low, falling far below what is constantly stated.

Mr. MALLORY. I think so, too, but I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS. With the admission of the Senator, then, I will stop.

Mr. MALLORY. I was not aware that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs was addressing his remarks to me, for I have not drawn any comparison between the pay of the Army and the Navy. I have abstained from using the word "Army." I have not alluded to it in the remotest possible degree.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe I did you that justice, sir.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator from Mississippi was rather caustic in his remarks, when he said I did not understand the pay of an officer, or know anything about it. The remark was certainly gratuitous in my opinion, and very ill becoming the Senator or the place that he occupies. Sir, I think I understand what the pay of an officer is, and I understand what his commutations for his rations are. The law gives him so much pay per month, and then gives him rations, and gives him horses, gives him servants, and gives him rations for those servants.

Mr. DAVIS. How do you make out his pay? Mr. IVERSON. By adding to what he gets thirty cents for his rations commuted, and his allowance for traveling expenses. Anybody can understand that. I do not think it requires any great amount of brains to comprehend it. I certainly admit that I have not quite as much sense or as much brains as the Senator from Mississippi; but I think I can understand that much at least.

I can understand that when you add twenty dollars to the Senator's officer's pay, he gets $40 a year in addition to what he formerly received; and if you give him three or four rations a day, and say he shall draw thirty cents for the ration, I can understand how much pay he gets in that way. I do not think it is difficult to understand that.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator vaunts of himself as being able to understand. I want to know how much an officer gets who has three horses?

Mr. IVERSON. I do not know; but on looking at the bill, I can see it. Anybody can understand that by looking at the law.

Mr. DAVIS. It is eight dollars for the forage of a horse. How much does he get for keeping three horses a month?

Mr. IVERSON. Twenty-four dollars a month, of course.

Mr. DAVIS. That is exactly one of the things which I see the Senator does not understand, when he adds it to the officer's pay, because he keeps the horses, and takes the money, and it does not pay the actual cost of keeping them.

Mr. IVERSON. I know that, because there is a provision in the law which restricts him. If he keeps the horse, he is entitled to eight dollars a month for the horse's forage, or he can feed the horse out of the rations. The commutation of forage is eight dollars a month. That is the law. I understand that as well as the Senator from Mississippi. But the object in introducing this proposition is to show that you have increased the pay of the Navy, and you have increased the commutation price of the ration from twenty to thirty cents. Now I want to put officers of the Navy on the same footing; give them the $240 a year in addition to their present pay, provided it does not go beyond a certain amount in certain grades, and also give them the additional service ration for each additional five years' service, at thirty cents a ration. That is precisely the law in relation to officers of the Army; and I propose to put the naval officers on precisely the same footing. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. IVERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. Now I have some business to offer to the amendment of the Senator from Maine. I propose, after line ninety-eight, to insert:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to diminish the first pay of any person now on sea or shore duty, during his present term upon such duty.

I understand that there are a few cases in which, if the proposed pay be adopted, there will be a reduction. This is to prevent a reduction whilst they are on their present duty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to modify the substitute which I proposed, to make it conform to the amendment which was made to the other bill in relation to the pay of commanders, on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey. In line twenty-three, after "eighteen hundred," and insert "twenty-two hundred and fifty;" and also in line "twenty-seven I strike out "two thousand," and insert "twenty-two hundred and fifty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. DAVIS. I have another amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Maine, to insert after line forty-nine:

That those retired or dropped officers of the Navy whose promotion to a higher rank was involved in their restoration to their original positions on the active list with that rank also dated back, shall receive the difference between the pay of said rank from the back date thereof to the date of the confirmation of the same by the Senate of the United States, and the pay of a former rank which they have actually received for that interval: Provided, The amount individually does not exceed that which any officer of like grade now holds in respect to his rank on the active list has received.

I understand the fact to be that some of the officers who were restored were restored with higher rank, their promotion having been delayed; and the consequence was that it gave them the pay of the grade which they were waiting when they were restored, instead of that to which they were entitled.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope that amendment will be withdrawn, or at all events will not be passed. The Committee on Naval Affairs have that subject under consideration now.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not understand the matter to be before the committee. I do not wish to interfere with it. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine as amended to the original bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to offer this amendment, to come in after line fifty of the amendment:

Every chaplain shall be permitted to conduct public worship according to the manner and forms of the church of which he may be a member.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I do not think there is the slightest necessity for that. A regulation has been recently made by the Secretary of the Navy, which covers the whole ground, upon a bare suggestion that they were interfered with. The regulation of the service is now, and I am mistaken if it is not printed in this year's Register, that the chaplain may offer divine service, and not read it; he offers it in any way that may be most consistent with his own views of propriety, and the same preferences may dictate. There is nothing whatever in any department of the Navy to interfere with the offices of a chaplain, if he be Presbyterian, Episcopalian, or Methodist. He pursues any service he chooses, and the slightest intimation that any interference is made brings forth a rebuke from the Department; and recently, to remove the complaint, that regulation has been established.

Mr. HAMLIN. There have been complaints made to this body—surely at the last session there were a very considerable number of memorials or petitions presented and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs involving this very point. Serious charges at least were made by chaplains that they were coerced to a different service from that of the church to which they belonged. Now the Senator from Florida tells us that has been remedied by a regulation of the Department. I must confess my utter surprise at the opposition made by the Senator from Florida here. I am amazed at it. I cannot comprehend it. The matter, he says, is regulated by the rule of the Department. That rule may be changed to-morrow. Is it not better to regulate it by law? Is it not better that all these things should be regulated by law? The law will beat reach the object. It seems so to me. If it was thought to be remedied by regulation, it is better remedied by law.

Mr. MALLORY. The regulation to which I allude is this:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 17, 1868.
It is understood that the Navy commissioners' regulations of 1818, requiring chaplains "to read prayers at stated periods," have therefore been construed to require them to offer prayers; and such will be the construction.

ISAAC TOWNE,
Secretary of the Navy.

To offer them—not necessarily to read them. The Senator expresses his amazement. I have only to say to the Senator that I am very much amazed that a man of his judgment should attempt to imply that a state of things exists in the public service which does not exist; and although the complaints may have been made here, they have been before the Navy Department for investigation, and they have never yet found any single authenticated instance in which such interference has taken place. I know that one of these chaplains has complained to the Navy Department in language which would not be read in decent society, and I know it is there in the Department now with the Secretary's indorsement that it is unfit to go on file; but I have yet to learn for the first time that there is any interference or attempt to compel a chaplain to offer divine service in a particular manner. The only objection I hear is, that this is an implication of the Secretary of the Navy desire any particular form of prayer. It is possible they may desire the briefest.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am of opinion that this had better be regulated by law, if it is liable to abuse at all; but I believe that within my own power, as the amendment is offered to my amendment, and I can accept it. I do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires the action of the Senate to confirm it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I accept it as a modification of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It still requires the action of the Senate, as the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to offer the following amendment, to add after the previous amendment: Every chaplain retained in the service shall be required to report annually to the Secretary of the Navy the official services performed by him.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, as amended.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bingham, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Davis, Doolittle, Duran, Frelinghuysen, Giddings, Harlan, Harlan, Iveson, King, Seward, Sumner, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wade—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Benjamin, Briggs, Bright, Brown, Claiborn, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Douglass, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Greer, Gwin, Hunter, Kenney, Latham, Mallory, Mason, Nicholson, Paul, Powell, Salisbury, Sebastian, Wilson, Wigfall, and Yates—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARLAN. I now desire to offer the same amendments, which I have just proposed to the substitute, in regard to chaplains, to the original bill, to come in after line sixty-five.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that the bill has not been reported to the Senate; and it is not in order to offer amendments to the original bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POOR in the chair.) The first question will be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, and if no objection be made, the question will be on concurring in all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to object to one or two of those amendments. I want to call the attention of the Senate before the vote is taken—to the amendments from Louisiana to the increase made to the pay of captains on other duty than sea-service, and on leave. I heard him indicate that he would increase the leave of absence pay $250; and I think that would be more in harmony with the general character of the bill, and I would not object to that. I think that he would add $500 to those doing no service at all. I think that is too large an increase in proportion to that class.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We can reserve that amendment and take a vote on the others. The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the exception of the amendment indicated by the Senator from Rhode Island, the question is on concurring in the other amendments which were made as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now, the question is on the amendment indicated by the Senator from Rhode Island. Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana whether it would not be better to put the $4,600 class at $3,750, and the $3,000 one at $2,750. That would be putting $250 to the present $4,600 grade.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will merely remark to the Senator from Rhode Island that, in my opinion, and I believe in that of many others, the difference before was too great between the pay of a captain waiting orders and a captain at sea, which was $1,000. The pay of a captain at sea was now put at $3,600, or $100 more than it was before; and the pay of a captain waiting orders on shore at $3,000, leaving a difference of $600 between captains on shore and at sea. It arranges the pay as the service is rendered, varying $100 a month for each grade of service; those on leave on shore at $250 a month; those on duty, $360 a month; and those on duty at sea, $350 a month; leaving the bill as reported in relation to commanders of squadrons. I think we had better let it remain as it is, as it has been fixed. It is hardly worth while to change it.

The amendment was concurred in. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now open to further amendment.

Mr. WIGFALL. I move to strike out the second section, in these words:

Sec. 2. And he shall be ordered that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to increase or modify the present pay of the chiefs of bureaus in the Navy by more than one per cent.

If the chairman of the committee accepts the amendment, I will say nothing.

Mr. MALLORY. The amendment is not to strike out the proviso adopted yesterday, but only the section down to the word "Observatory." I do so.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I should like some explanation of what this amendment means. I do not like to vote in the dark.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will explain it in a moment. I understand that this bill provides generally for the increased pay of the naval officers, and that there is sea-service and land-service. There are distinctions made between sea-service and land-service, and here is the second section which makes a proviso that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to increase or modify the present pay of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department or the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory. I wish to understand very clearly what an officer's land should not be paid as much as one at sea, I do not understand that if one happens to be distinguished on account of his information and his science, and therefore should have been taken and put at the head of one of the bureaus, because he happens to have brains, there should be a tariff put upon his understanding, and that every one else should get the benefit of this bill except those who, in consequence of their scientific attainments, are put at the heads of bureaus; that every one else should be paid extra, and that the men who have the capacity to be put at the heads of the bureaus should be cut out of all the increased pay. That I do not comprehend; and for that reason I have moved to strike that out.

It is said by the Senator from Minnesota that if this whole clause is stricken out, his amendment goes with it, and Captain Dahlgren is, therefore, cut down of his extra pay. I surely did not mean that. I wish him to have his increased pay; but I only desire that those officers who are put at the heads of bureaus should get their pay as requisites, and also their increased pay. I do not see why a discrimination should be made against the heads of bureaus.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If the Senator will permit me, I have prepared a section in accordance with what I stated before. I do not understand his object; but I stated that I thought there ought to be a provision in the bill for the cases of those officers who, on account of their scientific attainments, are assigned to special service on shore. I propose that these be inserted instead of the second section.

That in all cases where officers have been or may be ordered to perform special services on shore, by reason of superior talents, or other qualifications, the service of such officers, whilst thus employed on shore, shall be compensated as sea service, and entitle such officers to the same increased pay as if they were performing sea service.

Mr. WIGFALL. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, and offer that as mine.

Mr. BROWN. I can see in the phraseology of the Senator's amendment, that it would subject the Secretary, or whoever audits the account, to a determination of the propriety of the pay, and whether an officer on shore had been chosen to perform a particular duty on account of his superior scientific attainments. I do not see how that is to be determined. One Secretary orders an officer to perform extra shore duty, and probably does not put it on the record that he made the appointment on account of the officer's superior scientific attainments. He comes and asks for his pay, and he claims it because he was simply ordered to perform shore duties, and the reason for this is not apparent on the record. Then what is to be done?

In addition to that, I am opposed to the whole amendment. I do not believe in paying these land-lubbers any extra compensation. All this story about gentlemen coming close to the heads of bureaus on account of their scientific attainments contains in it a great deal of gammon. Whenever one of the bureaus belonging to the Navy Department is vacant, there is a universal scramble in the whole Navy for the occupancy of it. Let the bureau of yard and docks, or any other one, become vacant to-day, and there will be fifty applications for it. Why? Because it is a nice comfortable place to shore.

No one has a higher respect than I have for Lieutenant Maury; but how is he situated here? Pursuing his scientific studies, and encountering the hardships of the sea, never buffeting the waves, not exposed to the storms, not exposed to any danger whatever; and I really see no reason for increasing the compensation of that officer as an officer of the Navy. If as a scientific agent of the Government, he is not receiving enough compensation, then pay him as Superintendent of the Observatory, but not as an officer of the Navy, and for services never performed as a naval officer; and so with the rest of them.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 89.

I am for increasing the wages of naval officers who perform naval service, who go to sea, who hold the waves, who encounter the perils, who keep watch at night, who expose themselves to the perils of the deep, to the beatings of the storms. They are the men who, on a naval bill, are entitled to an increase of compensation; but those gentlemen who live on shore, sleep comfortably every night, quietly in their closets pursue their scientific studies, are meritorious enough in their way, and if it be that the Government should have such officers, as possibly it ought, then I should pay them, pay them amply, reward them munificently, if you please, but reward them as scientific gentlemen, and not as officers of the Navy. Sir, it is not creditable to the Navy that you put men on an equal footing with naval officers, who perform no naval duty, and have performed none, some of them for nearly a quarter of a century. I want this to be a bill to pay naval officers, not men who have titles in the Navy, who are called lieutenants or called captains, but who shirk the sea and all its perils, who are glad to live on shore. I am not going to vote a dollar of increased compensation to any of that class of officers. To those who pursue the Navy as a profession, encounter its perils, and its responsibilities, I am ready and willing, and anxious, to vote increased compensation.

MR. GRIMES. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I want to vote and vote against it, because I believe it is calculated to create a species of favoritism.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. MALLORY. I trust my friend from Louisiana will withdraw his amendment.

MR. BENJAMIN. I did not intend to amend myself; but when the Senator from Texas proposed to strike out the second section of the bill, I preferred that this should be inserted rather than to strike out the section entirely.

MR. MALLORY. I trust the Senator from Texas will withdraw the amendment; it will decrease the pay of the head of the Observatory, and I am opposed to striking out that.

MR. HAMLIN. Let us vote it down.

MR. BENJAMIN. I will vote against the amendment myself.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—Yeas 10, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chace, Cleggman, Collamer, Foot, Hammond, Humphill, Iveson, Kenney, Latham, and Welfall—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Benjamin, Bigler, Bligh, Bingham, Briggs, Bright, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Crittenden, Doolittle, Douglas, Drake, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Graves, Grimes, Gwin, Hamlin, Harlan, Malory, Mason, Nelson, Packer, Polk, Powell, Rice, Salisbury, Schuchman, Sumner, Tuck, Treadwell, Wells, and Yates—36.

So the amendment was rejected.

MR. HARLAN. I desire to renew the amendment that was adopted in Committee of the Whole to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine in reference to chaplains, to insert after line six of the bill.

Every chaplain shall be permitted to conduct public worship according to the manner and forms of the church of which he may be a member; and every chaplain retained in the service shall be required to report annually to the Secretary of the Navy the official services performed by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time, and passed.

MARKS ON NEWSPAPERS.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will report to the Senate a bill for the House of Representatives, with an amendment to an amendment of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 341) authorizing publishers to print on their papers the date when subscriptions expire. The House concurred in all the Senate amendments except the last one, for which they proposed to substitute:

And it is further enacted, That on all drop letters, delivered within the limits of any city or town by carriers under the authority of the Post Office Department, one cent each shall be charged for the receipt and delivery of said letters, and no more.

MR. YULEE. I move that the Senate concur. I have examined it, and it accomplishes the purpose.

The amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Buchanan, Secretary of the Interior, announced that he had yesterday approved and signed a joint resolution for the relief of Commander H. J. Hartstone, of the United States Navy.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. GREEN. I move now to take up the resolution, which lies on the table, providing for an adjournment on the 30th of April. ["Oh, no!"]

MR. CLAY. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, March 28, 1860

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. STOCKTON. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

UNITED STATES ART COMMISSION.

MR. PETTIT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table a letter from the Secretary of War, communicating the report of the United States Art Commission, that it may be referred to the Committee on the Library.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

MARY E. CASTOR.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There is a Senator on the Speaker's table, granting a small pension to Mrs. Mary E. Castor. The first husband of this lady, Lieutenant Whitehorn, of the Army, died of disease contracted in the service of the United States Army, was sent to California, and was stationed for a year or more at Fort Tejon, where he and his family were obliged to live in a tent, and where he contracted disease, and died. His widow is now left entirely destitute. She is nearly blind, and is without any means of support whatever. I hope that, under these circumstances, the House will consent to have the bill taken up, and passed.

MR. FARNSWORTH. I call for the regular order of business.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope my colleague will not object to this case.

MR. FARNSWORTH. I know of many cases before the House that are just as meritorious as this one.

The bill (S. No. 247) for the relief of Mary E. Castor was taken up and read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. Castor, widow of First Lieutenant Thomas F. Castor, late of the United States Army, at the rate of $36 66 per month, from the 9th day of December, 1859, for and during her life or widowhood.

MR. BURNETT. I do not see any reason why this bill should be taken up now, in preference to others.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope my friend from Kentucky will let this bill be passed. It is a small matter. This lady is nearly blind, and has no means of support.

MR. BURNETT. Very well; let it go.

The bill received its several readings, and was passed.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REGULAR ORDER OF BUSINESS.

MR. GROW. I call for the regular order of business.

MR. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to suspend the call for a moment, until I can report a couple of cases from the Court of Claims—cases which I was prevented from reporting the other day.

MR. GROW. I must insist on the regular order of business.

BANKS THROUGHOUT THE UNION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the condition of the banks throughout the Union; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS OF NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, transmitting copies of the following memorials and joint resolutions of the Legislative Assembly of that Territory, which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed:

Memorial for payment of certain Indians called into service against the Apache Indians, by Acting Governor William S. Messervy, A. D. 1858-59; passed 1857-58.

Memorial for the payment of volunteers under Major Ramon Luna, organized under orders No. 22, of Colonel E. W. B. Newby—passed 1857-58; Preamble and joint resolutions asking for the payment of militiamen and volunteers aforesaid—passed 1858-59; and Memorial asking for the payment of militiamen and volunteers aforesaid—passed 1859-60.

KENTUCKY CONTESTED ELECTION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State for the State of Kentucky, transmitting certificates in relation to a contested election case from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Elections, and ordered to be printed.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

The SPEAKER stated that the business regularly in order before the House was the consideration of House bill No. 7, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territory of the United States, and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah; the pending question being on Mr. NELSON's motion to recommit, on which the previous question had been demanded, but not seconded.

MR. NELSON. I desire to withdraw the motion to recommit, and ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

MR. MORRILL. I object to the withdrawal of the motion.

MR. BRANCH. I now ask permission to present an amendment to the bill. The amendment has been printed by order of the House.

MR. MORRILL repeated his objection.

MR. BRANCH. The question on Vermont cannot object to the withdrawal of the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the right to withdraw his motion; and now the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina is in order.

MR. BRANCH. Who is entitled to the floor, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to it.

MR. NELSON. I yield it to the gentleman from North Carolina, with the understanding that he will renew the previous question.

MR. MORRILL. I object to any arrangement of that kind.

MR. BRANCH. The gentleman from Tennessee having withdrawn his motion to recommit, I present my amendment to the bill.

MR. MORRILL. I object to the gentleman from Tennessee yielding the floor for any purpose whatever.

MR. BRANCH. I believe the gentleman has no right to object to a member yielding the floor, whenever a member pleases to do so.

Territory shall otherwise provide, the seat of government of the same shall be at Carson.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely want to get that amendment in. I do not wish to be understood as opposing the motion to postpone.

Mr. MILLSON. If there is any disposition to postpone the consideration of this bill until Monday, I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman will yield the floor to me, I will state what I wish to do.

Mr. MILLSON. I trust that the bill will not be passed under the operation of the previous question, for I think that discussion can only be desired here for the purpose of improving the provisions of the bill, adjusting its details, &c. I can hardly persuade myself that there will be any gentleman, and if any, but very few, who will object to the great objects contemplated by the bill. I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I listened with some pain to the remarks of my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. BRANCH], and to the suggestions made by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. TAYLOR], and I have sought the floor for the purpose of replying to them and to the positions they have assumed.

Mr. BRANCH. I would like to know from my friend from Virginia to what remarks of mine he alludes?

Mr. MILLSON. I always listen to the gentleman with pleasure, and state with diffidence any opinion I may have, but I am not sanctioned by his judgment and conviction.

Mr. BRANCH. I think that my friend must have misunderstood what I said.

Mr. MILLSON. Perhaps so.

Mr. BRANCH. I think that no one could condemn more strongly than I have in my remarks the practice of polygamy, and the laws of any State or Territory which went to sanction it and to sustain it. I discussed the question solely as one of political power, and I presented a mode of abolishing polygamy, which I conceive will be more efficient and successful than the measure of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me say a word.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object to all interruption.

Mr. REAGAN. I listened with respect to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object.

Mr. MILLSON. I have the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. And I object to the gentleman yielding it.

Mr. REAGAN. I only want to say a word. I hope that I may be allowed to say it.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the gentleman from Virginia must proceed with his remarks without interruption, or yield the floor unconditionally.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not want to enter into any discussion.

Mr. BINGHAM. All this thing, if there is to be a postponement, interfere with the business of the morning hour and prevents committees getting in their reports.

Mr. REAGAN. I move, then, that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until next Monday, after the morning hour.

Mr. GROW. I hope that that will not be done.

Mr. MORRILL. This subject has been before the House for four years, and it ought to be acted on and disposed of.

Mr. MILLSON. I yield the floor only for the purpose of moving a postponement.

Mr. NELSON. My reason for desiring that the bill shall be postponed until Monday next, and made the special order for that day at one o'clock, is that there are members of the Committee on the Judiciary who desire to make reports before the expiration of the morning hour. There are, too, gentlemen who desire to discuss this bill, and I think that a reasonable amount of discussion will awaken the House, in all probability, to something like unanimity in its favor.

Mr. GROW. The morning hour is out; so that committees can make no further reports today. That reason of the gentleman, therefore, is not a good one.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the morning hour is out, then let us go on with the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to the further postponement of this bill. It has already been postponed once. Let it be voted on now.

Mr. LAMAR. Is this question of postponement debatable?

The SPEAKER. Only so far as the merits of the motion to postpone are concerned.

Mr. MILLSON. If the motion is to be debated, then I claim the floor, which I yielded only for a postponement of the question, if that could be accomplished by general agreement.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Then, let the House proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will submit a motion to the House, which, if adopted, the morning hour has expired. If the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union this bill will go to the Speaker's table, where it can be reached at any time by a majority, after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The bill will come up the first thing in the morning, as an unfinished report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up the Army appropriation bill.

The WATROUS IMPRISONMENT CASE.

Mr. HICKMAN. Before the question be put, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution, which I suppose will not be objected to.

There being no objection, the following resolution was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, in their examination of the matters referred to them on the memorial of Alacra Mendenhall, Eliza Spencer, and William Alexander, asking the imprisonment of John T. Watrous, United States district judge for the district of Texas, be authorized to receive for papers and papers, and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation.

BILLS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are several Senate bills on the Speaker's table for reference. I hope that before we go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union they will be taken up and not lie on the table.

Mr. COLFAX. I will state that one of the first bills on the Speaker's table is a House bill, with Senate amendments, the consideration of which will take but a few moments. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have already considered the amendments, and it will not take any time to dispose of them.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider and dispose of, in their regular order, the bills on the Speaker's table, as follows:

WASHINGTON MARKET-HOUSE STOCK.

An act (S. No. 192) authorizing the corporation of Washington city to make a loan and issue stock for $200,000, for building a market-house; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

PUBLISHERS' LABELS AND DROP LETTERS.

An act (H. R. No. 241) authorizing publishers to print on their papers the date when subscriptions expire, and in relation to the postage on drop letters; with amendments of the Senate.

Mr. COLFAX. I will state that, in order to amend the bill, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have already considered these amendments in committee. There is but one of the amendments that is of any importance. I think that after they are explained there will be general concurrence in them.

First amendment of the Senate:

In line thirty-four, after the word "name," strike out the words "the ledger account showing."

Mr. COLFAX. I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

In line thirty-four, after the word "expires," strike out the words "the wrapper number."

Mr. COLFAX. I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

Add the following as a new section:

Section 1. That if further enacted, That all laws declaring this postage at the rate of one cent each shall be charged on all drop letters or letters placed in any post office not for transportation, but for delivery only, be and the same are hereby repealed, so far as they apply to drop letters delivered within the limits of any city or town by carriers, under the authority of the Post Office Department, on which letters the rate of postage imposed for the support of the carrier system, in such city or town, shall be collected, and no more.

Mr. COLFAX. I will state that the phraseology of the Post Office section is somewhat involved, and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have unanimously agreed to recommend the adoption of an amendment which will more clearly attain the object desired by the Post Office Department. The Senate amendment was proposed hastily and is reported in the Senate by the Post Office Committee. The object of it was stated by Mr. YULEE, the chairman of that committee, in the debate, of which I have the report in my hand; and to carry out that object more certainly, I move the following amendment to the amendment:

Strike out the Senate amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That on all drop letters delivered within the limits of any city or town by carriers, under the authority of the Post Office Department, one cent each shall be charged for the receipt and delivery of said letters.

I will explain this in a moment. By the existing law, the Post Office Department is required to charge one cent for the drop letter, and one cent for its delivery by the carrier. The effect of this is to throw all the drop letters in large cities outside of the Post Office Department, and into the hands of the carriers, who are to deliver them more frequently, and generally more cheaply. The change proposed to be made—making the entire charge for the Post Office Department and the carrier one cent—will bring city correspondence into the post offices in the cities. The letters will be delivered by the city carriers, and the system, by the greatly increased number of letters, will be more profitable to them also. The Postmaster General hopes that, if the plan be carried out, he may in time be enabled in New York, Philadelphia, and other large cities, to reduce the charge for the carrier from one cent for all letters, mail as well as otherwise.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, whether the withdrawal of the penny which he proposes to take off the carrier will be a benefit to the carrier from the United States? Does he propose to pay the carrier one cent for carrying a letter, and relieve the United States Treasury from the burden of the other cent? or does he intend to divide it, giving half to the carrier and half to the United States? If the penny is to be given to the carrier for delivery, I have no objection to the amendment. I think that the penny is a quite small enough compensation; and I do not think that the carrier ought to be asked to divide it with the United States.

Mr. COLFAX. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say this: the Post Office Department makes the arrangement now with the carrier, as follows: they allow two cents for the delivery of letters carried by mail, one cent for the delivery of letters carried by carrier, and one cent for delivering newspapers. The consequence is, that, as the total charge on drop letters is two cents in the large cities, there are comparatively but few drop letters for delivery by the carriers. Under this bill, the Post Office Department can make such arrangements as will be satisfactory to the carriers, and as will, no doubt, increase their receipts. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have letters before them from private companies, offering to carry and deliver the entire letters—mail as well as drop—every two hours, at one cent each. In the Senate, Mr. YULEE, in response to a question by Mr. MAXWELL on this very proposition, stated what the effect would be: that it would not be to decrease the revenue of the Post Office Department, and that it would be a gain to it.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana whether the whole amount now received from drop letters is not now paid out to the carriers? In other words, whether the receipts do not show that $97,000 per annum is received for drop letters, and the same sum expended to pay the carriers?

Mr. COLFAX. The receipts from drop letters delivered by the carriers are now very small; because, under the present law, these letters are mostly delivered by city express companies.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I wish to put a question to the gentleman from Indiana, so that I may be able to vote understandingly on the amendment which he proposes. If I understand rightly the amendment of the Senate, it has the approval of the Post Office Department, and the object of the amendment which the gentleman proposes is to make more explicit that which is involved by the language of the Senate amendment. Is that so?

Mr. COLFAX. That is it.
Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Then, sir, the object of the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Indiana to the amendment of the Senate to accomplish the object of the Senate amendment, which has been recommended by the Post Office Department.

Mr. COLFAX. I will make this statement: finding that, under the language of the section adopted as an amendment by the Senate, an improper construction might possibly be put upon it, at some future time, by a hostile Postmaster General, so as to increase the rates on drop letters—to charge one cent for the post office and two cents for the carrier—after its passage by the Senate, I went and saw the Postmaster General. He told me that the language was vague, but that his intention was as stated by Mr. YULEE in explaining it to the Senate. I stated to him that I would propose an amendment to it which would carry out the object designed, and make it more definite.

Mr. FLORENCE. And afford protection, I presume, to the person who delivers the letters. I have no objection to it. I suppose it is all right.

The question was then taken on the amendment, as amended; and it was concurred in.

Fourth amendment of the Senate:
Amend the title by adding: "and in relation to the postage on drop letters."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. COLFAX moved to reconsider the votes by which the amendments of the Senate were severally concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.
A bill (H. R. No. 4) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1861, returned from the Senate with sundry amendments; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

COURT OF CLAIMS.
An act (S. No. 53) to amend "An act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States," approved February 24, 1855; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TAMPA BAY A PORT OF DELIVERY.
An act (S. No. 233) to constitute Tampa Bay, in the State of Florida, a port of delivery; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES OFFICERS.
An act (S. No. 86) to amend existing laws relative to the compensation of the district attorneys, marshals, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HEIRS OF THOMAS MADDEN.
An act (S. No. 49) to grant the right of preemption to a certain tract of land in the State of Missouri to the heirs and legal representatives of Thomas Madden, deceased; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

JEREMIAH PENDEGAST.
An act (S. No. 52) for the relief of Jeremiah Pendegast; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.
An act (S. N. 71) for the relief of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ABNER MERRILL.
An act (S. No. 96) for the relief of Abner Merrill; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOSPITAL SQUARE, SAN FRANCISCO.
An act (S. No. 97) to authorize the institution of a suit against the United States to test the title to lots Nos. 5 and 6, in the hospital square, in San Francisco; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BURCH. I ask that that bill be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.
Mr. PHELPS. I think that it ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and I wish to give the reasons why I think it ought to be so referred. I understand that this bill relates to a part of the hospital property in San Francisco. Before we constructed the buildings there, the proper officers of the Government had certified that there was a good title to the property. We had either obtained it by purchase, or it was our own land. Now, some persons present a claim for a portion of the property, and it is proposed that Congress shall permit those individuals to commence a suit against the United States for the purpose of testing the title to property which our own law officers have said was good in the United States. I prefer, therefore, that the Judiciary Committee should investigate the question; and I move that the bill be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

MILES DEVINE
An act (S. No. 99) for the relief of Miles Devine; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

SAMUEL H. TAYLOR.
An act (S. No. 100) for the relief of Samuel H. Taylor; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

INDIAN LANDS IN OREGON.
An act (S. No. 142) to secure the right of preemption to certain settlers on lands temporarily occupied as the Indian reserve in Oregon; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PUBLIC PRINTING.
An act (S. No. 263) providing for a reduction in the prices allowed for the public printing, and providing for the binding of the public documents, reports, and Journals; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

RETURN OF UNDELIVERED LETTERS.
An act (S. No. 202) in relation to the return of undelivered letters in the post office; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

GEORGE FISHER, DECEASED.
A joint resolution (S. No. 8) relative to the claim of George Fisher, late of Florida, deceased; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move that that joint resolution be referred to a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.
Mr. EDWARDS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The same subject is now before that committee.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Edwards; and it was agreed to.

FRANCIS DAINES.
An act (S. No. 14) for the relief of Francis Daines; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

THERESA DARDENNE.
An act (S. No. 31) for the relief of Theresa Dardenne, widow of Abraham Dardenne, deceased, and their children; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ROSS WILKINS AND OTHERS.
An act (S. No. 84) to authorize and direct the settlement of the accounts of Ross Wilkins, James Witherell, and Solomon Sibley; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SIEUR DE BONNE AND OTHERS.
An act (S. No. 92) authorizing the courts to adjudicate the claim of the legal representatives of the Sieur de Bonne and of the Chevalier de Repeigny to certain lands at the Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PHELPS. That is a bill which, I understand it, provides for instituting a suit against the United States. I suppose it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I think not.
Mr. PHELPS. I know nothing about the claim. It seems to me that upon its face it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. This bill was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims in the Senate. It is simply a question as to the propriety of instituting suits in the United States courts; and that is a very proper subject for the examination of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. OLIN. That is the very reason why the bill ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SICKLES. This is a question which properly belongs to the Committee on Private Land Claims. It is not a judicial question. It is merely a question of the propriety of allowing judicial proceedings to be instituted.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. This claim has been referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims for the last three successive Congresses. I call for tellers upon the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STOUT and McKIM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes eighty-seven; nays not counted.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EPISCOPAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
An act (S. No. 106) authorizing the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States to enter a certain tract of land in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

MRS. A. E. CHILDS.
An act (S. No. 108) for the relief of Mrs. A. E. Childs; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN HASTINGS.
An act (S. No. 109) for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburgh; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

GEORGIA AND FLORIDA BOUNDARY.
An act (S. No. 306) to settle the titles to lands along the boundary line between the States of Georgia and Florida; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COBB. The Committee on Public Lands have had that question under consideration. Every member of the committee was in favor of this bill. It is an important question to the States of Georgia and Florida, and if the House is not disposed to pass the bill now, I ask that it may be permitted to remain on the Speaker's table.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over.

SALE OF PUBLIC ARMS.
An act (S. No. 45) to authorize the sale of public arms in the several States and Territories, and to regulate the appointment of superintendents of national armories; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Militia.

VALENTINE WEHRHIM.
An act (S. No. 228) for the relief of Valentine Wehrhim; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PACIFIC TELEGRAPH.
An act (S. No. 84) to facilitate communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electric telegraph; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GURLEY. They will cost five dollars per volume.
 Mr. BARKSDALE. That will make $50,000 for the whole.
 The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.
 The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 89, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles F. Adams, Adolph, Alcy, William C. Anderson, Barrett, Beale, Bingham, Blair, Blake, Boyce, Buffington, Burgh, Burroughs, Butterfield, Carey, Carter, Case, Colfax, Conkling, Cowde, Curtis, John D. Davis, Harter, Helms, Howell, Johnson, Kellogg, E. L. Key, Farnsworth, Florence, Frank, French, Goodrich, Gray, Gurley, Hale, Haskin, Hendrick, Howard, Hughes, Humphrey, Ketchum, Francis M. Kellogg, A. C. Ketchum, L. C. Key, Loring, E. S. Martin, McKim, Millard, Montgomery, Morrill, Edwin Jay Morris, Rice, Schuyler, Tilton, F. P. Pettit, Porter, Putnam, Rogers, C. Schuyler, Morrill, James C. Robinson, Ross, Schwartz, Sherman, Spaulding, Spencer, Stevens, William Stewart, Tamm, Taggart, Thayer, Thompson, Train, Trimble, Van Dusen, Verger, Waldron, Watson, Conradine C. Washburn, Ellis B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wells, Winslow, and Windom—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Thomas L. Anderson, Ashmore, Branch, Branch, Butler, Boutwell, Boyce, Brinsford, Branch, Branch, Burnett, Horton F. Clark, John H. Clark, Clifton, Cobb, James Craig, Burton Francis, Crawford, Deane, J. H. Giddens, Edwards, Edwards, E. C. Galt, Hamilton, Harnden, Hatten, Hutton, Logan, Jenkins, Jones, Keith, Lassar, James M. Leach, Logan, Leonard, Medsker, McKim, Miles, L. C. Moore, Spalding, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Nelson, Niblack, North, Phelps, Pugh, Richards, Reagan, Rumsey, Sampson, Stoddard, Stevenson, Stock, Tamm, Thomas, Underwood, Vallandigham, Woodson, and Wright—62.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the vote,
 Mr. BARKSDALE asked the Chair to state the question.

The SPEAKER stated the question.
 Mr. FLORENCE. This is the last volume of the Pacific railroad explorations.

Mr. CURRY. And this is a test question as to whether any more books are to be published by the Government.

Mr. FLORENCE. The explorations of all the other parties have been published.

Mr. CURRY. It is not for the benefit of the Government, but for the benefit of the Printer.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call the gentleman to order, as members are to exercise their own judgment in giving their votes; and they are responsible to the people for them.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I am willing to take my responsibility, and vote against it.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. This is the last of the Pacific railroad survey reports, of which there have been ten preceding volumes.
 Mr. KEITT. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.
 Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. I would like to know from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRIS] whether there are to be any pictures in this book?

Several MEMBERS. Of course there are.

Mr. LAMAR stated that his colleague, Mr. Davis, was voted off with Mr. MOORE.

Mr. BRANCH stated that his colleague, Mr. REYN, was confined to his room by indisposition.

Mr. BOGOC stated that his colleague, Mr. HARRIS, was detained at home by indisposition.

Mr. QUARLES said: I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COVODE] whether he is not paired with my colleague, [Mr. VANCE]?

Mr. COVODE. Not on this question, sir.

Mr. QUARLES. I understood that the pair was general. I did not know how that was.

Mr. FLORENCE said: I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HICKMAN] on the political questions of different shades of color which divide us in the House. This question of printing I have voted on, because I reserved to myself that right, thinking it probable that I might be able to pair my colleague with some other gentleman on it. I have been unable to do so, however. That will account for my colleague's absence.

Mr. WELLS said: I wish to change my vote. If there was a resolution for the original publishing of the volumes, I should vote against it. As I understand, it is the last of the act. It embraces the survey of the northern route to the Pacific. For that reason, and in order that the whole question of the Pacific railroad may be presented before the people I change my vote, and vote "ay."

Mr. SHERMAN moved to dispense with the reading of the report.
 The question was made.
 The vote was announced, as above recorded.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I am compelled to leave this city for my home in the West either this evening or to-morrow; and I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to report back a bill from the Committee on Public Lands, and have it referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

There being no objection,
 Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 183) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the completion of the geological survey of Oregon and Washington Territories; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE POST OFFICE.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making further appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1860; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COLFAX. If the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were to follow the precedent that was set by the House the other day, it would ask to have this bill referred to the Army appropriation bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. But knowing that such a course would delay action on these appropriation bills—for if we were to make such a motion, other standing committees would make similar motions to have appropriation bills referred to the committee—we have therefore thought it far better that these bills should follow the ordinary course of legislation, and let the committees who have charge of the various branches of business consider the bills informally, as the Post Office Committee propose to do with this bill.

POLYGAM IN UTAH—POSTPONEMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. With regard to the polygamy bill, I move that it be postponed till next Monday, after the morning hour, according to the understanding.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—SPECIAL ORDER.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask leave to offer the following resolution: That House Bill No. 325, to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes; to authorize a loan; to regulate and fix the duties on imports; and for other purposes, be made a special order in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for Wednesday, the 4th day of April next; and so continue until disposed of.

Resolved.

Mr. KEITT. I object.
 Mr. SHERMAN. I know that if the resolution be objected to, it cannot be introduced now; but I offer it in order to give notice that on Wednesday next I will move to lay aside the various bills that stand before it, in order to take up the tariff bill. I give this early notice so that gentlemen may understand that that motion will be made. I understand the rule is not to be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and that general debate on the Army appropriation bill shall cease within five minutes after its consideration shall have been resumed in committee.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have the floor in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Army appropriation bill; but in order that we may hasten on with it and get the bill out of committee to-day, I will make no objection to my being deprived of the floor by the proposition to close debate in five minutes. I will seek some other opportunity to get the floor in committee.

ARMS FOR THE MILITIA—AGAIN.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has yielded me the floor for a moment. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill relating to the purchase of arms was referred to the Committee on the Militia; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to

The question was then taken on Mr. SHERMAN's motion; and it was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Graw in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated the question to be on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOTELER] to amend the bill by striking out the words "two hundred and fifty" in line one hundred and forty-one, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "four hundred"; so that the clause would read:

For the manufacture of arms at the national armories, $400,000.

Upon this amendment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am in favor of the proposition to increase this appropriation to $400,000, because I believe that the efficiency of the national armories cannot be kept up unless this appropriation is made. We all know that the Minie musket has superseded the old arm.

A MEMBER. It is the Minie rifle.
 Mr. FLORENCE. Well, it is rifle-bored, and it is called the Minie musket, and it has superseded the old arm. The different States are now asking that the Minie musket may be substituted for the old arm, and that increases the demand upon the War Department very largely. The volunteer companies of the States are asking for these new arms, and are willing to pay the difference in price between the new and the old arms. But I must hasten on, because I am restricted to five minutes.

Another reason why I think this increase ought to be made in the appropriation, although the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHILLIPS] did not seem to consider it as sufficient one yesterday, is the fact that the workmen in these armories have specialties, that they are adapted to a peculiar work, or to the performance of a peculiar duty, and unless these men are kept at work during the entire year, the letter submitted yesterday by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOTELER] shows that to continue these national armories is a mere farce.

Now, I submit to gentlemen, when it is known that the States want arms; when there is a proposition before the Senate to increase the number of men given to the States; when this new arm is asked for all over the country, I submit whether, at this time, we should withhold the trifling sum of $150,000, which will be returned to the Treasury of the United States in the difference between the old arms and the new ones? The increase in the appropriation is necessary to keep the men arming the volunteers of the States, independently of the fact that it will keep these men at work. And I submit that it is the duty of this Government not to give employment to the workmen, but by placing them in the national armories, which are necessary to the Government, to afford them the means of obtaining a subsistence for themselves and their families. And I conceive it to be the duty of this House, and that the House will honor and dignify itself if it will continue these men at work, not only in the summer months, but whenever they are employed by the United States. These are strong reasons, I apprehend, for increasing this appropriation, and I trust they will exercise the proper and salutary influence which they ought to exercise over the minds of intelligent gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The general debate on this bill is now closed; and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is entitled to the floor for one hour to discuss it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not desire to occupy the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BOTELER].

Mr. HUGHES. Is debate exhausted on that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; the debate is exhausted on that amendment.

Mr. QUARLES. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, by striking out "$400,000," and inserting "$450,000." If we will reduce the clause I say anything which would seem to disfavor the amendment offered by my friend from Virginia; but there are some facts in connection with these armories which I desire to have explained before I can vote for this appropriation.

It seems that as to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1859, the appropriation for the national armories was $400,000; and it is strange that an amount equal to half that sum has been appropriated for repairs of machinery. I would call the attention of the House to this fact; that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1859, the appropriation for the national armories was $400,000, and the appropriation for repairs was $156,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1860, the appropriation for the armories was $250,000, and the appropriation for repairs was $108,000. Now, there must be something wrong here. How is it possible that the repairs of the machinery at the armories can cost half the gross amount appropriated for the manufacture of arms?

Mr. BOTELER. I will answer the honorable gentleman. There is a large amount of machinery, &c., made at these armories which is intended for other works elsewhere. There is a large amount of work done there independent of that upon guns, upon materials that are used at other Government works.

Mr. QUARLES. As I understand it, there are but two armories in the United States—one at Springfield and one at Harper's Ferry. Those are the only two national armories recognized by the Government, and for which appropriations are made by law. There are arsenals in other States; but there are no armories except those at Springfield and Harper's Ferry.

Now, I submit it to the House, if it is just and proper to maintain an institution, the expenses of which cost more than half as much as the gross amount appropriated for its support?

Now, this bill proposes an appropriation of $250,000 for the manufacture of arms at the armories, and $108,000 to keep the machinery in running order. I am in favor of the latter, and I would oppose the making of improvements in arms. I am in favor of that. But this excessive expenditure for repairs is not right. The outlay for repairs of machinery is entirely disproportioned to the amount of arms manufactured. I desire that some explanation should be given to the House, that we may see and know why it is that the repair of machinery here costs so much more than it does in other departments. If manufacturers generally had to make such expenditures for repairs, no manufacturing could be carried on with profit.

Mr. DELANO. I regret very much that we are confined within the narrow limits of a five minutes' debate for discussing this question. I can answer the gentleman from Tennessee, I think, to his entire satisfaction, and to the satisfaction of the House; and all that is necessary to this answer is to bear in mind what I stated yesterday, that in the year 1855 the model for the manufacture of infantry arms was wholly changed; that the cost, not only of buildings but of new machinery, was very increased by this change; and that the Government, in fact, then entered upon an enlarged preparation for the manufacture of arms upon this newly-established model, at the rate of $400,000 a year, and were, in 1859-60, just in readiness for the manufacture of that amount when Congress cut down the appropriation. The state of things then, is the state of things now—thatis, with these preparations made and the machinery in part manufactured, but the manufacture not completed, the Committee of Ways and Means now propose to reduce the appropriation.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. DELANO. I believe I am now entitled, in my own right, to five minutes in opposition to the amendment. I was proceeding to say, that in 1855, when the change in the model of arms took place, it necessarily involved the use of the old arms already manufactured. The Government then had on hand some seven hundred thousand stand of arms, distributed at the various arsenals of the country—some twenty-four in number, I believe. And have the authority of the Secretary of War to order that seven hundred thousand is the lowest admissible equipment, and that that number should be at all times maintained. It thus became necessary to procure much new machinery for the purpose of entering on the manufacture of arms under the new model, to take the place of the seven hundred thousand which had been discarded. From 1855 to the present time, the Government, exercising a prudent economy, has been accomplishing this object, and it is out of that fact that the increased expenditure at the present time has become necessary.

Now, sir, if these facts are as stated; if, as appears from the report of the Secretary of War, this seven hundred thousand stand of arms of the old pattern must be replaced by those of the new pattern, and if there are only fifty thousand of the new model, which have already been manufactured, it will be seen at once that, instead of the emergency being less, instead of reducing the appropriations, the emergency is greater, and the manufacture ought to be increased tenfold. That is the point of view in which I ask the House to look upon this question; and which I desire to press upon the attention of gentlemen.

The old model discarded by the War Department in 1855 was a smooth-bore musket, effective only at two hundred yards, while the new regulation musket and infantry arm which superseded it was the rifle-musket, effective at seven hundred yards, and of thousands of pounds of force. The manufacture of that arm has comparatively but just commenced; and it is because we have discarded the old, and are as yet equipped with only fifty thousand of the new, that I yesterday declared to the House, and to-day again declare, that we are, in a nation, practically disarmed. And the appropriation, instead of being diminished, ought to be increased.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. QUARLES, by unanimous consent, withdrew his motion for an amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to amend the amendment, by striking out "$400,000," and inserting "$399,000."

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia will be adopted, and that the Government, in the emergency of public affairs requires that the manufacture of arms by this Government should not be diminished.

Mr. DELANO. Will the gentleman allow me to refer the committee to the report of the Secretary of War of 1854?

Mr. HUGHES. I prefer to go on with what I have to say. I am satisfied, by some little experience in military matters, that it is absolutely necessary that we should increase the manufacture of arms by the Government, of a proper pattern, and of a proper form, for the service of the Army. I believe that even the sum now proposed would be inadequate to that purpose. It is certain that we have not arms enough now, nor shall we have enough from the appropriation in this bill to place a respectable force in the field, if it should be necessary to do so, armed with efficient weapons.

Sir, we are on the eve of great events. Any man who does not discover it must be blind to the signs of the times. The whole world is arming; and we are not excepting in Europe. Extraordinary progress has been made in the construction of improved arms within the last few years, the effects of which we have seen in the recent campaign in Europe. We do not know at what moment we may be involved in difficulties with other nations which may result in war. War is even now ready to break out in Europe, and no one can tell how soon we may be involved in it. Why, sir, I believe we have but forty thousand or fifty thousand stand of arms of an improved pattern.

I believe an objection has been raised to the amount expended upon repairs and machinery. Now, sir, it seems to me that we should either make our armories efficient, that we should give ample means for the construction of the best improved arms, or we should obtain them from Europe, and trust to purchasing them in the market; and every one who understands the requirements of the Army knows that that would be the worst possible system we could adopt. You would not be able to get proper arms for the military service; you would be obliged to get arms with inferior terms. The Government would have no control over the private establishments for the manufacture of them. The only mode by which our troops can be supplied with arms adequate for the service, is under the present system; and the question now is, whether we are to reduce the amount of appropriation so as to make our armories of little value.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to oppose the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HUGHES.] I desire merely to call the attention of the committee to the fact that many of the most efficient arms now used by the Army are those not manufactured at the national armories. We do not manufacture a single pistol that is used by our mounted troops.

Mr. DELANO. Will the gentleman allow me a very few words?

Mr. PHELPS. No, sir; I have but five minutes, and I cannot be interrupted. I say that this Government does not manufacture a single pistol now used by our mounted troops. I do not refer to those old long single-barrel pistols which were in use at one time; but I refer to Colt's repeaters, with which our entire cavalry force is now armed; and it is one of the most efficient arms that can be placed in the hands of these troops. And, sir, many of the arms used by the infantry are not those manufactured at our armories. There is the Sharps rifle, which is proved to be a very efficient arm for a long range; but I am not prepared to say that that is the best arm which is now manufactured. There is the Maynard breech-loading arm, which is efficient at a range of seven hundred yards, and which has been found of great use in cavalry service from the ease with which it can be loaded and discharged, even when in the hands of an inexperienced man; and you have many other improved patterns, not manufactured at the national armories, which are preferable to any manufactured by the Government. These patents are taken out every year for new improvements. Why, then, increase the appropriation for manufacturing these guns, which are not as good as those which have recently been invented? You only maintain your armories for the purpose of keeping up the reputation of the Government.

But the private armories of the country manufacture a much better arm than that manufactured at the national armories—far better than the smooth-bore musket. I ask whether it is not expedient for the Government, after having tested the arms of the United States, and after having seen the inventors of those that are best suited for the service of the United States to manufacture at the national armories the number which may be needed? I am informed that the patent granted to Colonel Smith for his improvement in fire-arms will soon expire, and that he has already applied for it; if it has, the Government may at once commence the manufacture of Colt's repeating pistols at the national armories. Those pistols are used not only in the Army of the United States, but in the Navy of the United States; and are purchased in open market, just precisely as any private citizen would purchase them.

Mr. Chairman, I have briefly stated the reason why I am opposed to making a large appropriation for the support and maintenance of the armories of the United States. I have shown that we have followed the estimates submitted to us by the Secretary of War, and the ruling of the House made at the last session of Congress. At the last session the question was presented whether $250,000 or $400,000 should be appropriated for new armories; and it was decided that no more than $250,000 should be appropriated.

Now, sir, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DELANO] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOTELER] have told us that there are at the Harper's Ferry Armory, and at the Springfield Armory, experienced workmen in the employ of the Government, and that it is important that those men should be retained in the service of the Government. I have already suggested in the debate of yesterday, a plan by which that object might be accomplished. It is to expend $300,000, appropriated for arming the militia, in the manufacture of arms at the national armories, instead of going into the market and purchasing them from the private armories for distribution among the several States and Territories. I can enforce this amendment in the name of the Harper's Ferry Armory, and in the name of the Springfield Armory, and equally opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BOTELER.]

Mr. HUGHES, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BOTELER. I have an amendment to propose.

Mr. PHELPS. Let some gentleman submit an amendment, and then the gentleman can speak in opposition to it. He can get in his remarks in this way.

Mr. SPINNER. I desire to submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. BOTELER. I do not now claim it. Mr. SPINNER. I desire to strike out the whole paragraph, which is in these words:

For the manufacture of arms at the national armories, $250,000.

Mr. Chairman, I know of my own knowledge that the Government is employing private armories in the manufacture of arms, and that those private armories at this time are inspectors. It is proved that arms are manufactured cheaper at private armories than they are at the national armories, where the Government has been at a heavy expense in constructing buildings, and erecting costly machinery. I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BOTELER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] has laid great stress upon the official recommendation which comes to us from the Secretary of War. Let me read, sir, what his recommendation really is. After the appropriation is sent here under estimates, yet it will be perceived that this appropriation does not meet the real wishes of the Department. Here is what the Secretary says:

"I have ordered the estimates from the bureau of ordnance to be made mainly in conformity to the policy which the action of the last Congress seemed to indicate by its appropriations. I cannot forbear to express the opinion, however, that to shroud the manufacture of arms in, to say the least, a measure of very doubtful economy, and more prone in the end to be both dangerous and expensive. A large capital should be created to fund the demand for a large number of arms, probably enough, nearly to strip all our arsenals, and to require the purchase of further supplies from manufacturers, at whose expense the Government would be, in the emergency of war."

Besides the manufacture of arms, other supplies are needed, which are of the greatest importance to the service of the country. This constant pressure of the Government for arms and other appliances of war, which is so late characterized the military service of other nations, has been, up to this time, an ever active force.

If the recommendation of the Secretary of War is to control in this matter, then the ground I take is impragmatic. According to that recommendation, any reduction of the estimate or appropriations heretofore made will be "most dangerous and expensive" in the end.

Now, sir, I do know, from my own personal knowledge of the effects of the legislation of last year at the Harper's Ferry armory that, if the appropriation is passed as it came from the Committee of Ways and Means, it will be not only dangerous to the best interests of the country, but most disastrous to the armory itself. The recommendation of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINKER] might as well be at once adopted.

When my friend from Tennessee [Mr. EUBANKER] yesterday made a speech in opposition to the amendment, I really thought at the time that it was in earnest. I had forgotten, sir, that he was a gentleman of "infinitesimal" of most excellent fancy; that he was a joker of jokes, overflowing with "jests and youthful folly, with quips and cranks and wanton wit." It did not occur to me until I had read his remarks in the Globe of this morning, that he was only, as the children say, "playing pretty." He could not have been in earnest, sir, in opposing my amendment; and I owe him an apology, which I now tender, for not having recognized that fact. I am sorry that he was not in earnest in making the opposition he did, any more than my friend from New York [Mr. SPINKER] is now in earnest in his motion to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. SPINNER. I was never more in earnest in my life.

Mr. BOTELER. Then the gentleman has but a very few steps further to go in his direction. Raze your fortifications to the ground, dismantle your Navy, haul down your flag, and submit to the insults and aggressions of the most weak, meanest of all nations of the world.

Mr. SPINNER. The difference between the gentleman and myself is as to the relative cheapness of day work and work by contract; I take the latter, and argue in favor of the purchase of arms, as we know they can now be and are purchased cheaper at the private armories than they can be manufactured at the national armories.

Mr. BOTELER. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri, that this Government is not bound to find employment for laborers; but, sir, I do contend that it is bound to protect those whom it has employed. The artisans at Harper's Ferry have been employed by the Government. They have been induced by the Government, for a certain purpose, to take up their residence there. They have made permanent investments there, under the auspices of the Government. After they have done all this, Mr. Chairman, after they have cast their fortunes there for life; a proposition is made to withhold the appropriation which affords them the poor privilege of earning their daily bread by the sweat of their brow in the service of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.] Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment, if it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINKER] is to strike out the entire paragraph. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOTELER] is to strike out the first part of the paragraph and to insert, "The Chair holds that the question must first be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, for the perfection of the paragraph; and the Chair further holds that that amendment is in order."

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I move to reduce the appropriation fifty dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I concur in the propriety of the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINKER], to strike out the entire section. I have no objection to the fact that there was a motion on for the Government manufacturing arms for our soldiers; but there was for its erecting tailor establishments and making their coats and other clothes, or building shoemaker shops and manufacturing their own shoes and boots.

Mr. STUART, of Maryland. I rise to a point of order. I understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois was to increase the appropriation. He is not speaking in support of that proposition.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. No, sir; I moved to reduce it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I have heard, Mr. Chairman, no reason assigned which would induce me, even if these armories are continued, to vote for an increase of appropriation. This has been said that dangers threaten us; but no single fact has been adduced to show that we need an increase of arms anywhere, or at any point; and I do not think we should act on suppositions. I do not believe, either, that we do need them now, and when we do there will be no difficulty in obtaining a supply readily. In a case like the present, we should not inquire whether it is proper for the Government to furnish employment for individuals, but what our duty to the country is. About this I am sure that we are called upon to determine, is, whether there is a necessity for an increase of arms? Where is the evidence of it? I have heard no argument adduced, allow me to repeat, to satisfy my one of such necessity. But I will not persist in this point. I did not rise for that purpose, but to express my cordial concurrence in the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINKER]. If the appropriation is withheld, it will be an important point gained. The armories and mill-yards are centers on the whole political, and hence to be struck down on political views, and ought to be stricken from existence. When we want a vessel, we should buy it. When we want arms, we ought to buy them. Leave all, sir, to individual enterprise, and not allow the Government to come in competition with it. Experience has shown that the Government is not adapted to the business of carrying on the manufacture of arms, the construction of vessels, the building of railroads, or any work of that kind, and the sooner it rids itself of it the better. It is now hanging as a mill-stone about its neck, and will sink it.

Mr. DELANO. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to put him one question?

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. DELANO. The gentleman speaks of the advantages of the contract system. Now, I ask the gentleman if he does not know that this very matter was fully considered in 1853? It will be found, that in the Army appropriation bill of that year, the Secretary of War was instructed to decide whether the national armories should not be dispensed with and the contract system adopted; and the report of the Secretary and the subsequent votes of Congress were emphatically against the proposition.

[Here the hammer fell.] Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FAIRNSWORTH. I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois; and I will state one or two facts. This bill appropriates about six hundred thousand dollars for these two armories. The amount is usually divided between them. One of them is located in Massachusetts; the other in Virginia. The amount included in this bill is the same as that appropriated last year; and is the sum estimated for by the Department. Four years ago the amount appropriated to the armories was $400,000 instead of $250,000. Before that $350,000 had been given; but from 1855, and for some years, we appropriated $300,000, and $250,000 had been appropriated to these armories.

The amount now proposed is the same as that given last year, and no greater amount has ever been given, except for two years—1857 and 1858.

I think the course thus prepared for in this question. If the gentleman who has spoken in favor of an increased appropriation have made any impression on the committee; and if the committee think that a great necessity exists for this increased appropriation, it can adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. The committee is now prepared to vote. I hope the question will be now taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINKER]; and if that is agreed to, the whole matter can be determined in the House.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I object.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRIS' amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. QUARLES. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, by striking out "$400,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$395,000." I desire to say to the committee that in the year 1859 there was an appropriation of $400,000 made for those two armories. The gentleman from Massachusetts, who represents the Springfield district, states that the repairs, for which I find appropriations in this bill and running through all the other bills, were rendered necessary because of improvements in machinery which had been made. In the year 1859, the Springfield armory gets $55,000 for repairs, and the Harper's Ferry armory $101,000; and that for the year 1860 the Springfield armory gets $53,000 for repairs, and the Harper's Ferry armory $55,000; and this bill proposes to give $52,000 to each of those armories, and $45,000 to the Harper's Ferry armory, for repairs to the same machinery. Now, I do not understand this. When are we to get rid of this expense for repairs of machinery—for improvements which the gentleman from Massachusetts says were adopted in 1855?

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is now discussing a proposition which is not before the committee. It will be up in a few minutes, and he will then have an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. QUARLES. I merely desire to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order that the Chair can decide.

Mr. QUARLES. It is certainly germane to the question which is before the committee, the appropriations for the armories. I am not for abolishing our national armories. I think it is necessary that we should have men in the employment of the Government who are acquainted with the manufacture of arms; that we should have a large body of industry, and will sink it. I think we have men capable of making as good arms as can be made in any other nation. For that reason we should have this nucleus in the national armories. I am not for abolishing them; but I am for regulating the appropriations so as to do justice to the Government, as well as to that branch of national industry.

I do not say that I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BOTTLE.] It may be that appropriation of $400,000 is necessary. But I desire that the usefulness of that appropriation shall be made known, that the matter shall be brought to our knowledge, and that the whole thing shall be explained and discussed, so that we may vote understandingly upon it. I am not desiring to keep branches of the service. I do not desire that it shall be abolished. I think it would be unwise for Congress to abolish it altogether. We should keep our manufacture of, and improvement in, arms within our own borders, and not trust such an important matter to alien and foreign countries. We should foster and protect and encourage improvements in arms, and their manufacture in our national armories; but we should do so with an eye to justice and economy.

[Here the honorable gentleman.]
Mr. HOWARD. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, and opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, reducing the amount from $250,000 to $398,000. It is true that the Secretary of War has recommended an appropriation of $250,000 for the armories; but, at the same time, he said that he felt it would not be economy to reduce the appropriation to that amount. Now, sir, what do the facts in this case show? We are told by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOTTLE] that this appropriation is kept for branches of the service in operation for but seven months of the year, and we are told by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DELANEY] that the mechanics employed at these armories have each their specialty, and are employed for special work only. Suppose we reduce the amount of service from once a year to seven months; these mechanics will be thrown out of work for five months, and must seek employment elsewhere; hence we shall lose the benefit of their experience in the manufacture of arms for the Government.

Again, it is necessary to keep the armories in operation in order that we may keep up with the improvements of the times. There are five hundred thousand stand of arms under the improvements of 1842, but only fifty thousand under the improvements of 1843. If we reduce the armories, so that if the militia should be called into the field, we have really but fifty thousand stand of arms. Gentlemen say that these arms should be manufactured by contract, and that when we need them, the contracts can be made. Now, we need one million stand of arms all the time for the use of the country. We should, therefore, keep up the armories; and if $400,000 is necessary to keep them in operation for twelve months, then we should not appropriate that amount.

Mr. QUARLES. I move to amend the

Mr. WELLS. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, by substituting "$225,000" for "$400,000."

I am not one of those who believe that the millennium is at hand; but I do believe that we ought to do what we can to bring it nearer. One of the best methods that we could adopt to bring about that most desirable result would be to reduce the expense of our Army and Navy. I would not reduce it at once. I believe that evil must be remedied by degrees, as well as it must increase by degrees.

Now, sir, it was the motto of the Washington Globe, in olden times, that "the world is governed too much." I appeal to our friends upon the other side to stand by that motto now, and to stop the intricate and complicated system in reducing the expenses of the Army and Navy.

I conceive that it would not be right to strike out this whole appropriation at once, and for this obvious reason: that the Government has encouraged in its armories a system of industry which it would be unjust to suddenly abandon. By a gradual and direct reduction, we can, however, enable the men employed in that branch of industry to seek other occupation; and if it is once understood that the policy of this Government is to reduce this branch of its expenditures, industry will find its proper level. I am, therefore, opposed to increasing the appropriation in this case. I am anxious that it should be reduced, but in such a manner as not to injure those mechanics, particularly those represented by my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DELANEY].

Mr. BOTTLE. The gentleman from New York says that he does not desire to injure those mechanics, particularly those represented by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

A MEMBER. He confined his remarks to Springfield.

Mr. BOTTLE. Ah! Well, I do not desire to injure the mechanics at Springfield, but to benefit them. It occurs, however, that the gentleman from New York has no care for those at our armory. I happen to know, from my own personal observation, as I have already said, that the legislation of last year upon this subject was a serious injury to the mechanics at Harper's Ferry; and I tell the House again, that unless my amendment is adopted, it will be a fatal blow to the armory at Harper's Ferry. That place has attained an unhappy notoriety before the country during the last few months, which I am sure gentlemen will readily forgive me for saying, however, that the blows within the last year, sir, one by the reduction of the appropriation during the last session of Congress, and the other by the foray of John Brown. Now, I tell my friends upon both sides of the House that if this amendment is not adopted, the reputation of the Committee on Commerce and Means is added to it, it will be a harder blow at Harper's Ferry than even the foray of old John Brown.

Mr. WELLS. I did not hear the remark which was made by the gentleman from Virginia, but I understand from friends that he received the impression from me that I was speaking in behalf of the mechanics at Springfield.

Mr. BOTTLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLS. And not in behalf of those at Harper's Ferry. I wish the gentleman to understand that I intended my remarks to apply to the armories in both places.

Mr. BOTTLE. I am very happy to hear it.

Mr. WELLS. I had no intention to be invidious.

Mr. BOTTLE. I am very glad that I did misunderstand the honorable gentleman. In supporting this amendment, it gives me great pleasure to advocate the interests of the armory at Springfield, as well as those of the one at Harper's Ferry. I trust a vote will now be taken on the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, with the favorable action of this committee.

Mr. WASHINGTON, of Maine. If this debate is continued much longer, I shall move that the committee rise, for the purpose of going into the House and suspending all debate upon amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine submit any motion?

Mr. WASHINGTON, of Maine. No, sir; I will not make the motion just now.

The question was taken on Mr. WELLS's amendment to the amendment; and it was disagreed to.

Mr. KILGORE. I move to amend the amendment, by reducing the appropriation $1,000.

I have, Mr. Chairman, but a single remark to make on this question. For once I am disposed to give aid and comfort either to New England or to the South. I have heard a good many threats thrown out during the present session of the probable hostilities that may arise between the North and South. Yet now New England has her champion upon this floor in favor of the extensive manufacture of arms by the Government, and Virginia has hers for the same object. Each comes forward to-day as the advocate of an increased appropriation for the manufacture of arms by the General Government; and for the purpose of doing so, no threats or hostilities come abroad. No, sir, the only difficulties that we are threatened with are internal. Well, Mr. Chairman, if that is the danger to be apprehended, I am induced to believe that New England sagacity and mechanical skill is amply sufficient to prepare her for any emergency that may arise, growing out of any internal difficulty. And our southern friends are certainly quite able to take care of themselves. I hear that they are already arming their militia, and I am told that they are even teaching their boys of twelve years of age to handle the rifle with skill and dexterity. So far as the manufacture of arms there is concerned, I do not see that there is any necessity for any increase upon the part of this Government. If any internal difficulty is to arise, I am in favor of allowing the South to manufacture their own arms, and I am decidedly in favor of relying upon the science and skill of the men of the North and Northwest for their protection.

The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the President of the United States, by James B. Egan, his Private Secretary, informing the House of his signature and approval of the joint resolution for the relief of the contractors of the Post Office Department. The committee then again resumed its session.

Mr. KILGORE. A great deal has been said in relation to arming the militia. Why, sir, we have thousands of arms distributed all over the country that are rusting and cankering for want of use; and so it will be if we expend millions of dollars in the manufacture of arms even embodying all the latest improvements. Next year some new improvement will be made of importance, and the arms that we have manufactured will be thrown aside, and we shall be asked to supply new ones in their place. But, sir, of what avail will it be to arm the militia? Gentlemen talk about drilling the militia. Sir, it is useless. Has not every one of us seen the militia march from the plow down here as efficient service as the oldest veterans? I refer gentlemen of the West to one of their own sons, sometimes designated as the Marion of the West—General Joseph Lane—who leaped from a flat-boat on the Mississippi, donned dragoon's dress, wore dismounted and fought in the battle of Buena Vista, and on other fields; and I should not be surprised if some day he might exchange the epaulettes for the robes of the Chief Magistrate of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. BIRCH. That is precisely what we intend to do out here.

Mr. ASHMORE. I understand that the gentleman from Indiana comes from a Quaker district? Mr. KILGORE. No, sir; I do not. I have had the honor to hold the command of a brigade in my own army for the last twelve years, and have not had occasion to put on my epaulettes or buckle on my sword.

Mr. STEWART, of Maryland. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether it is his intention to support General Lane, whom he eulogizes so much, and who has taken fresh from the plow to put on his epaulettes and buckle on his sword.

Mr. KILGORE. I answer the gentleman from Maryland most unhesitatingly that I do not expect to do any such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he is wandering from his amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. Well, sir, I think my five minutes are out; and I will not trouble the committee longer.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment originally offered by Mr. BOTTLE, increasing the appropriation for the national armories to $400,000.

Mr. FLORENCE called for tellers.
The tellers were ordered: and Messrs. McKnight and Crary were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 74.

So Mr. BOTTLE's amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on Mr. SPINER's amendment, to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. SPINER. Would it be in order to move to strike out the next two paragraphs at the same time?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not. No motion can be made to strike a paragraph, until it has been reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. SPINER. If this is stricken out, it will be necessary to strike out the others also, for the sake of consistency. I give notice that I will, at the proper time, move to strike them out, if my amendment is rejected.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITELEY. I propose to add a proviso to the two paragraphs commencing with the one hundred and forty-second line and ending with the one hundred and forty-sixth line; which I ask may be read

The Clerk read, as follows:

"For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Springfield armory, Massachusetts, of which $15,000 may be applied to the purchase of land on the north side of the new water shops, $65,000.

"For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Harper's Ferry armory, $65,000.

Mr. WHITELEY. I move to amend by adding, as follows:

"Provided, That no part of the money in the last two appropriations shall be expended in the payment of any superintendent of either of the armories at Harper's Ferry or Springfield.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a question of order. This amendment proposes to change existing laws, and therefore is not in order.

Mr. WHITELEY. You can provide in an appropriation bill that the money appropriated shall not be expended in a certain manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order is not debatable. The Chair overrules the question of order. It is competent for the gentleman to move to limit the expenditure of the appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The law fixes the salary of these superintendents.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not make the amendment out of order. The committee has the right to limit the expenditure of the appropriation in any manner it may think proper.

Mr. FLORENCE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is too late to appeal.

Mr. COLFAX. I make another point of order. Neither of the two paragraphs of the bill to which the amendment of the gentleman refers makes any provision for the payment of salaries, and the amendment, therefore, is not germane. The appropriations to which he refers are for repairs, improvements, and new machinery.

Mr. WHITELEY. Then I will modify the amendment so as to make it apply to all the appropriations in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I rise to a question of order. With that modification, the amendment is clearly out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHITELEY. Mr. Chairman, I will submit a remark or two upon the amendment. This subject of the comparative excellence of military or civil superintendency of the national armories has been mooted before the last two or three Congresses, in Congress and out of it, at the armories all over the country.

In 1853 Congress passed a law changing the superintendency from military to civil; and we now present the curious spectacle to the world of having an Army with a corps, the specialty, the peculiar duty of which is to superintend the manufacture and distribution of arms, and yet having at the two national armories heretofore or mongrel superintendencies, made up of one civil officer and one military officer. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DELAND,] who represents the district where the armory is located, and the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BOTLETER,] who represents the district where the Harper's Ferry armory is located, what earthly use there is at either of these national armories for a civil superintendent? Neither of these armories can get along with a civil superintendent unless there is installed to each an officer—a major or captain—of the ordnance corps of the Army. Yet, sir, these civil officers are so placed that they counteract and interfere with the operations of the ordnance corps, and tend to the confusion of which is devolved upon them. The law of 1853 was passed, if my recollection serves me, to provide for some hungry politicians in the sections of Harper's Ferry and Springfield. Ought we not, at this time, to strike down this civil superintendency?

I do not propose to detain the committee with any lengthy discussion; but there is another matter I want to refer to. I ask the gentleman from the Harper's Ferry district of Virginia [Mr. BOTLETER,] whether he believes, if there had been a military superintendent of the armory, John Brown's raid would have gone to the extent that it did? Under the civil superintendency there is no control, no discipline; the armories are, in fact, nothing more than mere workshops. I submit, then, as we have a special corps in the Army to attend to arms, that it is our duty to do away with the longer existence of civil superintendents of the national armories.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am decidedly opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. BOTLETER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me, as I have been specially referred to by the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. FLORENCE. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. BOTLETER. Thank you, sir. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important propositions that has been brought to the consideration of the House during the present session; and the House will not soon have the opportunity under which I naturally labor in attempting to argue it in the space of five minutes. It is a question of vital interest to my constituents, and I cannot propose to do justice to it in the very limited time allowed me. It is springing suddenly upon the House. I had no intimation of the gentleman's intention. But I have this to say of it: experience at the Harper's Ferry armory has proved that true economy would dictate the retention of the civil superintendency. The improvements in arms and machinery that have been made under the organization of that armory have been made under the civil superintendency. Such economy has been introduced in the manufacture of arms there, growing out of the improvements made by the mechanics of that place, that the Minie rifle, the most perfect in the world, costs now to manufacture it only twelve dollars for each one of them.

Why, sir, does the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WHITELEY] know that there were two mechanics at that place who, under the civil system, made most of the present improvements in arms and machinery, and who never received more than their daily wages from the Government for all their valuable inventions?

Mr. WHITELEY. Would not those mechanics have been continued in employment as mechanics in the regular Army?

Mr. BOTLETER. That would depend upon circumstances. Those two mechanics made improvements which have saved the Government vast sums of money, amounting to not less than half a million dollars, and they received no such remuneration as they would have received had they worked in that armory. This is striking at such men as a class, as a body, and I think, sir, that some deference is due to their feelings, their wishes—yes, sir, to their prejudices. It is natural for your citizens not to desire to be placed under a military rule. They are free men, independent men, and they do not wish to be subjected to the orders of a military officer and to have the laws which govern the regular Army put in force upon them, as if they were a portion of its rank and file. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Chairman, the history of these armories under military superintendency, and the mass of information brought to the attention of this House when Congress changed from military superintendency to civil superintendency, are all before me to settle all question of this subject at this day. I cannot believe that the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WHITELEY] is serious in moving his amendment; I do not believe that he intends that it shall pass—certainly he cannot expect for one moment, with all the lights before Congress on the matter, that it will meet with any approbation.

Mr. BARSDALE. Let me suggest that, even if the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware be adopted, it will not effect the purpose he has in view. It will not effect in the least the removal of the civil officer; but he could not be paid. The civil would not be remedied by the adoption of the amendment. If the gentleman really means what he proposes, let him move a repeal of the law under which civilians are appointed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I take the same view—that even if the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware is adopted, it will accomplish nothing.

Mr. KEITT. I move pro forma to strike out the word "and" in this act.

Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of saying a word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FLORENCE,] who remarked that the facts exposed to the House six years ago, and which induced a change from military to civil superintendency, would be sufficient, if now before the House, to perpetuate this civil superintendency. A special committee was appointed during that session to consider the question. A great many complaints were made before that committee; but as one of the members of that committee, I feel authorized to say that those complaints were unfounded. The change was made not because of any inefficiency in the management of the armories, but because of any crudity in the rules of discipline and subordination, but simply with a view of increasing the patronage of the Government, and putting the armory within the grasp of politics. At that very time an English commission was sent to this country to examine our system, and so thoroughly satisfied was that commission with the efficacy of our system, that they recommended it to the British Government, and I believe it was adopted!

That commission thought that the most valuable feature in the management of our armories was the military superintendency; and yet, just at that moment, under the rush of political excitement, and with a view of augmenting the patronage of the Government, the Army itself was under military superintendency, and generally, and was grasped by the politicians. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOTLETER] says that two mechanics at Harper's Ferry armory have made improvements. I ask at what time have any improvements been made by a military superintendent? Probably never. I ask, in return, what improvements have ever been made by a civil superintendent? Probably never. The question of superintendency is one which applies only to the subordination of the operatives. And I say here, that as the armories are but a portion of the management of our Army—as connected with warlike operations—they should be, just as the Army, under military rule. Those who go there, go there in connection with the Army, and are just as much bound by its rules and regulations as the soldiers in the regular Army. They go into one of your regiments. I would have crutony on neither side; but I would have subordination. I would not take men there as paupers; nor would I deal with them through mere charity. Men who work for the Government should be paid; and should be paid as they would be paid if they chose to go to the armories as operatives, can stay away. This Government is under no obligation to furnish employment to a single human being.

I was then opposed to this change of superintendency, and I am opposed to it now, because I want to withdraw the Army from the grasp of politicians. I know the difficulty: I know that you might just as well try to drag a ship that had got into the eddy of the Meslarum, and endeavor to save it from being swallowed up, as in this country, demoralized as public sentiment is, to try to draw anything from the grasp of politics, when once it gets its hand upon it. I know the change cannot be accomplished; but I have risen simply to protest against subjecting the Army to the rule of politicians.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The proposition of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WHITELEY] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KEITT] is this: that an officer of the ordnance corps is necessarily a better superintendent of manufacturing establishments than any civilian who could undertake it. If the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Delaware should be adopted, the Secretary of War would be required to return to the old method of superintendency, by placing at the head of the armory offices of the manufacturing establishments no officers. The manufacturing establishments are entirely under the superintendency of the ordnance department of the United States. Now I deny that because a man has received a military education he is therefore a better superintendent of manufacturing establishments than any civilian who could be obtained. I do not say that every civilian is the proper person to superintend great manufacturing establishments; and it is the same with the military men of the country. But I believe that the manufacturing establishments in which large numbers of men are employed are better conducted by those people who have not received a military education, or held commission in the Army of the United States, than by those who have. The superintendent does not devote the form of the arm, and would not, of himself, adopt any improvement or invention. All these matters are to be decided by the corps to which he belongs, and by the Secretary of War. If, for instance, it be suggested that an important invention has been made, and if this invention may be used in the manufacture of arms, or any of the machinery appertaining to it, the recommendation of the superintendent is not necessarily adopted, whether he be a military man or a civilian.

Mr. WHITELEY. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. Is the superintendent at Harper's Ferry or the superintendent at Springfield a mechanic?

Mr. PHELPS. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. WHITELEY. I am told that neither of them is a mechanic or not; nor do I believe it is necessary that the superintendent of a manufacturing establishment must be a mechanic. He may have genius for mechanics, and he may have paid attention to the subject; and such a man would be a better person to manage a manufacturing establishment than one who had not a genius for mechanical pursuits.

I am, therefore, opposed to this system of legislation. If there be a desire to change the law, let it be introduced by the House, and let it be discussed in the law, and let it come up regularly for discussion and consideration, instead of proposing it as a proviso to any appropriation bill.

The question being on Mr. KEITT's amendment to the amendment, Mr. KEITT withdrew it.

Mr. DELANO. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware by striking out the words "no part." I hardly need say, Mr. Chairman, that I propose this amendment in order to take advantage of my rights under the appropriation of a single fact of which, perhaps, it is not aware. I must confess, sir, my amazement that the gentleman from Delaware should have precipitated upon the committee an amendment of the grave character of that which he has proposed. He certainly cannot be aware of the history of the committee which have attended a similar proposition in years gone by. And yet, sir, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KEITT] is perfectly well aware of this history, for, if I remember aright, he was himself a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, which sat long and deliberated thoroughly on this important question of changing the superintendency of the armories from the military to the civil service. The change was against his judgment then, as I have no doubt it is now. But, sir, I presume I am not doing him the injustice of saying, that there were gentlemen on that committee who, in all military qualifications, did not stand lower than himself, and who were utterly opposed to the military superintendency. Not only was that committee, of which he was a member, in favor of the change, but there was a commission appointed in 1854, the result of whose labors I hold in my hand, in the shape of a report consisting of two hundred and sixty-five pages. That commission was formed of the Hon. Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia; Governor Scott, of New Hampshire; and Charles F. Walcott, of New York; and it was their special business to inquire into the grievances of which the mechanics of these establishments complained, and to determine between the two systems. They visited the armories; heard the complaints of the operatives; engaged on a long and thorough investigation of all questions connected with a change of system, and came out of that investigation, after months given to it, fully satisfied that not only was it utterly against the genius of our institutions that there should be such a military superintendency of workshops, governing operatives who were employed in mere mechanical service with strict military rule, such as they found there enforced, but that there were grievances and complaints of the operatives themselves which well deserved the attention not merely of the commission, but of Congress.

It was in view of that report, and in view of the demands for a change of systems then urged upon Congress, that the military superintendency was abolished and the civil superintendency adopted. I will not undertake to say a word for or against the superintendency in the Harper's Ferry district; but I do say, that during the whole history of these armories, from 1794 to the present time, there has been no branch of industry within the limits of these States that has attained to a higher degree of excellence than the branch of manufacture carried on at Springfield; or where, on the whole—the perfection of the manufacture considered—greater economy has been maintained. Now, sir, when such an investigation of the subject has resulted in the adoption of the civil superintendency, I submit to the House that it is as rash as it is unbecomingly presumptuous to attempt to overturn a well-established system by amendments and in a discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I rise not to oppose the amendment, but to say that it seems to me that this whole discussion is entirely unnecessary. We have now a superintendent of one of the armories appointed under the existing law. This amendment does not contemplate a change in the superintendents. If it did, it would not be in order as an amendment to this bill. The superintendents of these armories are paid a salary which, I suppose, is provided for in another bill, so that, if this amendment prevails, the law will remain precisely as it is now, so far as the superintendents are concerned. If the amendment does not prevail, the result of this appropriation will be applied to the support of the superintendents. It seems to me, therefore, that nothing can be accomplished by this amendment; and I hope the gentleman from Delaware will withdraw it.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to. [He then hammered bell.]

The question recurred on Mr. WHITELEY's amendment.

Mr. BOTELER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "provided."

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KEITT] spoke of the opinion of the English in regard to the different systems of superintendency. It is true, sir, that the English Government sent a commission to visit this country. But what did they do? The very first thing that English Government did on the return of that commission was to send to Harper's Ferry and engage one of the mechanics there to take charge of the Enfield works, near London.

Mr. KEITT. I wish to state, in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, that all I meant to say, and which I did say, was that the commission recommended the adoption, out and out, of our system, and, as understood distinctly at the time, mainly in consequence of the military superintendency. Whether or not it has been adopted by Great Britain is more than I can say.

Mr. BOTELER. I do not know myself all the details of the management.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to know if the gentleman understands that the mechanic who was taken from Harper's Ferry was called to England for the purpose of having the supervision of the armory establishment?

Mr. BOTELER. I understand that he is at the head of the armory at Enfield, in England.

Mr. CURTIS. Not superintendent.

Mr. BOTELER. Of course he does not control the armory; but he is the head workman, superintending the mechanics at the Enfield works at that place. The mechanics at the Enfield works look directly to him for directions, which he receives from his superior officers, just as the civil superintendent at one of our armories gets his directions from the ordnance department here at Washington.

But gentlemen here desire that the communicating organ between the ordnance board and the mechanics shall be an officer of the Army. I ask gentlemen whether those officers have been brought up to be acquainted with the construction and operation of machinery? If, sir, they are expected to examine into all the details of machinery, to know when the machinery is out of order, or when the work is done in a workmanlike manner, is it not necessary that they should have some necessary education connected with the system? I admit that the estimable gentleman who now presides over the armory at Harper's Ferry is not a mechanic; but that is not the fault of the system; it is the fault of the present Administration. But if there are mechanics, the present Government is to operate they did place mechanics at the head of the works, and I believe that mechanics should always be at the head of these armories as superintendents.

The gentleman from Delaware asked me whether I believed the John Brown boys would have taken place if there had been a military man there as superintendents.

Mr. WHITELEY. No, sir; I asked if you thought it would have resulted as I did.

Mr. BOTELER. Why, sir, all the military men on this continent could not have changed that result, under the circumstances in which that forty-acre place at Harper's Ferry was managed. The men behaved more gallantly than did the armorer at Harper's Ferry on that occasion. Great injustice has been done to those armorer. There has been a studious attempt made by a portion of the press of the country to create the impression that there was treachery there; that there was treachery among the men at Harper's Ferry on the bloody day referred to.

Sir, the imputation is false; there was no panic among the armorer or citizens of Harper's Ferry. I myself was present upon that occasion, and I saw with what eagerness, as soon as it was ascertained what the nature of that invasion was, everybody, not only at Harper's Ferry, but also in the surrounding towns and neighborhoods, men—gray-headed men, who had served in the war of 1812, and even little boys with their bird guns—rushed up to Harper's Ferry to help their hands on, and rush to the place where the attack was made. Men, sir, under the influence of a panic fly from the danger that threatens them, and do not rush right into it, as our citizens did that day.

[He then hammered bell.]

Mr. FLORENCE obtained the floor, and said: The gentleman from Virginia appears to be impressed with the idea that his time is not out, and I am willing to yield to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BOTELER. I believe I have the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WHITELEY. I do not object to that; but I want to know if anybody will be allowed to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules a gentleman has five minutes to advocate an amendment, and another gentleman has five minutes to oppose it, and that is all the discussion that is allowed.

Mr. FLORENCE. Well, I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HENRY.]

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to draw the attention of the committee to this fact, that at the time of the organization of these armories they were placed under civil superintendency; but the abuses in the way of appointments, and the extraordinary character of many of the appointments made from civil life, and the abuses which grew out of them, became such a crying evil that the Government was under the necessity of detailing ordnance officers, for the purpose of bringing something like order out of the chaos that reigned everywhere.

Sir, the facts which were developed in the investigations relative to the armories in those days proved these allegations to be true. All experience, I believe, has shown that this superintendency in the hands of civilians has proved a mere political establishment, and is very important in this country that we should keep politics clear of the merely administrative offices, if possible. Apportionments, if you choose, for political places; but for places of this kind, I say no. Any establishment relating exclusively to military operations should be in the hands and under the control of military men. The investigations into the facts existing when their armories were under the control of civilians, showed that even eclecymen were appointed to the place of superintendent of the Springfield armory.

Mr. FLORENCE. If they were mechanics, there was no harm in that.

Mr. HUGHES. No, sir, not mechanics; they were eclecymen, and were appointed merely out of political considerations. Now, sir, the specialty of these special officers of ordnance is to attend to arms, to prove them, and to see that they are properly constructed. Of what avail is science or experience if an officer of the ordnance corps is not better qualified for such a service than a mere civilian? But if there are mechanics, the present military superintendency for the armories, why not place civilians over your navy yards? I rather think you would find very few gentlemen here who would be in favor of turning your navy yards over to civilians and politicians. Yet there is no reason for depriving the civilians and politicians of the control of the navy yards that does not apply with equal force to the armories.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall make but one more observation in connection with this subject, and that is to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this bill ought to have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs, and not to the Committee of Ways and Means. The Military Committee have time to consider it, and there is the proper place for its investigation. It cannot be expected that the Committee of Ways and Means will investigate all these matters. It is the business of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland the name of the clergyman to whom he refers.

Mr. HUGHES. His name is Robb.

Mr. MAYNARD. John Robb?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOTTLER's amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. WHITELEY.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BOTTLER. I move to amend, in line one hundred and forty-eight, by striking out "£65,500," and inserting "£85,500," so as to make the paragraph read:

For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Harper's Ferry armory, £85,500.

After what has been done by the committee in striking down the appropriation for the support of the Harper's Ferry armory, and in refusing to read the amount to which I conscientiously believed to be proper, I earnestly beg that this modification will be accepted without objection. If it were not indubitably necessary, I assure the committee I would not ask for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am opposed to this amendment. This appropriation conforms to the estimates, which specify in detail the uses for which the money is to be required. Now, when the gentleman from Virginia moves to increase the appropriation, without specifying or giving any reason, asking the increase, I do not think the committee should be called upon to adopt the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. OLIN. I move to strike out the following paragraph in the bill:

"For the Benicia arsenal, $50,000."

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield for a motion that the committee rise. We shall evidently not be able to dispose of this bill to-night.

Mr. OLIN. I prefer to say what I have to say upon this amendment now. I wish to call the attention of the committee to this appropriation. As I understand the matter, the estimate was made in pursuance of a recommendation for building an arsenal at Benicia, for the purposes of construction and not for repairs or repairs. If that be true, any gentleman has but to turn his attention to one or two facts to see that it is the most prodigious and utterly worthless expenditure of money that ever was attempted under heaven.

Why, sir, there is no material to be used there for the purpose of making cannon or other arms, that has not to be transported from the Atlantic coast. Neither iron, nor timber, nor anything else to be used for that purpose is to be found upon the Pacific coast; and when the material is brought there in the raw, the labor of the mechanic who have to work it up is more than double what it would cost on the Atlantic coast, say the least.

Now, an arsenal for repairs may be necessary for the Pacific coast. Nobody disputes that fact; but, sir, the last Congress appropriated $100,000 for the very purpose of last year's repairs. I know that was the estimate, and now $50,000 more is required. Sir, there is not an officer of the Army who has any information on the subject who would not denounce the whole project. Not one. Every man would say that it was a waste for the purpose of construction is worse than useless. There is no point from the Atlantic coast to the Mississippi river where these arms could not be manufactured for one third the cost; and that is not the worst of it, for the cost of transportation of the manufactured article is less than that of the raw material. I think, therefore, every gentleman will be able to see that this appropriation will be of no merely value.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not see, Mr. Chairman, how reasonable objection can be made to the pending provision of the bill for $50,000 for the Benicia arsenal. That appropriation has been recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means upon estimates from the War Department. The gentleman states that the appropriation last year was $100,000; and if that is so, then this appropriation is a reduction of fifty per cent. from the preceding appropriation.

Mr. PHELPS. It was only $50,000 at the last session, and now $50,000 is proposed to be appropriated at this session.

Mr. SCOTT. It ought to pass. It has the recommendation of the Secretary of War and the report of the Committee of Ways and Means in its favor.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLIN] is very much mistaken when he says that there is neither coal, nor iron, nor wood to carry out the purpose for which this appropriation is asked. It is a well-known fact that there is an extensive iron foundry at the city of San Francisco, which is provided with iron ore from the northern part of the State. Coal is obtained in large quantities from Oregon. We have, sir, all the wood and iron and coal that are necessary for an arsenal, or the most extensive national workshop of any country. Why, Mr. Chairman, let me tell the gentleman that we have built for the Government upon the Pacific coast one of the largest class of naval ships. He will recollect, I am sure, the discussion which took place between him and myself at the last session in reference to the navy-yard at Mare Island, California, for which was allowed only $20,000, when $100,000 and $150,000 were previously appropriated.

A war steamer was constructed at that navy-yard and launched. Her machinery was built by Laird, Donald & Co. That steamer, in every respect, is approved by naval officers to be equal to any constructed at the navy-yards upon the Atlantic coast. It is a paltry and insignificant sum that is appropriated for this Benicia arsenal; and I am surprised that objection is made to it. The gentleman from California is mistaken when he says from the other States of the Confederacy, and compelled in time of war to rely upon her own resources and the valor of her sons for her defense and the protection of the honor of the American flag, is granted in California to make arsenals, San Francisco only asks to be placed upon an equal footing with New York, Boston, and Philadelphia.

Mr. OLIN. From whence did you procure the timber of which the sloop-warrior you refer to was constructed at Mare Island?

Mr. SCOTT. Timber, I know, is not to be had everywhere. I believe that Maine is the great timber State, and that so is Florida; but every stick of timber used in building that vessel grew in California. The gentleman is mistaken when there is timber in Oregon and California. He has heard, I suppose, of the "big trees" out there, with which he has nothing in Maine or Florida to compare.

Mr. SCOTT. Wood and coal and iron in abundance, and the objection of the gentleman cannot stand. And then again, the transportation of those things to California would cost more every year than the $50,000 now proposed to be appropriated. I hope the provision will be retained in the bill.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move that the committee do now rise. It is late—long after four o'clock—and I do not believe we can finish the bill this evening.

Mr. SHERMAN. Withdraw the motion until five o'clock, and if the bill is not finished by that time, it can be renewed.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I insist on my motion. The House was divided; and there were—aye 39, none 54.

YEAS AND NAYS. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BARKSDALE. It will take hours to get through with the bill.

Mr. PHELPS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BURNETT and FLORENCE were appointed.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. GARNETT. I object to the committee going on with the bill without a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no vote taken which would inform the Chair that no quorum was present.

Mr. GARNETT. I renew the motion, then that the committee rise.

Mr. FLORENCE demanded tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no vote taken which would inform the Chair that no quorum was present.

The question was taken, and the committee refused to rise; the tellers having reported—aye 26, none 95.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the words "for contingencies of arsenals, $20,000;" and I do so for the purpose of receiving some explanation of it from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is always something necessary for the arsenals in the United States in the way of contingencies, and the amount provided for by this bill is less than that usually allowed heretofore. The gentleman, by referring to the Committee, will draw my attention to the figures under this head fully set out. This $20,000 is to pay for transportation of arms, for boxes, and so on.

Mr. MAYNARD. It seems that the appropriation is entirely satisfactory to the committee, and I therefore withdraw my motion to strike out.

Mr. CURTIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move the following amendment to this bill:

For the manufacture or purchase of apparatus and equipment for field signals, $2,000; and that there be added to the staff of the Army one signal officer, with the rank, pay, and allowance of a major of cavalry, who shall have charge, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of all signal deer, and all books, papers, and apparatus connected therewith.

Mr. BURNETT. I move the point of order that that amendment is not in order to this bill, for the reason that it does not carry out, but changes, existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The 81st rule is as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government."

Under that rule, the Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the general provisions of law in reference to the Army, I think that the amendment is clearly in order. It is at the suggestion of the Secretary of War, and upon the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the amendment is proposed to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment does not provide for carrying out any existing law; and the point of order being raised, the Chair must rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The last clause of the bill appropriates, for continuing the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes, including Lake Superior, the sum of $75,000. I move to increase that appropriation $5,000, in order to ask the gentleman from Iowa what is the result of carrying out that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will answer the gentleman with great pleasure. Two or three years ago the Government commenced a system of surveying the upper lakes, and appropriations were made from time to time to carry it into operation. Last year's appropriation was $75,000, for the purpose. This year $100,000 was estimated and asked for, but the committee have reduced the appropriation to what it was last year. It is estimated for by the War Department.

Mr. BARKSDALE. These surveys are for military purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are surveys of the upper lakes, under the charge of the War Department.

Mr. BARKSDALE, by unanimous consent, withdraws his amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. If there be no objection, I will withdraw my point of order to the amendment moved a moment ago by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the amendment is to lead to debate, I object.

Mr. BURNETT. It will not, I understand; all that is asked is the vote of the House on it.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment is suggested by the Secretary of War, and is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIERMAN. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.
Mr. SIERMAN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.
So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Grew reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 345) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1861, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, and with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. SIERMAN. I read the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. SIERMAN. I will not ask a vote on the bill to-night.

LAND DISTRICT IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BURCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to create an additional land district in the State of California; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COURT-ROOMS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. HALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill making an appropriation of $10,000 for court-rooms and marshal's office for the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

And then, on motion of Mr. BURNETT, (at forty-eight minutes past four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GURLEY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating in connection with a resolution of the Senate of the 22d instant, a copy of the memorial of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel B. S. Roberts, relating to the reorganization of the militia of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. Foer to print the report, and that two thousand additional copies be printed, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, submitting additional estimates of appropriations that will be required for fulfilling the stipulations with the Indian tribes during the present fiscal year; which, on motion of Mr. HUNTER, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HUNTER presented the memorial of Louiza T. Whiting, widow of Major Palms Whiting, of the Army, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PEARCE presented the memorial of John F. Connelly, remonstrating against the petition of Rice, Baird & Heebner, and representing that this firm had acknowledged that it was impossible for them to execute their contract for the furnishing of one hundred and thirty marble columns shafts for the portico of the Capitol; and, also, that Captain Meigs had inspected their Lee quarry, and reported to the Secretary of War that fact, although six years had been allowed them to do so; and also showing that they had to chime to exact damages for their failure to execute their contract, their real and only object being to substitute Italian for American marble; and praying that Congress will not interfere with the order of the Secretary of War to purchase the columns of which; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented the memorial of Mary Townsend, widow of Joshua Townsend, a soldier in the war of 1812, at the battle of North Point, asking for bounty lands under the acts of 1855 and 1856, her application having been rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions on technical grounds; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EVERSON presented additional papers in relation to the claim of Henry R. Schoolcraft, for the reimbursement of expenditures in Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PEARCE. Yesterday a memorial of the Great Falls Manufacturing Company was presented by the Senator from Delaware, (Mr. SALLAUM,) about the disposition of which there was some doubt in the Senate, and it was finally laid upon the table, with a view of considering what should be its proper reference. I move that it be taken up now, with a view to referring it to the Committee on the Judiciary, where it properly belongs.

The motion was agreed to; and the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the memorial of Thomas Johnson, administrator of Anselmo Johnson, and Sarah A. North, administrators of Amy E. Johnson, praying compensation for laborers destroyed by the enemy in the war of 1812 from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. EVERSON, it was Ordered, That Jane McVane have leave to withdraw her petition and papers.

On motion of Mr. BENJAMIN, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Joseph Menard, praying to be allowed to relocate certain warrants (and land granted to the late Menard de la Fayette, of which he is the assignee, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PETITION RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. SIMMONS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of George G. Durban, praying compensation for services as a clerk in the Indian bureau, be recommended to the Committee on Claims.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. LANE, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 322) to complete certain military roads in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 312) giving the consent of Congress to the improvement of the Yazoo and the Mouth of the Mississippi river, and the levying of a tonnage duty to maintain the same, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Henry J. Rogers, American editor of the Commercial Code of Signatures, and all Nations, praying that the same may be adopted by Congress, and distributed to all merchant vessels owned by citizens of the United States, reported a bill (S. No. 320) to provide for the general introduction of an international code of marine signals; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of citizens of Delaware, praying the substitution of steamers of light draught of water for the revenue service in place of the present class of sailing vessels, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the Common Council of Detroit, praying that steamers may be employed in the carrying of lumber to the ports of the revenue of the lakes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of citizens of Michigan, praying that steamers may be stationed on the lakes for the protection of the revenue and the relief of merchant vessels in distress, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a report of the Secretary of War, communicating in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the report and estimate of Captain Newton in relation to the construction of a wharf at Lewes, Delaware, and the bill (S. No. 13) making an appropriation for the erection of a pier in Delaware Bay, for the protection of commerce, reported it without amendment, and adversely.

Mr. SALLAUM. I desire to say that I do not concur in the adverse report, which has just been made; but shall ask the Senate at an early day to consider that bill.

Mr. YULEE, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 343) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Robert A. Matthews, for the confirmation of the entry of a tract of land in the Sioux City district, Iowa, by Charles W. Tash, or for the refunding of the purchase money to the said Matthews, as his attorney, reported a bill (S. No. 321) for the relief of Robert A. Matthews. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. EVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Polly Booth, of the county of Madison, State of New York, with the opinion of the court in favor of Roberts, of the county of Madison, State of New York, for the relief of Polly Booth, of the county of Madison, State of New York, without amendment. Mr. DURKEE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Darby Glover, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. GRIMES submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law that there shall be no more appointments to the grade of purser in the Navy; that duties now performed by officers of this grade shall be performed by officers of the grade also, that they inquire into the expediency of providing by law that all appointments to the marine corps of the United States shall be made from graduates of the United States Naval Academy.

STEVEN'S REPORT.

Mr. LANE submitted the following resolution: Which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to inquire into the expediency of printing two thousand extra copies of Stevens's railroad report.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREEN. I offered a resolution a few days ago, which is lying on the table, in reference to the recess in April and May. I move now that it be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress do adjourn on the 20th of April next, until the 20th of May next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the 20th of May comes on Sunday.

Mr. GREEN. Make it the 21st.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That alteration will be made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution. If we adjourn on the 20th of April, to meet again on the 21st of May, we shall return to find the country suffering under three presidential nominations, and we shall have to remain here at least a month longer than would be necessary to carry on the business of Congress, in order to listen to gentlemen who wish to address the constituents through the Congressional Globe; but if we fix a time for the final adjournment, the effect of this resolution will not be to prolong the session. I have left the time in my amendment blank, and wish to have it fixed on the 15th of June.

I think, will leave ample time for the transaction of all the business necessary to carry on the Government, and for the consideration of the measures now before Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I will accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator wait until the amendment is read? It is to add to the resolution:

And that the President Officers of the two Houses adjourn on the 15th of June, and the Senate sine die at twelve o'clock on the 1st day of June next.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If it is in order, I intended to move, as a substitute for the resolution of my friend from Missouri, a similar proposition to that presented by the Senator from Rhode Island, but providing for the final adjournment on the 1st of Monday in June. I think we may adjourn at that time, and I prefer fixing that day. If we find it necessary to hold on a little longer, it will be easy to extend the time. It is better to name a day, and work up to it. I am opposed, however, to the proposition of the Senator from Missouri. It is a proposition to adjourn for a month in the middle of the session, to allow gentlemen to go off to the political conventions. It does seem to me that the principal business of the Congress of the United States is legislation, and not attending the political meetings. Take, for instance, the Charleston convention: it is so far off that I suppose there are few Senators who expect to go; I have not heard any Senator say that he intends to go. But of course, if you adjourn for a month, you will have to go. Why not let us go on with our business here?

As to the second convention, which is to occur at Baltimore, it is a ride of only an hour and a half. I doubt if any Senator intends to attend it; or, if there is any, doubtless he can be spared for a day or two. Perhaps the same will be true of Kentucky, Mr. CHITTENDEN, and one or two others who feel a deep interest, might go over. We might accommodate them by not acting on any bill in which they felt a special interest during their absence.

In reference to the Chicago convention, perhaps some gentlemen on the other side may wish to go there; but I think it doubtful. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FORT] shakes his head. Why should we adjourn in the middle of the session for a month? We should come back here, and forgetting where we have left our business, and we shall have to work on into July, and perhaps August, to get through with it, and also to make political speeches in favor of and against all the candidates. I think, therefore, it is better not to adopt the motion of the Senator from Missouri; and I propose so to amend it, as to provide for an adjournment sine die on the first Monday of June. If that motion were taken precedence of the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, I will move it. I desire to strike out the original proposition altogether, and insert, in lieu of it, "that the two Houses do adjourn sine die on the first Monday of June next." I have not so much to say for me, as to be enabled to give the day of the adjournment.

Mr. FORT. The Senator from North Carolina will most directly reach his purpose by moving to fill the blank, in the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, with the words "the first Monday in June."

Mr. ANTHONY. I will accept that.

Mr. CLINGMAN. But he proposes to add that to the resolution, so that we shall have the proposition to take a recess for a month, as a part of it, and my object is to prevent that. Before adding his amendment, I think the Senator should be competent for me to move to amend it by striking out the words I have alluded to, and substituting a proposition for an adjournment sine die on the first Monday in June.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island proposes to strike out the motion of the Senator from North Carolina. The Senator from Rhode Island should propose his amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause, and insert; and if he then accepted the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, the question would come up in the form the latter Senator desires.

Mr. ANTHONY. I intended my first proposition as an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Missouri; that we should take a recess of one month, and adjourn sine die on the 11th of June. I understand the Senator from North Carolina to propose a substitute for the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina can only propose an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am opposed to taking a recess for a month. I want to get at that; and if my amendment will take precedence of the one offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, I must wait until there is a vote on my amendment, and then I can move, as a substitute for the original proposition, what I have indicated. I am indifferent whether his amendment be adopted or not. My object is to strike at the original motion.

Mr. GREEN. I think the Senator from North Carolina takes an entirely mistaken view of this subject. Adjourning for one month does not cost the Government a single dollar. On the contrary, it is a saving of money to the Government, as I can demonstrate. The number of members present at the close of the session is fewer or not in session; while the pay of a number of employed depends upon the fact whether Congress is in session or not. It is well known to every member present, including the Senator from North Carolina, that at the close of the session, if it is adjourned for a month, the members are courteous to each other and to the different parties, come to an understanding, and any no business shall be transacted during the holding of these conventions; and we know that that will be the practical effect. No work will be done; but we shall adjourn three days at a time—from one third day to the second third day, and so on—until they all come back, and are ready to resume their labors. As this will be the case, and we know it, why not at once make an open, honest confession of the fact, and adjourn for one month? I know those who choose to attend the conventions, and many will anyhow—can do so; and those who choose to go home, as I desire to do, can do so, getting no mileage, no pay for it; it involving no expense to the Government. He says, however, we shall forgo the advantage of the session. If our memories are so short, I apprehend we are hardly fit to legislate. I do not expect to forget the stage of business. I expect to keep up with it, whether present or absent; and I really think that this is a measure of economy and a measure of wisdom.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will leave it to the Senator to say that this would add to the expenses of the Government. I do not know that it will affect the expenses any way; but I think it will be very inconvenient to Senators, to be kept here in the summer; and the result of this measure will be to restrict the session in the summer. Whatever may be the strength of my friend's memory, I doubt whether there are many Senators here who will not say that we can finish business in less time by going on regularly with it, than by having an irregular session of a month or two, in order to commence many things deo. But with reference to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, I have nothing to say. When it is out of the way, I shall make the motion I have indicated.

Mr. GWIN. If the motion is to adjourn finally on the 15th of June, I am for it, and against the recess.

Mr. BROWN. I shall vote for the original resolution, unless it is amended in the way proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island. In that event I shall vote against it. I am not for fixing early days of adjournment. We are paid by the year to transact the public business; and it is our duty, I think, to stay here until we have done it; and when there is nothing else to do, then adjourn. That was the argument urged when the bill salary for Senators and Representatives was passed. The country was satisfied with it, because the people supposed that paying us by the year would induce us to transact the people's business; and we ought to stay here and do it. I shall not vote to fix early days of adjournment. I should be very glad to work every day through the summer, but business as early as possible, and go home; but there have been adjourning over one or two days every week during this session of Congress. We have done nothing. Now we propose to fix a day to adjourn, and go away and abandon the business of our country. In my humble opinion, we have no right to do it; and I shall not consent to do it.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator from Missouri has stated correctly that if no recess is taken, according to the practice and custom which prevail in the body, the Senate will do no business during the time the respective conventions are held in session. I think that was the case four years ago, during the Cincinnati convention, and the convention of the Republican party in Philadelphia. It was again the same circumstance, that no business of any importance whatever should be transacted during the absence of Senators at those conventions. That will be the case again. The Senator from North Carolina says he is not aware of any Senators going to those conventions. I know three of my own friends on this side of the House who are delegates to the Charleston convention, and I know they are all going, for I have so understood from them; and I apprehend there are other Senators who desire to attend it. I do not myself wish to expect to attend, but, doubtless, there are many who would prefer to do so. And so with the other convention—a number of the gentlemen on the other side will desire to attend it.

Under these circumstances, if the Senate does not do any business while the bodies are sitting, I want to know what is the necessity of keeping Senators here simply to adjourn over from one term of three days to another. Senators will be compelled to do that, or else they will lose their pay. If a recess is taken, the pay goes on; but if the Senate is in session, every man who does not attend here at the time the Senate meets, loses his pay. Then what is the use of staying here for the purpose of getting our pay and doing no business, because we will be the result of it. We shall transact no business on account of Senators going to attend these conventions; and so many will go that the universal courtesy requires that we should attend to no business, of any consequence, at least, during their absence; so that it will amount to precisely the same thing, in point of fact, whether we take a recess or not. The Senate will transact no business while the conventions are sitting.

Members of the House of Representatives are very anxious also, I understand, to go, and they want to change the arrangement of their Hall. This will give them the opportunity of changing the internal arrangements of their Hall. It seems to me that, taking all things into consideration, it is better to take a recess; but I am, with the Senator from Mississippi, against fixing early days for the final adjournment. I think it is our duty to stay as long as there is any public business which requires our attention; and we have no right to shut the public duty up and go off and attend to our private affairs.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not believe with the Senator that there is a necessity for our refusing to do business because three gentlemen on this side intend to go to Charleston. They may pay off their salaries, and we may not be able to get away to go home, and we can go on with business as usual. We have often three gentlemen absent on this side. If this had been a proposition for one week's adjournment, it would not have been so good; but to take up a month in this way is intolerable. It is a mere matter of personal convenience. It may be hard that three gentlemen, if they go, should lose their pay; but their business is here. If they think it more important to go there instead of letting their salaries go, I propose their participation will allow them to sacrifice eight dollars and a quarter a day.

Mr. GWIN. I am entirely opposed to taking a recess for any of the conventions. If members choose to go to the national conventions, it is no reason why the Senate of the United States should stop the country to carry on legislation. But, aside from that, the recess will stop the progress of business. We had better fix a day for an early adjournment, and work up to it and get through with the business, or as much of it as we intend to transact during this session.

I hope we shall have no more of this sort, that the Senator from Rhode Island did not move to strike out the whole resolution, and propose to appoint the first Monday of June for the final adjournment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That is my motion, to continue up until the amendment is disagreed of.

Mr. GWIN. Very well; I shall vote for that. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CLARK. Let it be read.

The Secretary read it; to add at the end of the resolution:

And that the President Officers respectively adjourn the two Houses of Congress state day at twelve o'clock on the following next.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment, and then vote down the original proposition. I believe the number of votes for the recess will be very few. Leaving that out of view, I think it is indiscreet at this time to fix a day for our final adjournment. The Senate is actually engaged through the action of the House of Representatives upon that subject. Our habit has been, the House being the larger body and having more difficulty in getting through with its legislation, to await the action of the House, and when it fixes a day for final adjournment, keep it on our table so that we can pass it at any moment when the business of the session will justify it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Allow me to suggest to the Senator to move to postpone the resolution indefinitely. That will test the sense of the Senate. If it is right, I will cheerfully vote with him to postpone the original resolution, and that will carry the amendment with it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Let us vote down the amendment and vote down the original. That puts an end to it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am in favor of that; but I supposed we should get it more quickly by the way I suggested.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I like to test both propositions. I desire to know whether we propose to adjourn finally before the House has expressed its opinion to its view. We cannot well tell the time it ought to be. We have always considered it proper to await the action of the House of Representatives on that subject. When we have determined that question, as I hope we shall, in the amended resolution to fix the day for final adjournment, I shall then vote against the original resolution.

Mr. GREEN. I request the Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw his proposition, and offer it as an independent one, after 2 minutes is voted upon. I think it better to test them on separate propositions. I beg leave to remind the Senator from Louisiana of this fact, that the House of Representatives desire this proposition passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I was going to observe, in relation to that remark of the Senator from Georgia, that if the House desires a recess of the two Houses for the purpose of adjourning, it will, in order, and should pass a resolution to that effect, courtesy to the House of Representatives would require us to yield to its wishes, and I would willingly vote for it; but I wish that expression from the House to come officially.

Mr. GREEN. They recited it to be moved here first. It is for all these purposes. It does not conflict with any public interest; for we know no public business will be neglected in consequence of it. I can see no propriety whatever in refusing this request made by the House of Representatives. However, the Senate may do as it places.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask the Senator in what form the House of Representatives has made the request? Is it some individual members?

Mr. GREEN. Individual members have spoken to Senators on the subject.

Mr. CLINGMAN. How do we know that they represent the view of a majority of the House? Gentlemen very often think they speak the sentiments of the House when they do not. I asked one of the members to put it in that sort, it can readily pass through a resolution. I have heard a great many gentlemen express views against it. I am not prepared to say what the majority think.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the amendment embarrasses the resolution of the Senator from Missouri, I withdraw it, and will submit it forward as an independent proposition if his resolution passes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the following resolution of the Senator from Missouri:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring therein,) That the two Houses of Congress do adjourn on the 30th of April next, until the 21st day of May.

Mr. CLARK called for the yeas and nays; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Fitch, Foot, Green, Hamplin, Iverson, Lane, Sebastian, Simmons, Trumbull, and Wilson.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bristow, Ringham, Bangs, Bright, Cameron, Chandler, Chubbuck, Clark, Clay, Clingman,崔德威, Deatley, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Graves, Green, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Latham, Mason, Nicholson, Pease, Rice, Sebastian, and Sherman.

So the resolution was rejected.

REGULATIONS FOR THE GUANO TRADE.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to take up, this morning, the bill in relation to regulating guano discoveries. I desire to make some amendments to the bill, and I hope to offer some amendments which will meet and obviate the objections which gentlemen have already suggested.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 308), supplementary to the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary to be given to citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of guano," approved August 18, 1856.

Mr. HAMLIN. I propose to amend the bill in sections 1, 2, 3, and 4, by adding, after the word "anxious," the words "at the pleasure of Congress." The object is to retain all power in Congress, ultimately, over this matter, precisely as it is retained in the original law. I do not think the bill would have changed it, but this meets all objections of State secretaries.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I propose further to amend the bill, in the same section, by adding, after the word "thereto," in the twenty-fourth line, what I will read. Before reading it, I will say that the proviso in the section as it now stands gives the Secretary of State authority to review his opinion in relation to conflicting rights; that is, if a certificate shall have been given to a wrong party, by mistake, fraud, or upon insufficient evidence, he may, at any time within a year, revise his opinion, and give a certificate to the party clearly entitled thereto. The amendment which I now propose to introduce, gives to the Secretary of State an unqualified power to abrogate entirely any certificate he may have given, provided it is his opinion

THURTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 90.

chealed discoverer was not entitled to the same. The amendment is in these words:

And in case any controversy shall arise in relation to any of the said islands, keys, or rocks, in which any foreign Government shall be a party, and the Secretary shall be satisfied that a certificate has been improperly issued to a citizen of the United States, then the Secretary shall have power, and it shall be his duty, to annul all proceedings in relation thereto.

And I propose also to add another clause which limits the existing law:

And in no case shall the President of the United States be authorized to employ the land or naval forces for the protection of said islands, rocks, and keys, before reporting to Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would suggest to my colleague that he should cover, also, future cases.

Mr. HAMLIN. It covers past and future cases. The original act provides:

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to employ the land or naval forces for the protection of said islands, rocks, and keys, before reporting to Congress."

It is a very broad power. It is a power which I think was not very fully examined at the time the bill was passed. I propose to limit that power, and I propose to do it because I am informed that there are now controversies existing between this Government and foreign Governments, where they set up a claim. The original act clearly gives to the President that power; and I think it is a power over which we ought to exercise a restraining influence. For these reasons I have offered the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the amendment will prevail. It is a very important amendment, as there are already some disputes under the law.

Mr. YULEE. I would suggest to the Senator from Maine, instead of leaving it in the discretion of the Secretary of State, to substitute the President. Let the President be authorized to withdraw the certificate.

Mr. HAMLIN. will insert the amendment, before the word "Congress," and be duly authorized thereto by."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour has arrived when the Chair must call up the special order.

Mr. MASON. I do not mean to delay this bill, but I would say to the honorable Senator from Maine, who has introduced it, and who now proposes to modify it by limiting the authority of the President to use the public force to protect these islands, that he is mistaken in his idea that the clause in the original law which gave that power to the President was not well considered. The law was drawn with great care to prevent the possibility, as far as it could be done, of the President annexing any of these islands to the United States, until he was satisfied, in the manner pointed out by the law, that they really were not the property of, or claimed by, any other nation, and were out of possession; and the right to use the public force for the protection of the islands was given only after they came into the possession of American citizens, under that law, so that it should not be permitted to any foreign Power to dispossess American citizens; because if it did dispossess them, it would dispossess them of land established as a part of the United States, by the policy and the law of the United States. And in that view, as a preventive measure, the President was authorized to expel any foreign Power that should intrude upon, or take possession of, American territory. It is the same power that he possesses now. I take no for granted, without the intervention of Congress, to whelplever I think therefore, that those reasons which would lead Senators to modify this, lest the President might bring us into a war by the undue exercise of the discretion vested in him, might have the very opposite effect, upon the old maxim that one ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. If the President had the power to prevent, by the use of the public force when necessary, the intrusion of any foreign Power upon any portion of the United States, it might be done with one twentieth, or one hundredth, part of the cost that it would require to expel that Power after he got possession. But that is a matter pertaining more to commerce and to commercial interests than to those with which I am specially charged, and I shall not interfere if the Senate chooses to modify it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What order will the Senate take upon the special order? It is the duty of the Chair to announce it at this hour.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to postpone the special order until we can dispose of this bill. We can get through with it in a few moments.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I am informed by the Secretary of State himself that the provision of the old law has already led to embarrassment, and there is correspondence going on between the British Government and our own now in relation to this matter. Men claim to have discovered islands in the sea, and there is no counter claim, perhaps yet, until after the certificate is issued, until somebody is interested to contest the right; and then it turns out that some foreign nation makes a claim. Under the existing law, on the certificate being issued, the President is authorized to use the land and naval forces to protect the right of the man who holds the certificate. This is too large a power to give, and it is embarrassing on all sides. Where there is a counter claim by a foreign nation, the question should be submitted to Congress before force is used, or before war is declared. There is a case where a claim is set up by an American citizen to have discovered an island which probably belonged to Hayti; and so it will be in many other cases. They present their claim, and a certificate is issued on the information before the Department, other than the showing of the claim, and not being present to contest it, and hence the embarrassments arise. I do not see any difficulty to result from the proviso of the Senator from Maine, and I think it would be most prudent to adopt it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Some modifications have been made in the amendment. The Secretary will read it as it now stands.

The Secretary read the amendment as modified, as follows:

And in case any controversy shall arise in relation to any of the said islands, keys, or rocks, in which any foreign Government shall be a party, and the Secretary, under the direction of the President, shall be satisfied that a certificate has been improperly issued to a citizen of the United States, then the Secretary shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, to annul all proceedings in relation thereto. And in no case shall the President of the United States be authorized to employ the land or naval forces for the protection of said islands, rocks, and keys, without reporting to, and being first duly authorized by, Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now propose to amend the bill, in line eighteen of the same section, by inserting, after the words "Secretary of State," the words "under the direction of the President." That carries out the suggestion of the Senator from Florida a few minutes ago.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now propose to amend the second section by striking out, in lines eight and nine, the words "at such ports as shall be designated," and insert "at the expense of the importer or owner, and such regulations as shall be prescribed by;" so that the clause shall read:

And that before the same shall be passed through the custom-house where entered, it shall be examined and subject to the regulations of the importers, and such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I think myself that it is the very best form in which this section, under all the circumstances, can be placed. I regard it as very desirable that this guano should be subject to an inspection and analysis. If you undertake to do it under the revenue laws at all ports, you must have a large force of men. This will save the Government the expense of the fact that in several of the States, not all, there are State inspectors. This amendment provides that the inspection shall be at the expense of the importer or owner, and it leaves the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe the rules under which, the manner in which this inspection shall be had. Now what will be in all human probability the result of this action? In those States where there is a State inspection, there can be no doubt he will adopt that State inspection as part of his system. In those States where there are no State inspectors, he will designate persons as proper persons to inspect the guano; but it will be at the expense of the importer or owner. I think, under all the circumstances, gentlemen who represent States where there are State inspections, can have no objection to this, and in the States where we have no State inspection, we shall call on the Secretary of the Treasury to designate the men who shall make the inspection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. To perfect the bill, I move to add the same words, "and at the expense of the importer or owner," after the word "fraud" in the eighteenth line of the second section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, "Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?"

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I think it would be well that we should pause in our progress in this species of legislation. In 1856, and upon the plea that it was in the interest of agriculture, we adopted a law which has been disastrous in its effects, and I think has been really disastrous in its effects. It has involved us already in more diplomatic questions, and looks more seriously to the disturbance of the peace of the country, than any other law or any other act which probably has occurred in the whole history of our nation. We have had, in the first place, a controversy with Venezuela, next with Peru, and more recently with Great Britain; and I believe, though I now recollect but three, that there are probably as many as six or seven cases of controversies which have arisen; and the last of these is now before the Senate, in regard to that high and commanding point in the group of the Bahamas, called Cayo Vero. It seems to have been assumed a discovery, though from its prominence and the length of time it has been upon the maps, I think it is a little in supposing it is among those which were laid down by Columbus; but on account of the extraordinary ex parte character of the proceedings under the act of 1856, it was only necessary for an American citizen to report that he had discovered it, and that the President was vested with power to use the Army and the Navy, in such however remote, to protect him in the possession of that which he declared to be his discovery, without notice being served upon any other Government to ascertain whether it was in fact discovered by people or not. I think it is a time when we have looked on the other side of the Chamber—there is scarcely a voice raised in favor of conferring on the President the power to protect the great Isthmus transits, essential to bind the two portions of the United States together, when it is proposed to be a proposition to confer on the President a power to make war, if we permit him, under the provisions of treaties, to protect American citizens, it is a little remarkable that we should find upon the statute-book, in the interest of the guano trade, a power far more extensive than any conferred in any provision which has been moved before in the Senate of the United States. But after we have proceeded but a very short period—from 1856 down to this day—under a law which was enacted, as a constant in the past, I will not say whether real or fictitious—that it was in the interest of agriculture, we now find that an alteration is proposed in the interest of commerce; and whereas this protection was to be given in order that fertilizers might be introduced into the United States, and for that reason we were involved in this extraordinary legislation, now it is proposed, in the interest of commerce, to give this protection to private adventurers, in such however remote.

The amendments which have just been adopted, so far as I comprehend their application to the States could require for defense of that, as a discrepancy on the part of the United States, would attach, and there is no necessity for legislation for that.

But this legislation is directory; it calls on the discoverer to come and present his claim to the Government, and the Government is to accept the claim on his showing, that is, then to defend him and maintain it as a part of the United States. We are thus thrown broadcast on the state to establish little colonies wherever some deserted rock may be claimed, and it has happened in nearly every case where guano exists that the place is not susceptible of occupation; that it is not occupied either by an American citizen or by anybody else; that men cannot reside upon it. He may stay there for a time, he may raise a flag and go through symbolic occupation, but it is a mere symbol. When the vessel sails, everybody leaves with it. I think if we were to find some fertilizer in a tropical region, and some of the citizens of the United States were to take possession of it, and were to take his negroes there to cultivate a tropical product, we would take the same care of the same occupation of him and his property that we now find for a desert rock and some skipper in the pursuit of guano. I see no stronger reason for interposing the whole power of the Government to protect this traffic than any other. There is no stronger reason by the Government should be involved in controversy with foreign nations to secure the importation of guano, than the importation of spices, dyestuffs, ivory, or any thing else. It is but a matter of trade. It should be in the discretion of the Government, and it should be by the action of Congress, if we treat as an acquisition some barren rock or desert sand upon which guano deposits may be made, and not put it in the power of a mere adventurer, cooperating with the President, to reduce this Government to the condition of recognizing that as a part of the United States.

My objection, therefore, is a radical one. It goes to the whole theory of the act. It covers the entire system. Our Government was not formed for purposes of colonization. I have wisely come only to require extermination of war. We must have a Navy as numerous as our merchant marine is now, if we expect to defend every rock which may be found unoccupied, and to which some American citizen may lay claim as he may because he found it. I would not put it. There are islands very near to our own coast which any adventurer may find unoccupied, and with very heavy deposits on them—not as did those of Peru, but perhaps they may be found as good; and I suppose a foreign nation would have just about as good a right to take possession of them as we had to take possession of the Azores islands.

As to the fear which my friend from Virginia speaks of on the part of our Government, we are too strong, I suppose, to feel any fear when we are too strong. I trust we are too moral and magnanimous not to feel very great fear of doing wrong. The question which I present is one of right and wrong, not a question of timidity or courage. I hope my Government will always be afraid to do wrong. I hope it will never send forth roving commissions to gather up everything which may belong to somebody else, because the owner is not found on it. It is enough that they should inquire whether it belongs to us, and if it does not, we should stop all proceedings which connect the Government of the United States with it. I oppose the whole policy, not on account of the manner in which it is treated. I now move to strike out the third section of this bill, so as to confine it to the original purposes of the law in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Fessenden.) The section proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Sec. 3. And he is further directed, that so much of the second section of the act to which this is a supplement, as requires the sale and delivery of said guano to the United States, and for use therein, shall be, and is hereby, repealed; and hereafter it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States to deliver to any other citizen, who has delivered their bond, or bonds, and have received a certification of the acceptance thereof by the President of the United States, to deliver to any other citizen, to other than citizens of the United States, and for other use therein.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the Senate will not strike out that section. It is certainly one of the main provisions of the bill. I do not want to discuss it. I will only say that the section as it stands received the united and unanimous approbation of the Committee on Commerce, and I hope it will be retained.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 5, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Butler, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clark, Crittenden, Doolittle, Durkee, Freese, Fitch, Foot, Gwin, Hamlin, Harris, Hempstead, Hunter, Irving, Johnson, of Tennessee, Mason, Nichols, Pearce, Sesselsburg, Seward, Simmons, Sumner, Treadwell, and Wade—29.

NAYS.—Messrs. Davis, Fitzpatrick, Rice, Slidell, and Vileas—5.

So the bill was passed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. GWIN. I give notice that I shall on this day week call up bill No. 1 on the general orders—the bill authorizing the President of the United States to contract for the transportation of the mails, troops, seamen, munitions of war, Army and Navy supplies, and all other Government property by rail, from the Mississippi river to San Francisco, in the State of California. This is the railroad bill that was under discussion in this body during the last Congress, as reported by a select committee, and amended by the Senate. I have deferred calling up the bill heretofore, because I have been in hopes that we should have a bill sent to us from the other House; but I have lost all hope of that, and I want the friends of the measure to send me on this day week in bringing it up in the Senate and disposing of it.

MARK ELISHA.

Mr. SLIDELL. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 42, for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Mark Elisha. It is a bill which has been prepared at the Land Office to authorize certain parties in Louisiana to enter land under an old grant, and I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to confirm the claim of Mark Elisha for four hundred acres, entered under No. 365, (register's number, 126,) in the seventh class of the report dated December 30, 1815, of the register and receiver at Opelousas, Louisiana, the claim being justly surveyed, but reported as embracing parts of lots Nos. 3 and 4, and south half of section twenty, sections twenty-one and twenty-eight, lot No. 6, of section twenty-seven, and lot No. 1, of section twenty-nine, in township two north, of range four east, southwestern land division of the Louisiana Territory. The survey general of Louisiana is to survey the claim, and present it on the official plats. The act is only to be considered as a relinquishment of part of the United States, and not to interfere with any adverse valid rights to the same land.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY DESERTIONS AND ENLISTMENTS.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 46) to prevent desertion, and to facilitate enlistment of soldiers in the Army of the United States. It provides that every person, not subject to the rules and articles of war, who shall procure or entice a soldier in the service of the United States to desert; or who shall harbor, conceal, or give employment to a deserter, or carry him away, or aid in carrying him away, knowing him to be such; or who shall procure for any soldier his arms, equipments, uniform, clothing, or any part thereof; or any captain or commanding officer of any ship or vessel, carrying away any such soldier, as one of his crew or otherwise, knowing him to have deserted, or who shall aid to deliver him up to the custody of his commanding officer, shall, upon legal conviction, be fined, at the discretion of any court having cognizance of the offense, in any sum not exceeding $500, and be imprisoned not exceeding two years. It also provides that any commissioned officer of the Army may administer the prescribed oath of enlistment to recruits, if there be no civil magistrate authorized to administer it, within reach.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that in the ninth line, after the word "thereof," the words "knowing him to be such" should be inserted. As the bill now stands, it would subject a person to punishment who purchased from a soldier his arms, equipments, uniform, or clothing, without knowing that he was a soldier.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to insert the words "knowing him to be such," after the word "thereof," in the ninth line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN IOWA.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate now take up joint resolution No. 2, removing the restrictions upon a certain grant of five sections of land to the State of Iowa.

Mr. YULEE. The Senate is evidently very thin, and it is likely to be much fuller to-day. I think it better to make a motion to adjourn. I am unwilling to take up business in the present condition of the Senate, when there is certainly no quorum present, and there is not likely to be a quorum later to-day.

Mr. FOOT. What is the matter?

Mr. YULEE. Members are in the other House.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no doubt there is a quorum of the Senators within or near the Chamber, who can be counted as readily. This is a small matter. It merely concerns the State of Iowa a perfect title to five sections of land originally granted to aid in the construction of public buildings. The joint resolution was reported by the Committee on Public Lands unanimously. It passed the Senate at the last session of Congress, and failed in the House of Representatives merely for want of time.

Mr. YULEE. My motion was in order. I moved that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust the Senator from Florida will withdraw his motion. This is a local bill.

Mr. YULEE. I shall not press my motion until this bill is disposed of.

Mr. GRIMES. This is a little local bill which passed the Senate at the last session of Congress. Some years ago five sections of land were donated to the State of Iowa for the purpose of erecting upon them the capitol of the State. The capitol was not finally erected upon that land, but the title became perfect in the State. The State has since seen fit to divert the grant to the purpose of establishing a new capitol, and now solicits the assent of Congress to that diversion. That is the whole proposition. I suppose there can be no objection to it.

The motion of Mr. HARLAN was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 2) removing the restrictions upon a certain grant of five sections of land to the State of Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. CLAY. Before the joint resolution is passed, I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa whether the State did not get a grant of other lands, in lieu of these sections, for the State capitol.

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir.

Mr. CLAY. That is satisfactory.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FOWLER, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 305) making appropriations for the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1861, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

On motion of Mr. HUNTER, the bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

JOHN LORD'S REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senate to take up a little private bill, which has already twice passed the Senate, but at this session stands low on the Private Calendar. It is a matter of very small consequence except to the parties interested. I move to take up Senate bill No. 224, for the relief of the heirs-at-law of Abigail Nason, sister and devisee of John Lord, deceased.

Mr. IVERSON. That is a private bill, and we come up to it in regular order. I desire to have a public bill taken up to-day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senator will not interfere. One or two private bills have already been taken up and passed. This bill cannot be reached for weeks regularly on the Private Calendar. I hope it will be taken up now. I think it can be disposed of in five minutes.

Mr. IVERSON. I will not object to taking up private bills in the morning hour; but to break in upon the hours for public business in this way seems to me to be wrong.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senator will be kind this time, because there is nobody here to attend to public business; and I trust he will interpose no objection, as I have the floor, and my motion is in order.

Mr. IVERSON. I will let it go.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 224) for the relief of the heirs-at-law of Abigail Nason, sister and devisee of John Lord, deceased, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to the heirs-at-law of Abigail Nason, sister and devisee of John Lord, deceased, late of South Berwick, in the State of Maine, the sum of $336, in full for the amount due John Lord for services performed by him as a seaman on board the United States ship Ranger during the revolutionary war.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to hear the report read.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. NICHOLSON on the 27th of February:

The Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Nason and others, legal representatives of John Lord, deceased, make the following report:

They have carefully examined the several papers on file in the case, and find them fully sustaining the report made to the Senate on the 15th of February, 1858. The committee, therefore, respectfully recommend, as follows:

IN THE SENATE, February 15, 1858.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Nason and others, legal representatives of John Lord, deceased, report:

This claim is founded upon the allegation that John Lord served his country, during the war of the Revolution, as a seaman on board the United States ship Ranger, from April or May, 1779, to May, 1780, when she was taken at the surrender of Charleston; and that she was detained on board a guard-ship some time afterwards, and finally returned about the last of July—making in all fifteen months. James Gooch deposes that he was purser and clerk of said vessel during the time mentioned; that Lord was aboard; that no pay-roll was made out, and no payments made to his men.

Joseph Wardwell, a shipmate of Mr. Lord, also testifies to the truth of the facts alleged.

In the original petition of Mr. Lord for the payment of this claim, which was presented to the Twentieth Congress, he assigns, as the reasons why his claim was not paid, that he was discharged from the service, and that he knew that any provision had been made by Government for paying off the seamen; or until 1798, when, on his return to a foreign voyage, he was discharged, and that he was paid (whose affidavit is in the case) that he and other Rangers had been paid. He then applied to an agent to assist him in procuring his pay, but without success; and that it still remains unpaid.

It appears from statements that there are no records of the Ranger in either the Treasury or Navy Departments.

The case has been twice favorably reported in the House of Representatives, and once a bill was introduced, but it being near the close of the Congress, the bill did not appear to have received any action in the Senate. No additional report upon it appears to have ever been made.

The committee are of opinion that the evidence before them sustains the claim, and they report a bill for the payment of the amount of wages and interest thereon from the time that proof of the service rendered was produced and the claim was made upon the Government for proof of what was due.

Mr. HUNTER. Is this a claim for interest on a revolutionary debt?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Interest only from the time he first made the proof.

Mr. HUNTER. How long ago was that?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Revolution of 1776.

Mr. CLAY. I cannot vote for any bill that proposes to pay interest on any claim against the Government. I think it is time that some statute of limitations should be adopted, to run against the revolutionary claims. From a number of them that have been presented since I have been a member of the Senate, I judge that they will never cease to be preferred. There is a claim for interest upon services said to have been rendered, from the time when the claim was first preferred. As I stated some time ago in the Senate, I have at this session offered a petition for the payment of money which was advanced by a citizen of the State of New York, for a certain tract of land, which the Government professed to hold the title to and sold to him; but it appeared afterwards that the Government had no title whatever; yet it held the money of my constituent for twenty or thirty years, and has refused to pay interest on it, as I see calculated the Commissioner of the Land Office, there is no case within his knowledge on record where the Government has paid it. That is a much stronger claim than this. Here, an individual, as he represents; through ignorance of his right, failed to prefer his claim against the Government for a series of years. When he did prefer it, it was not at once met. It does not appear that he produced at that time satisfactory evidence of the claim. The evidence may have been insufficient, and because of its insufficiency Congress has refused to pay interest on it.

Yet we are now asked, not only to pay the original claim, but to pay interest upon it from the time the demand was first made. I think it is a very mischievous precedent. The amount, it is true, is inconsiderable, but it involves a very important principle, and that is, that the Government is the source of a great deal of mischief. I trust, therefore, that the bill will not pass; and I must ask for the yeas and nays upon its passage.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Tennessee reported this bill. I do not know whether he calculated the interest or not. The bill says nothing about interest; but the committee adopted a previous report which said that interest was allowed.

Mr. NICHOLSON. In the division of the late Committee on Revolutionary Claims, when this case was referred to me, and, on examination of the proof, my impression is that it is even stronger than stated in the report, as to the justice of the original claim, and as to its being made out satisfactorily and never having been paid. As to the interest, I think that the committee adopted the rule of allowing interest usually from the time when the application is made. The amount of the original claim is, I think, between one and two hundred dollars. Interest from the time it was first presented to Congress brings it up to nearly a thousand dollars. The committee adopted the rule of allowing interest usually from the time when the application is made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator from Maine had better consent to strike out the allowance of interest, and then there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Virginia does not understand it. The bill allows a sum in gross; it says nothing about interest; therefore the bill makes no precedent on that question. I understand that the case of the Senator who served in the revolutionary war, under Paul Jones, and was imprisoned fifteen months. He made his application at the earliest moment that he could, to the Twentieth Congress. Then he made out his proofs, and a bill to pay him passed the House and to the Senate, but as so far as the bill failed to be acted upon in the Senate; and this bill, as it stands now, for precisely the same amount now proposed to be paid, passed the Senate before. It has been reported upon favorably in its present shape twice by the Committee on Claims. At this session, the Committee on Claims sent it to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and that is the reason why it is so low down on the Calendar. The Committee on Revolutionary Claims have again reported the bill, and have adopted the principle, that the Government will not pay interest when they ought to have paid the original claim years before? Senators may see that the sum of money is a small one; and the bill itself says nothing about interest. The bill has been reported often. The money, justly due to this man, has been long withheld, after he made proof of his service, when everybody else who performed the same service received pay on the application being made. Now, to refuse to pay him on the ground that a little interest is to be allowed, would seem to me to be making the point on a case in which it should not be made. As to the claim which the Senator from Alabama states, it may be a hard case, but it will come before the Senate; it will be heard upon its merits, if it is to come; and if interest ought to be paid there, I shall be as willing to pay it as in this instance; but it strikes me, that of all the cases which could be presented this is not one on which to make the point. Incurst, of course, is not allowed except from the Senate; the proof was made and he was entitled to his money. The whole sum is but a little over three hundred dollars.

Mr. CLAY. The sum itself is inconsiderable; and if it were not for the precedent that we are establishing I should not oppose it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not a precedent.

Mr. CLAY. It is a precedent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not the first precedent.

Mr. CLAY. By parity of reasoning, in regard to every claim which we are now considering, and every one which we may consider hereafter, where ultimately the justice of the claim is acknowledged and the amount is paid, the party will be entitled to interest from the time he first presented the claim, and the Government is the source of proof; and, therefore, if we pass this bill, we shall have to pay interest in every case.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The Senator will allow me to say that the Committee on Revolutionary Claims have adopted the rule of making interest commence from the time of the first report in favor of a claim.

Mr. CLAY. That is objectionable, for several reasons. In the first place, we know that oftentimes committees report in favor of bills which the Senate has rejected.

Mr. PEARCE. This seems to me to be a very weak case. It is a claim for seaman's wages, alleged to have been due just eighty years ago. The party, it seems, was a seaman on board the United States ship of war Ranger, from April or May, 1779, to May, 1780, when she was taken at the surrender of Charleston, and kept in confinement for some time afterwards. His claim was presented in 1820—forty-nine years afterwards—and the testimony upon which it is based is that of a person named Gooch, who was the purser and clerk of the vessel. Forty years afterwards, and the evidence alleged to have been rendered he deposes that "he thinks Lord was aboard; that no pay-roll was made out, and no payments made to the men." The explanation for the laches, in not presenting his claim, is, that he did not know of the provision had been made for the payment of such cases.

I think this simple statement is evidence enough that it is a claim that ought not to be passed. I find an endorsement on the bill that the claim was made out about twenty years ago, and twenty dollars; so that over two hundred dollars is for interest; and this is interest to a man who for fifty years did not present his claim, and whose heirs or representatives now ask for it at the lapse of eighty years. I really cannot see ought to be allowed in this sort of litigation. There should be some time at which we should prohibit the production of these very antique and stale claims before Congress. It is said we have no evidence at all on this subject in any of the Departments. So much the better reason for rejecting the claim. The testimony which is offered is exceedingly loose; and after the lapse of eighty years, and after all the fire we have had, and the removals of the seat of Government, and the confusion which attended all the affairs of the General Government, it is not surprising that no provision was established under the present Constitution, it seems to me that any evidence we might have had may well be supposed to have been lost. At all events, I think, after the lapse of eighty years, no claim not better supported than this ought to be allowed. I shall vote against it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator took the first part of the evidence, which I confess was rather weak, and left out entirely all the rest; and he based his remarks on the testimony of one witness. Another witness testified positively and swore that Lord was on board the Ranger, and that he was taken prisoner, and kept a prisoner for fifteen months afterwards. That is proved positively; not by thinking one way or another. Then an explanation is given of the reason why he did not apply earlier; an explanation which was perfectly satisfactory to the committee; and after he applied a bill passed the House of Representatives while he was living. He has since died. The Senator understands as well as anybody else why it should not have been brought up until a later date, when it was looked up by the heirs of his devise, he having devised all the property he had.

The member of the committee who reported this bill, the Senator from Tennessee, has stated that the case was much stronger, in point of fact, than could seem from the statement in the report. The Committee on Revolutionary Claims was perfectly satisfied as to its justice. I ask whether there is not to be some respect paid to the reports of committees? As I stated, the claim was originally reported upon in the Twentieth Congress, and then a bill passed the House of Representatives on the report of a committee as to the facts; for of course they examined the facts. Since then it has been before two separate Committees on Claims of the Senate, who were satisfied of the facts; and how low have they come? The Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and they too are perfectly satisfied as to the facts. The objection now made to its passage by the Senator from Maryland is, that after all he does not think the proof is sufficient.

Well, Mr. President, I do not know how it is with other gentlemen; but with regard to myself on these matters of fact, unless it appears on the face of the paper that it could not have been—unless it appears that a mistake was made—I am disposed to trust accuracy in the reports, and reports of three or four committees, stating that they are perfectly satisfied of the existence of the facts. As to its being an old claim, that is not strange. Many claims of the same age have come before Congress and passed, to the perfect satisfaction of Congress. They expired, and ought to be paid; and, in my judgment, it is excessively hard that this Government, great as it is and rich as it is, should undertake to set up the statute of limitations against the reports of its own officers and the reports of Congress. I have known of neither this man nor his heirs have received this small amount; if they have not had the benefit of what his ought to have received, as the committee have reported, so much the more reason why it should be paid now, with an apology for not having paid it before.

We ought to exercise our power of passing upon these questions with some sort of discretion, and somewhat in the same manner that an honest man, if he happened to live long enough, would recognize his old debts. If he was satisfied that he was due the money, he would say, "To be sure, I owed you this money; but it is so long since the debt was first due, and its payment has been prevented for so long a period, by accident or various circumstances, that I will not pay you." Why not an application for a pension, or a claim for wages for services performed by this man; and surely no objection should be made to it on a ground of that description.

Now, as to the interest, I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I do not concur with him in his views. I told you the Court of Claims have held, that when a claim has been presented, proved, established—not an application for a gift or a gratuity, but a claim for an absolute debt—when the debt has been shown to exist and the Government has neglected to pay it; neglected to make the proper provision for it; failed of every reason in the world why interest should be paid. Why should not a claim against the Government stand precisely on the same ground, after it has been proved, that a claim against an individual stand? I see no justice or propriety in making a distinction. I know that it is the habit of the honorable Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, to object to the allowance of interest in nearly all cases, though I think he sometimes lets it pass. I do not quarrel with him in doing this; but I think it is wrong, as he does at the head of the Committee on Finance, it is his business to object to everything. He is a general objector to all sorts of claims against the Government; his position makes him so in a certain extent; but after all, I apprehend that he has the same views in regard to the equity of things that other men have, and I ask him to tell me whether there is any good reason on the face of the earth why, on a claim for services, when it has once been presented to this Government, and proved to the satisfaction of the Government itself, before its regular officers for examining such claims, interest should not be allowed if payment is withheld. Nobody can give a good reason for it. Sir, there is more reason in the case of the Government than in that of individuals, for the Government is better able to pay than individuals. If a claim is neglected, not presented to them, no matter for what reason, so that the Government has no notice of it, interest unquestionably should not be paid on it for a time anterior to its presentation, and that is the position which has always been assumed; but when a claim has been presented and proved, especially for service of this description rendered in the Revolution, it strikes me that there is no justice or reason in objecting to the allowance of interest. This little bill will form no precedent. It is not the report, but the bill we pass, which makes the precedent. This bill gives a gross sum of money for services performed. There is nothing about it in the shape of a man paying interest, and in that case, it would not be out of the way.

Mr. FEARCE. Mr. President, I think any claim eighty years old is justly liable to suspicion where the proof is only parol; and still more so if the claimant has been dead for many years. I have obtained fifty years after the claim arose. It is not any particular suspicion that I have of this proof; but it is the general suspicion which attaches to all claims of this sort which affects my mind; because we all know, sir, how numerous are the frauds committed upon the Government by means of parol proof. Every day we are prosecuting in the courts, in some State or other, men for obtaining pensions on false and forged testimony. I heard an instance the other day that struck me as so remarkable, that perhaps I may be permitted to mention it. There were about eight thousand men, I have been told, engaged on our side in the battle of Plattsburg, when the forces of Sir George Prevost were repulsed. The survivors of these men, and the widows of those deceased, were entitled to money lands, and to receive from Congress. Less than a thousand survivors, and they on proof, received their bounty lands; but it seems that there were some persons who had hastily gone to the support of the army at the defense of Plattsburg who were not on the muster-rolls, whose service the necessary record evidence could not be obtained. It was thought a great hardship, because these men had hurried in the midst of danger to the very thick of the fight, that they should not have the benefit of that law which was intended for those who fought. So a special bill was passed, and parol proof was authorized to be received in such cases. I have been told, and I think truthfully, that the claims for the survivors of those eight thousand, who were not on the muster-roll, have been proved to the satisfaction of the committee, and the whole number that were engaged in the battle, and who have received their bounty lands. I am afraid to specify the exact number; but I think I have heard that twenty thousand men have proved their claims on account of that single action, when there were only twelve thousand men engaged in the campaign, and when, of course, if the number of those who were there without being on the muster-rolls bore anything like the ordinary natural proportion to those who were on the rolls, there must have been a hundred and twenty thousand men in the battle! I wish to know how this fraud upon the Government is perpetrated. And it is because I think we ought to guard against these things in all cases that I object to this bill. This parol proof was taken some fifty years after the occasion when the claim party's claim arose. The witnesses, if they were young men at the time of the battle, twenty-five years of age, were seventy-five years old at the time they gave this testimony; and on the testimony of old, worn-out men, physically decayed, and probably mentally decayed too, we are to establish a claim which is at least fifty or eighty years old, and was then about fifty. It is wrong, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, as I understand it, the precedent which the passage of this bill will establish will be found in the bill and the report which accompanies it. That report goes on your archives; and when you come to look into the history of the bill, as undoubtedly persons who want to claim interest hereafter will do, they will bring up this report for the purpose of showing that interest was allowed. But it is not necessary to go to that sort of reasoning for the purpose of showing the nature of the precedent that will be established, for we are told that the Committee on Revolutionary Claims—I was not aware of it before—have established the principle that they will allow interest on every claim from the time the first report was made in its favor. That does not come within the enology of the decision of the Court of Claims allowing interest where the United States officers have liquidated a claim and acknowledged it, but failed to pay. Committees have no right to bind the United States Government. This is a mere report of a committee. It does not bind the Government until Congress has acted on it. How often do we find imprudent reports from committees? Sometimes the member who prelates the petition is allowed to make what report he pleases, the other members waiting until it is presented to the House, for the purpose of making a decision upon it. If we shall permit this bill to pass, it will be a claim, provided we pass this bill, from the time the first report was made in their favor, who can say how many millions it will take out of the Treasury? It is a new principle, so far as I have had any experience, in this House. I was not aware that this committee practiced upon it. If it be established, will not those who have heretofore recovered claims without interest—and that has been the practice for the greater portion of the history of this Government—be entitled, upon the establishment of this precedent, to come here and to demand interest, and say their claims were not paid in full by the amount they have already received? How many cases will it reopen, and what will it lead to hereafter? Why, sir, any man who chooses to present a claim, if he can pay the money, is at liberty to do so, whether it is acted upon by Congress or not, whether it is sanctioned by either House, establishes his right to interest from that day; and then, no matter how long it may run, if it runs on for half a century, or a hundred years, the Senator from Maine says that it is not right to protect the United States by the statute of limitations. I believe it to be more eminently proper in the case of the Government than of individuals. We have no such statute, and do not set upon it in regard to claims against the Government. I wish we had. I believe it would be just.

An individual, when he is afraid of interest, can go to the creditor and demand the account, and he can tender payment. The United States Government can do no such thing; it must wait until the claim is made, and then, when the claim is made, it seems we are to pay interest from the time it can obtain the first report in its favor, or, as the Senator from Maine says, from the time the party first makes his proof. On such principles there is no telling what mischief may be done. If we classify claims that have been heretofore allowed, on which no interest has been paid. It is for that reason that I object. I know this is small in amount; and if it had not been for the claim to interest, and the still more important enunciation of the principle, that this interest was proposed to be given, I should have made no opposition; but I believe it is necessary that the Senate should repudiate this principle in regard to the allowance of interest from the time any report is made; and further, I think it would be a valuable lesson to the public mind, if the House of Representatives passed to protect the Government of the United States. I know we have not got it, and I fear we shall not be able to pass such a law; but I believe it would be just, and I believe it would contribute to the peace of mind of our country, because it would force citizens to make their claims when they occurred, and it would protect the Government against the frauds to which it is liable when claims of long standing are presented. I trust that this bill will not pass, unless that portion of the bill which makes it from a mere report of Mr. IVERSON. In acting upon private claims of this sort, I have generally adopted for myself the rule of abiding by the report of the committee, because I cannot investigate every case. Now, in relation to this very case, it is impossible for me to understand the merits of the original claim. There is contradictory evidence perhaps, and I am in doubt about it. I give to the committee the benefit of that doubt. That is the principle upon which I act in reference to private claims always. Unless I am satisfied that the claim is unjust, I take the report of the committee and pin my faith to the sleeve of the committee. I think that is the proper course for us to pursue, and not to vote blindfold against every claim that may be presented because it is going to take money out of the Treasury of the United States. I mean to vote on that principle for this claim, although I do not distinctly understand the merits of the original case. But I am in favor of the allowance of interest, and an altogether different reason for that which has been stated.

My friend from Alabama does not want to vote for this interest, because he considers that it will be a precedent. I want to vote for it to make it a precedent. Here is a case in which, if we pass this bill, the Senate must of course act on the presumption that the original claim was just and ought to have been paid long ago. If you admit that the claim was a just one and ought to have been paid when it was first presented, fifteen or twenty years ago—and you actually so declare when you vote for paying it now—then you are on what principle you ought not to allow interest?

I want to establish it as a precedent for this reason: if the principle is settled that upon every claim which is a just one the parties shall be entitled to interest from the time it is presented and made out to the Government, then the Government will be more active in paying private claims, and we shall not have these claims going over from session to session, and from Congress to Congress, and the parties kept out of their money for years. Congress is a slow body whenever a claim is taken by a private claimant; and I want to stick a rowel into her side, and make her go a little more rapidly. She is a slow jaded whenever there is a small rider put on; but when there is a large, heavy weight, she treads a little faster. If a claim is for $100,000, or a million, or so, she can go rapidly enough to get rid of her burden; she very soon delivers it, and pays the claim; but whenever a small claim, a light rider, gets upon her, it is very difficult to make her go. Look at the cases from the Court of Claims. Five years ago you established the Court of Claims, and she has paid us go before them and get judgments. They have gone there at a considerable expense and waste of time, and they have got their judgments, and how many laws Congress paid? How many judgments of the Court of Claims has Congress ever paid? Not a half dozen. We have on our docket now between seventy and a hundred private claims, which have received the favorable judgments of the Court of Claims, and yet you refuse, session after session and Congress after Congress, to give them your attention, and to pay them. You give them the attention of the judges of the Court of Claims do not bear interest. One branch of Congress passes a bill; it goes to the other House, and they never consider it. Thus the claimant is kept between the two Houses of Congress like a shuttlecock, going from one to the other, and never getting his rights. Even when you have given him your judgment, and admitted that the claim is just and proper, you refuse to pay the money session after session, and finally you say you will not allow interest.

I think that is unjust, and I am for allowing them interest in every case where I believe the claim is a just one, from the time it is proved to the satisfaction of the accounting officers and presented to Congress. If I am satisfied that a claim is a just one, and that Congress, from sheer neglect or the influence of some party, has not often manifested to private claims, has not attended to it, I am for allowing interest; I am for sticking the rowel into Congress, and setting a precedent which will make them more active hereafter in allowing private claims.

Mr. CLAY. If the Senator from Georgia is sincere in his declaration of what he believes is the duty of Congress, I am bound to say that he has been very delinquent in his practice as chairman of the Committee on Claims; because, acting on his preface, every bill that he has reported to the Senate should have been accompanied with a clause allowing interest from the time the claim was first presented.

Mr. IVERSON. I am in favor of it.

Mr. CLAY. But you do not urge it.

Mr. IVERSON. The committee do not. I am not in fault. I am not responsible for all the action of the committee.

Mr. CLAY. According to the Senator's doctrine, Congress must go back and reopen every claim. If we legislate in future upon the principles of the Senator from Georgia, I say we must reopen every private claim that has come before the Government, and the effect of it would be to quadruple the amount of principal which has been paid, in liquidating the interest which has accrued.

But gentlemen say that this Government should not stand on any better footing than an individual—a private citizen. Admit it, and apply their own rule to the case which is now before us, and what is it? We have a claim preferred against the Government upon ex parte testimony; and what court in this country would respect a claim thus preferred against a private individual? What opportunity had the Government to cross-interrogate the witnesses to this claim? What opportunity had the Government to inquire into their character for veracity? None whatever. Therefore, I say that it is not putting the Government upon a better footing than a private citizen.

But, sir, the Senator is a lawyer, and so is the Senator from Maine; and I submit to both of them that interest is never due upon any claim except in virtue of agreement between parties or in virtue of legislation. Interest is always either conventional or is the result of the action of the law. That is my opinion, at least; and until we adopt some law binding the Government to pay interest, it should not be preferred.

Now, sir, the Senator from Georgia thinks he ought to pay interest on this claim; not that he has investigated it, not that he knows the character of the witnesses to it, not that he must not admit that it has the earmarks of suspicion and of doubt upon it, but because three committees of Congress have reported in favor of it. As was remarked by I think, the Senator from Virginia, we all know that that amounts to the testimony of three members of Congress in its favor, and nothing more; because it is utterly impossible for perhaps any one of the important committees of the Senate to investigate carefully every claim that is referred to it, or to refer it to their sub-committee, who reports to the committee his opinion, and the committee generally defers to his opinion. Therefore, I say, it is tantamount to the testimony of three members of Congress in its favor, and nothing more. Now here is a claim that is eighty years of age; that was not preferred against the Government until it was nearly fifty years old. It is sustained, from all I can learn, by the positive testimony of but one witness, and he a man who was then probably seventy-five years of age. Now, I should look with good deal of discredit upon any man who would undertake to swear positively to an event that had occurred fifty years ago. I say that, if you pass this bill as it is, you establish a precedent which constrains us, if we intend to deal out equal and exact justice to all claimants against the Government, to pay interest hereafter, whenever a claim is referred, from the time it is preferred, or at least from the time the proof is made out. That is the rule which the Senator from Georgia thinks ought to be adopted; and I concur with him that if you adopt it here you ought to do so everywhere, to all, and respect all the old cases. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SLIDELL. This bill appears to involve a very important question. I do not think it ought to be passed upon with the number of Senators now present, and I move that the Senate have a ["Executive session."] I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 29, 1860.

The House met at two o'clock, Mr. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. BROCKTON. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SELECT COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BARR, Mr.

CONKLING, Mr. GANNETT, Mr. VERRILL, and Mr. HARMS of Maryland, the select committee, under the resolution of the House of the 26th instant, relative to the contract with McIntyre, Hixby & Co., for labor in the public store, No. 12 Broad street, New York.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HICKET, its Chief Clerk, notifying the House that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House to the third amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 241) authorizing publishers to print on their papers the date when subscriptions expire, and in relation to the postage on drop letters.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill (No. 299) to increase and regulate the pay of the Navy of the United States; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had ordered, on the 29th instant, at fifteen minutes after twelve o'clock, the printing of the letter of the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, communicating copies of memorials and resolutions of the Legislative Assembly of that Territory in relation to the payment of certain militiamen and volunteers, called into service against the Indians—the usual number.

CONDITION OF BANKS.

Mr. BRANCH. I have a resolution which goes, as a matter of course, to the Committee on Printing; and I should like to have an opportunity of offering it now.

There being no objection.

Mr. BRANCH offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Treasury Department, two thousand extra copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the condition of the banks of the United States.

REGULAR ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire leave of the House to make a report from the Committee of Claims.

Mr. GROW. I object to everything but the regular order of business.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to make a statement, which will lead to no discussion at all. I was directed by the Committee of Claims to report a couple of bills; but being absent when that committee was called for reports, I lost the opportunity of reporting them. I ask leave to report them now.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GROW. I want my objection to stand as a standing objection to everything not in order. I hope I will not have to repeat it.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the bill (H. R. No. 305) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1861; the question being on agreeing to the following amendment:

For the manufacture or purchase of apparatus and equipment for the Army, $3,000,000; and there be added to the staff of the Army one signal officer, with the rank, pay, and allowances of a major of cavalry, who shall have charge, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of the duty, and all books, papers, and apparatus connected therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was so engrossed, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIEMERMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS OF THE REVOLUTION.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 13) to provide for the settlement of the claims of the officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army, and of the widows and children of those who died in the service; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FENTON. In view of the large number of letters which I have received for copies of this bill in view of the general interest which seems to be manifested throughout the country in regard to it, I ask that double the usual number of copies be printed. I trust that the House will give its consent to this.

The SPEAKER. The motion to print extra numbers must be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FENTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. McKNIGHT. I hope there will be no objection; there is no part of the country that is not interested in this bill, and we are getting letters on the subject every day.

Mr. FENTON. An objection is made, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Printing. It was so referred.

CAPTAIN DAVID NOBLE'S REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. FENTON, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Captain David Noble deceased, which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EPISCOPAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back a bill (S. No. 106) authorizing the Domestic and Foreign Mission Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States to enter a certain tract of land in the State of Wisconsin; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL DAVIS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, from the same committee, also reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Daniel Davis, which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DANIEL WILSON.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the bill of Daniel Wilson, which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBB. Did not I hear the Committee on Public Expenditures called?

The SPEAKER. It was called.

Mr. COBB. And was there no response from that committee, which is charged with the investigation of the public expenditures? What has become of the bill which I had referred to them to curtail some of the expenses of the Government?

Mr. GROW. No debate is in order; and I object to it.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. GROW, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a bill of the House to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROW moved that five hundred extra copies of the bill be printed.

The motion was referred, under the rules, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like to know if that bill is not a homestead bill? We have already passed one, and it seems to me to be unnecessary to go to the expense of printing another.

Mr. GROW. The bill has been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. We wanted to get it out of our hands.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an adverse report on the bill of William Baiting, praying for redemption of certain continental money; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

PANAMAQUODDY INDIANS.

On motion of Mr. ETHERIDGE, the Committee on Indian Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of certain Panamaquoddy Indians, and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

HEIRS OF MARY JEMISON.

Mr. BURROUGHS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of Mary Jemison; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS UPON THE MIAMI RESERVE.

Mr. BURROUGHS, from the same committee, made an adverse report in relation to settlers upon the Miami Reserve, in Kansas; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF FURBERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 2) to regulate the sea-service pay of furbers in the Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORSE. I give notice that two weeks from to-day I shall move to take up this bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. There is a bill upon the Speaker's table relating to the same subject. I ask that it be taken up, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and printed.

There being no objection, a bill (S. No. 299) to increase and regulate the pay of the Navy of the United States was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CELESTIA P. HART.

Mr. POTTLE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Celestia P. Hart, widow of Constructor Samuel P. Hart; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOILIATION BILL.

Mr. ROYCE, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of the claims of American citizens for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ROYCE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until three weeks from to-day.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to know whether that bill comes from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the motion to postpone is made, I object to its being made a special order. I am willing that it shall be sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but I object to its being made a special order there for any day.

Mr. BRANCH. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is a copy precisely of the bill which was introduced into the House in the last Congress upon the same subject. At least it was so understood in the House, and the time lost was given to report it to the House. The point of order was made at last Congress that the bill contained an appropriation, and that it must, therefore, under the rule, receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

After a full and careful consideration of the question of order, the Speaker, reserving his decision for a day and a night, decided that the bill did contain an appropriation and must necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; which was accordingly sent there. If I am not mistaken, the decision was made upon a careful consideration of the law of Congress. I think the House assented to the view taken by the Speaker, that the bill did contain an appropriation and was obliged to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that if, upon an examination of the bill at the time to which it is proposed to postpone it, it shall be found to contain an appropriation, it must, as a matter of course, go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from North Carolina will then have an opportunity to make a motion to commit the bill. I wish to say further, that last year when the French spoliation bill was before the House, the then Speaker examined the bill with a good deal of care, and was, as he said, in a good deal of doubt as to the proper decision to be made. He finally decided, however, that the bill did make an appropriation; and although, as I believe, a majority of the House at the time differed with the Speaker in his decision, yet they acquiesced, and allowed the bill to be passed.

Mr. MAYNARD. Was not the decision of the Speaker submitted to and sustained by the House?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I think not; I think that no appeal was taken. But I wish to say further, that I have looked at the reasons given by the late Speaker, and I find that, if the quotation from the bill upon which he based his decision is correct, the bill then before him was not like this bill. This bill is certainly not liable to the objections which were then made, unless it be true that the Secretary of the Treasury is himself the Government of the United States. This bill does not provide for the payment of any money, unless in pursuance of appropriations which shall be in future made by the Congress of the United States. I think, therefore, that it is not liable to the objections which were made in the last Congress. At any rate, whether it is or not, the question can be raised when the bill again comes before the House for consideration. I hope it will not be referred to a Committee of the Whole, because I have no objection, and no one knows it better than the gentleman from North Carolina—it will be the defeat of the measure altogether. I call for the previous question on the motion to postpone.

Mr. BRANCH. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the call for the previous question for a moment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I will, certainly, at the gentleman's request.

Mr. BRANCH. The gentleman from Maine says that some change has been made in this bill that will take it out of the scope of the rule under which the decision of the Speaker was made in the last session. Mr. Speaker, I state as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that the authority to report the bill was upon the express allegation that it was precisely the bill which was reported in the last Congress.

During the last Congress, as I said when I was up before, and as has been admitted by the gentleman himself, the point of order was distinctly raised on this bill that it made an appropriation, and must necessarily be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The then Speaker, after twenty-four hours' consideration and careful examination of the statutes, comparing them with the bill, decided that it must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I have no recollection as to whether an appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair or not; but we know very well that if there was no appeal taken, it was because members were satisfied that the decision was correct and could not be properly set aside.

I raise the question now that this bill must have its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole House, and that even the motion to postpone cannot be entertained.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina, that even if the call does make an appropriation, it is still in order to make the motion to postpone the bill to a certain day; and then, when it comes up, the gentleman may move to refer the bill, if he sees fit. But, sir, I wish to say that the gentleman from North Carolina is wrong in saying that it is precisely the same bill as that reported last year, unless the late Speaker erred in the decision which he then made. He then quoted from that bill to prove that the scrip to be issued under it was payable out of the Treasury of the United States. The gentleman from North Carolina may be redeemed by the Government of the United States, at its discretion; and that discretion can only be exercised hereafter by an act of Congress; so that either the late Speaker erred in the decision which he made, or the present bill does differ from that which was reported last year. Let us examine the bill, and ascertain whether it really does make an appropriation or not. I therefore now call for the previous question; and I hope, if gentlemen do not intend to defeat the bill altogether, they will vote to postpone.

Mr. BRANCH. The gentleman, I think, must have misunderstood the statement I made. I did not say that the bill was precisely the bill which was reported last year. What I stated was, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs had not authorized the reporting of any bill upon this subject, except the bill which was reported last year; and if this bill is not the same in every respect, then it is not properly before the House, because no member of the committee was authorized to report it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Let me say a word first, in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina. I did not say the bill was not the same as that reported last year; what I said was, that if it is the same then the Speaker of the last Congress was in error in regard to the contents of that bill, for his decision was based upon a statement of the provisions of that bill which this bill does not contain.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will refer him to the record of what was done on the question of order raised in reference to this bill in the last Congress. I read from the Journal of the last House:

"The SPEAKER having announced as the regular order of business the bill of the House (H. B. No. 553) to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for damages sustained by them from the 31st day of July, 1861, heretofore postponed until this day; the pending question being on the motion of Mr. ROYCE that it be committed to the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union, and printed,

"Mr. LETCHER made the point of order that, under the terms of the bill, the certificate of stock authorized therein may be redeemed by the Secretary of the Treasury whenever he has funds with which to do so; and thus, commencing an appropriation, the motion must be deferred to the Committee of the Whole. Pending which, under debate,

"Mr. HOUSTON moved that the bill be laid on the table. And the question being put, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 106.

"The question then recurring on the point of order made by Mr. LETCHER.

"The SPEAKER sustained the same, and decided that the bill be first committed to the Committee of the Whole."

"From this decision of the Chair Mr. FLORENCE appealed. Pending which,

"Mr. ROYCE moved that the appeal be laid on the table. And the question being put, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 128, says the Globe.

"So the appeal was laid on the table."

So it will be seen that there was a very decided expression of opinion on the subject by the last House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The gentleman is right in reference to the question of order. I did not remember precisely what was done, but I presume the friends of the bill acceded to the decision of the Speaker because the bill came in so late in the session that they had no hope of carrying it through the House. I recollect perfectly well that Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, who was very conversant with the rules, stated that the decision of the Speaker was not sustained by the facts as they appeared.

Mr. HOUSTON. The bill reported by the committee now is precisely, in every word and letter, the bill before the last House upon which the decision was made to which the gentleman from Tennessee refers. Here is the bill, as it was printed by the last House, and it contains precisely the provisions of the bill which the gentleman Or made his decision, which decision, I presume, will be repeated by the present Speaker.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to say to the House that the then Speaker made his decision upon a bill which was not before the House. I will send for the Globe, and show the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON], and others, what was the decision and what it was made upon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am under the impression that the gentleman from Maine is mistaken. The decision which was then made by the Speaker was made in part upon the bill which was made in and in part upon existing laws which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem the outstanding obligations of the Government. This bill says that the stock to be issued under it shall be redeemable at the pleasure of the Secretary, and there is an existing law which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem the outstanding stock of the Government out of appropriations made permanently for that purpose. Looking at the provisions of the bill and at the existing law, the Speaker came to the decision, and properly, in my judgment, that the Government could redeem the stock to be issued whenever it saw fit. I will now state what the decision of the Chair was, and upon what language it was made. In the Congressional Globe, second session, Thirty-Fifth Congress, part one, page 729, I find the following:

"The Chair imagines there is very great difference, according to his recollection, between the bill now pending and the one to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WASHBURN] refers."

Let me say, sir, that it was claimed by the friends of the bill that it made no appropriation of money, but simply declared a liability on the part of the Government. It was claimed that it only established a debt; which, however, could not be paid until Congress should make an appropriation for that purpose in the regular mode and with the regular forms. Congress may create an office and authorize the payment of a salary, but that salary will not be paid until an appropriation is made to that end. Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, took the ground that the French prohibition bill established only a debt, declared a liability, and that the money could only be drawn from the Treasury hereafter upon appropriation duly made. He likened it to a case decided by the Speaker a short time before in reference to a pension bill, which was introduced into the House, providing for an annual draft upon the Treasury of $10,000. There the Speaker declared that that pension bill did not make an appropriation of money, and therefore that it was not necessary its first consideration should be had in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Let me go on with the decision with which I commenced:

"There was certainly no portion of the tax or charge, if it was a charge, upon the people which could here be drawn from the Treasury under the pension bill. The difficulty in deciding this question grows, in the opinion of the Chair, out of the proper construction that is to be placed upon the last clause of the seventh section of the bill, taken in connection with a clause in the act of 1853. The words to which the Chair refers are these: and such certificate of stock to the $5,000,000 of stock which is provided shall be issued—shall be attention at the Treasury."

I desire now to call the attention of the Chair and that of the House to the pending bill, and what is the difference. "And such certificates of stock shall be redeemable at the Treasury of the United States," was the language upon which the decision of the Speaker was made that has been referred to by the gentleman from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. That is not the language of the bill now upon the Speaker's table, if my recollection serves me. The language there is, that the stock shall be redeemable at the pleasure of the Government, or something to that effect. Whether it is true or not that, under the former bill, upon which the decision of the Speaker was made, money could be paid out of the Treasury, it is certain that, under the present bill, no appropriation is made and no money can be paid out of the Treasury under an appropriation which is made for that purpose in due form. The decision of the Speaker heretofore made, therefore, will not apply to the present bill.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Let me propound an interrogatory to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I am now. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] is correct in saying that the bill before the House is the same in its provisions as the bill of the last session; but it is equally true that the language upon which the former decision of the Speaker was made is not contained in the pending bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let me correct myself. When I received the bill at the hands of the Clerk, I understood him to say that it was the same as the bill which was before the House at that time. He has been right for the bill, and we can soon know whether it is the same. I presume that it is the same.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If it be in order, I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I will hear the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to say that, in response to an inquiry which I made of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr.

CORWIS], he stated that this bill was precisely similar to the bill which was reported to Congress at its last session. That was the understanding, I am satisfied, of every member of the committee who was present.

Mr. ROYCE. I understand that this bill is the same as that which was reported at the last session of Congress, and agreed with the gentleman from Mississippi at that time. I have stated that the decision last year was predicated upon certain language which the Speaker thought was in the bill of last year. It is now ascertained that no such language is in that bill. Therefore, we hold that it is no authority upon this occasion and against this bill, which does not contain the language upon which the decision was based.

Mr. ROYCE. It is the same as the bill reported at the last session.

The SPEAKER. The motion pending is the motion that the further consideration of this matter be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call the previous question on that motion.

The SPEAKER. It appears to the Chair that this controversy is premature at this time, and that it would be improper to permit when the time arrives to which it is postponed, if it is postponed. If it is to be postponed, there is no use in debating whether it contains an appropriation or not; that will be a proper subject for inquiry when it is again taken up.

Mr. BRANCH. I raise the question of order that this bill must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I insist that it must, under the rules, instantly go to that committee.

The SPEAKER. If the bill be postponed for three weeks from to-day, the Chair decides that it will then stand, when it is next taken up, in precisely the same condition which it is now.

Mr. FLORENCE. The time to which it is proposed to make the postponement is the time fixed for the opening of one of the great party conventions, and there will not, of course, be a quorum present here.

Mr. BRANCH. If the motion to postpone be voted down, will not the question then arise upon the point of order that I make, that this bill, under the rules, must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. McQUEEN. It is improper to postpone the consideration of an important measure to the week when the Charleston convention will be in session.

Mr. MILLSON. I make the point of order that the demand for the previous question is not in order until there is a decision as to whether this bill does or does not, under the rules, go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I make the point of order that the bill must go there.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow the Chair to state that the demand for the previous question covers nothing but the postponement of the bill? I refer to the opinion of the Chair; it does not cover the question of reference.

Mr. MILLSON. I am aware of that.

The SPEAKER. When the bill comes up, if will be an open question whether it shall go to a committee or not.

Mr. MILLSON. I am aware of that. I wish the Clerk to read the 131st rule.

Mr. McQUEEN. I want to suggest to gentlemen on the other side, that the time proposed is an improper time to make a special order of so important a bill. This is the week in which it is customary to hold the committee of the whole; when, I suppose, many members will be absent from the House. This is one of the most important bills that can come before the House, and one that has been before it every Congress since 1861.

Mr. ROYCE. What day does the gentleman from South Carolina suggest for the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McQUEEN. I suggest no day to make it a special order; but I suggest to the gentleman who make this proposition, that the week proposed is the week in which the Charleston convention is to be held.

Mr. FLORENCE. Well, I hope a week earlier will be fixed for this important bill.

Mr. ROYCE. Then I modify my motion by making the bill a special order for two weeks from to-day.

Mr. MILLSON. I ask for the reading of the 133d rule.

The 131st rule was read, as follows:

"No motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall be discussed the day on which it is made or offered; and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House."

Mr. MILLSON. I call now for the reading of the 133d rule.

The 133d rule was read, as follows:

"All proceedings involving appropriation of money shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House."

Mr. MILLSON. Now, my point of order is, that not only must the bill—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The gentleman from Virginia will permit me to say here, that this very bill was last year reported and postponed precisely as it is proposed to postpone it now.

Mr. MILLSON. My point of order is, that not only must the bill be discussed in a Committee of the Whole House, but that all proceedings touching the bill must be discussed in a Committee of the Whole House, and that it is incompetent for the House to postpone the consideration of the bill, and to keep it before the House for a single day. It must be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, if it is to go there at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain that view of the case. It appears to the Chair that the mere matter of postponement to another day may well be disposed of now, and that it does not involve the settlement of the question.

Mr. MILLSON. The motion to postpone would admit of a discussion on the merits of this bill.

The SPEAKER. No discussion on the merits of the bill is lawful at this stage—nothing but a discussion as to the question of postponement. It is a mere delay that is asked. In the opinion of the Chair, the bill, when it comes up again, will come up in the condition it is in now. The question of postponement is postponed.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move to lay the bill on the table. But if gentlemen will agree to let the bill go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it ought to be, I will withdraw that motion.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will waive his motion for the present, considering that no chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who takes a lively interest in the question, and is thoroughly posted on the subject, is present.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then I ask the gentleman from Vermont to agree that this bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that it can be reported again by the chairman himself. I desire to say further, that it was the understanding in the committee that—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The gentleman from Mississippi knows very well that if the bill were recommitted it could not be reported again in two weeks' time.

Mr. FLORENCE. Well, we would gain nothing by recommending the bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BARKSDALE withdrew his motion.

The question was taken on Mr. Royce's motion to make the bill a special order for this day two weeks; and it was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was made a special order; and he moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN RANDOLPH CLAY.

Mr. ROYCE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back the joint resolution (S. No. 5) authorizing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to revise and adjust the accounts of John Randolph Clay, United States Minister to Peru. I move to put the joint resolution on its passage. I think there can be no objection to the passage of the resolution; I hope the House will consent to take it up, and pass it at this hour.

Mr. BRANCH. I object to the passage of this resolution, and shall consequently object to its being put on its passage at this time. I move that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed. The motion was agreed to.

SEIZURE OF THE BARK ADRIATIC.

Mr. BURLINGAME, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a joint resolution relative to the alleged seizure and condemnation of the American bark Adriatic by the French authorities; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS DAINES.

Mr. BURLINGAME, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Francis Daines, which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 241) authorizing publishers to print on their papers the date when subscriptions expire, and in relation to the postage on drop letters; and an act for the relief of Mary E. Castor, when the Speaker signed the same.

THOMAS L. L. BRENT.

Mr. BRANCH, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of Thomas L. L. Brent, for out-of-state charges d'affaires; which was laid on the table.

ADMISSION OF KANSAS.

Mr. GROW. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories to report back a bill (H. R. No. 23) for the admission of Kansas into the Union. I propose to submit a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories, so that the first will of the House, whether it will go into the discussion of the bill now, or fix a time for its consideration. The minority of the Committee on Territories desire to submit a report, and I suppose there will be no objection to its being ordered to be printed, and to be printed with the majority report. I will be governed entirely by the wish of the House whether to have a particular time fixed for the bill to come up for discussion, or whether discussion shall go on now, on the motion to recommit.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the discussion will go on now, and let us pass the bill.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I propose to make a minority report. I have one in preparation, but it is not yet completed. It will be completed in a very short time, and I would prefer not to enter on the discussion till then.

Mr. GROW. The motion to recommit will bring up this subject on Tuesday. By that time all the papers, including the minority report, will be printed, and the bill will come up for its first business in order when the committees are called on Tuesday. If that course will meet the views of the House, I will now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I can have the minority report ready by Tuesday. That will be time enough for me.

Mr. GROW. Then I desire to give notice to the House that I shall ask for a vote upon the bill at as early a day as possible.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say that this bill will be one of the test questions in this House, and really I see no necessity for any very lengthy discussion upon it. I suppose that every member here has made up his mind whether he will vote for or against the admission of Kansas under this bill. I desire, therefore, so far as I am concerned, to allow gentlemen upon the Opposition side of the House an opportunity of recording their votes for the admission of Kansas, and to allow those of us on this side, who would vote that way, an opportunity of recording our votes against it. This is a question that all will probably want to dispose of during the present session of Congress. I desire to make no motion which will not give an opportunity for a legitimate expression of opinion by every member upon the other side of the House, as well as upon this side. But with a view of getting at the sense of the House, and the sense of the Republican party and of the Democratic party—if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no objection to it, I will move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. GROW. Let me understand first if I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I recognize the gentleman's right to the floor, and I hold it at his pleasure. I desire to say that, as the gentleman from Missouri is a member of the Territorial Committee, and has got his report nearly ready to be submitted to the House, and desires to have it printed, I will not make any motion which will be disagreeable to him, feeling that he has a right, upon this side of the House, to direct and control the discussion.

Mr. GROW. That is the very reason why I did not act action on the bill to-day, in order that the minority might have an opportunity to have their report made and printed. And now, if it is satisfactory to the House, I will give this notice: that on Tuesday, when the bill comes up, I shall ask a vote upon it, consulting the pleasure of the House as to the time when it shall be taken. I do not know of any reason why we should have a long discussion upon this question. It is one that is familiar to the House, and that we all understand. I think two or three hours will be a sufficient time to discuss it, and then we can have a vote upon it.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania this, as a better course: to let the matter be postponed to some day, or some other day, and to let the reports of the majority and of the minority be printed; so that the House may understand the grounds upon which those who oppose the admission base that opposition, and the grounds upon which the majority of the House base their advocacy of it. I have my report prepared, but it needs some revision. Two or three hours will be as long as I want to prepare it for the press. If it is understood that the majority report is now made, with leave to the minority to submit their report, and have it printed, I do not care what day it is postponed to, so that we can be heard upon it. But I want to have the reports printed before any vote is taken on a motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would ask the gentleman when his report can be submitted and printed?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. By Tuesday.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that Tuesday will be too early a day to consider the bill, if the gentleman's report cannot be brought in until Wednesday.

Mr. GROW. I do not think that we should postpone this matter for any longer time than may be sufficient for the minority of the committee to make their report. The report of the committee was agreed upon the 1st of February, and the bill has been ready to be reported from that time to this; but we have had no opportunity of presenting it.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. JAMES BUCHANAN, his Secretary, informing the House that he had this day approved and signed a bill making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponca Indians, and certain bands of Indians in the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, for the year ending June 30, 1860. Also, communicating the House of Representatives a message in writing.

ADMISSION OF KANSAS—AGAIN.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Territories not to press this matter; for, as he is aware, the minority report has been got up under some embarrassments, and needs revision. I supposed that I was ready to have offered it this morning; but I find that it needs some revision in regard to the dates of certain events in Kansas. I hope, therefore, that he will not press this matter before the close of next week. By Monday evening or Tuesday I can have my report ready, but not before that.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I am indifferent as to the disposition which shall now be made of this bill, provided the question is not so decided. A motion to recommit is pending.

Mr. GROW. Allow me to move that the majority and minority reports be printed.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. Well, the motion to print is debatable, and I desire to debate it for ten minutes. I have a thorough contempt for that equivocal position which sometimes adds so much factitious importance to a member of this House, because of any uncertainty which may exist as to the action he shall take upon important measures; and to relieve myself from any such doubt, I desire to say one word upon this subject now.

A candidate in 1858, before the people who have honored me with a seat here, I said that whenever Kansas should present a republican form of constitution, framed by a convention assembled and acting under any law of the territorial Legislature, and submitted to and approved by a fair and honest vote of her people, she should have my support for immediate admission, whether she had just ninety-three thousand inhabitants or not. And at the last session, when a bill for the admission of Oregon was pending, I said that whenever Kansas should come as Oregon had come, peaceably, orderly, and with a constitution expressing the will of a majority of her inhabitants, legally and honestly ascertained, I would vote for her admission. These pledges, sir, I propose now to make good. Kansas here, having complied, in my judgment, substantially with these several conditions; and upon all motions made in good faith, whether direct or incidental, I shall so vote as to secure her early admission into the Union of these States. As a gentleman, as a man of honor, independent of every other consideration, I am bound so to vote.

Having said thus much, and leaving her here to the motherly nurture and solicitude of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Gaow.] skilled as he is, too, in civil obstacles, I now bid farewell—

"A word that hath been and must be A sound that makes us finger, yet farewell!"

forever to "bleeding Kansas." [A laugh.]

Mr. GROW. I have been appealed to by the gentleman on the other side of the House to fix a certain time, before which the floor for that time, up for consideration. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make this proposition, and ask the unanimous consent of the House for its adoption: that the majority and minority reports may be printed, and the bill be postponed until Wednesday next, with the understanding that it shall be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal, and that after a reasonable time for debate, it shall be voted on directly, without any unnecessary delay.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, that that day shall be fixed for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GARNETT. I wish to say simply, in reply to my honorable friend from Ohio, who has just addressed the House, [Mr. VALLANDIGHAM.]

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supports the gentleman from Pennsylvania who yielded the floor.

Mr. GROW. Not at all. I am entitled to the floor for one hour upon this bill, having reported it, and having, therefore, the right to open the debate; and I propose to occupy the floor for that time, unless the House comes to some agreement upon the question of postponement.

Mr. GARNETT, and Mr. DAVIS of Indiana, address Mr. Gaow, requesting him to yield the floor.

Mr. GROW. Gentlemen appeal to me to yield the floor. I will yield first to the gentleman from Virginia for a minute, and then to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GARNETT. I have no objection to this bill being made the order for any day which the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires. But I wish to say this—for I shall not address the House upon this bill: that the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. VALLANDIGHAM,] I believe, was not a member of this House when what is called the "English bill" passed this House; and therefore he is not bound by any pledge to vote against the admission of Kansas in violation of that act. Now, sir, it is perfectly well known that the votes of members from the section of the Union from which I come were given for that bill only in consideration that, if Kansas did not come into the Union under that constitution, she was not to count. It has been ascertained that she contained a population of ninety-three thousand inhabitants. Now, sir, I have always held that legislative compromises are binding upon nobody except those who voted for them; but having voted for that bill, I hold myself—so use the language of the gentleman from Ohio—as a gentleman and as a man of honor, bound to vote against any bill which violates the provisions of the "English" bill.

Mr. GROW. I hope gentlemen will not, upon this question of postponement, undertake to enter into any arguments upon the merits of the bill. I now yield the floor, for a few minutes, to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I will not occupy one minute. I shall vote for the admission of Kansas into the Union on the first favorable opportunity, and that vote will be perfectly consistent with my whole political life; but I will suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it will not be better for all parties that this bill should be postponed until two weeks from today.

Mr. GROW. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this bill is the regular order of business; and I proposed, after a day or two for discussion, to have called the previous question upon it; but the gentleman from Missouri, who represents the majority of the Committee on Territories, asks for a little more time to prepare his minority report.

Mr. WINSLOW. Has the morning hour expired?

Mr. GROW. I will first make this proposition: that I then I will relieve the House from further colloquy upon the subject: I move that the bill be postponed until Tuesday next, and that the majority and minority reports be printed.

Mr. WINSLOW. I ask whether the morning has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has. Is there any objection to the proposition that the bill be postponed until Tuesday next, and with the majority and minority reports, be printed?

Mr. HINDMAN, Mr. DAVIDSON, Mr. MARYLAND, and others, object.

Mr. GROW. I then give notice that this bill will come up on Tuesday next as the regular order of business.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the discussion will go on now, and the bill be disposed of.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HINDMAN. I am willing to withdraw my objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know how the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gaow] was deprived of the floor?

Mr. FLORENCE. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask for a decision upon my point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was upon the floor, and it is not competent for any gentleman to take the floor from him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor, and if he does not yield, it is not competent for any gentleman to take the floor from him.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order. It is this: During the morning hour reports from committees are received under the rule and acted upon. At the expiration of the morning hour, no matter who is upon the floor in the transaction of the morning business, any gentleman may interrupt him and move to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so decides. Mr. HOUSTON. I move now to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BURNETT. Like the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. CRAWFORD,] I am ready to meet this question; and I do not want any postponement. I want the matter settled. I am ready, so far as I am concerned, to vote upon it now. I have as few of taking the responsibility for the vote I shall give in reference to Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have a little fear of voting upon the question as the gentleman from Kentucky whenever it comes up in order; but the morning hour has expired, the motion I have made is in order, and I will support it.

Mr. HINDMAN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will waive his motion, and let this Kansas question be disposed of in some way. I do not want to shelter any presidential aspirant behind this motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am as far from wanting to shelter any presidential candidate as the gentleman.

Mr. HINDMAN. I know of no aspirant that it would shelter, except Judge Douglas; and he is the last man I should want to shelter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PROTEST OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BOCOCK. I ask that, by the consent of the House, the message from the President, which was received this morning, and which now lies upon the Speaker's table, be taken up and considered.

Mr. GROW. Is there a motion pending to go to the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. GROW. I want to be satisfied of that fact; for if there is such a motion pending, I am not entitled to the floor; otherwise I am.

Mr. BOCOCK. I move that we take up the message of the President of the United States, which came to us this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Severely and earnestly none.

The SPEAKER. The message will be taken up and read.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I object. [Cries of "It is too late!" from the Democratic benches.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the objection comes too late.

The Clerk then read the message, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

After a delay which has afforded me ample time for reflection, and after much and careful deliberation, I find myself constrained by an imperious sense of duty, as a coordinate branch of the Federal Government, to protest against the first ten clauses of the first resolution adopted by the House of Representatives, on the 5th instant, and published in the Congressional Globe on the succeeding day. These clauses arc in the following words:

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker, for the purpose [first] of investigating whether the President of the United States, or any other officer of the Government, has, by money, patronage, or other influence, procured, or attempted to procure, or to induce any member of Congress, or any committee thereof, for or against the passage of any law appertaining to the rights of any State or Territory, or second, also to induce any member and to induce any other officer or officers of the Government have, by combination or otherwise, prevented or delayed, or attempted to prevent or delay, the execution of any law or laws now upon the statute-book, and whether the President has failed or refused to compel the execution of any law then in force.

I confine myself exclusively to these two branches of the resolution; because the portions of it which follow relate to alleged abuses in post offices, navy-yards, public buildings, and other public works of the United States. In such cases inquiries are highly proper in themselves, and belong equally to the Senate and the House, as incident to their legislative duties, and being necessary to enable them to discover and to provide the appropriate legislative remedies for any abuses which may be ascertained. Although the terms of the latter portion of the resolution are extremely vague and general, yet my sole purpose in adverting to them at present is to mark the broad line of distinction between the accusatory and remedial clauses of this resolution. The House of Representatives possesses no power under the Constitution over the first or accusatory portion of the resolution, except as an impeaching body; whilst over the last, in common with the Senate, their authority as a legislative body is fully and cheerfully admitted.

It is solely in reference to the first or impeach-ing power that I propose to make a few observations. Except in this single case, the Constitution has invested the House of Representatives with no power, no jurisdiction, no supremacy whatever over the President. In all other respects he is quite as independent of them as they are of him. As a coordinate branch of the Government, he is their equal. Indeed, he is the only direct representative of the people, and, inasmuch as each of the sovereign States. To them, and to them alone, is he responsible whilst acting within the sphere of his constitutional duty; and not in any manner to the House of Representatives. The people have thought proper to invest him with the most honorable, responsible, and dignified office in the world; and the individual, however unworthy, now holding this exalted position, will take care, so far as in him lies, that their rights and prerogatives shall never be violated in his person; but shall pass to his successors unimpaired by the adoption of a dangerous precedent. He will defend them to the last extremity against any unconstitutional attempt, come from what quarter it may, to abridge the constitutional rights of the Executive, and render him subservient to any human will, or to the passions of a majority of two thirds of both Houses.

The people have not confined the President to the exercise of executive duties. They have also conferred upon him a large measure of legislative discretion. No bill can become a law without his approval as representing the people of the United States, under whose authority he acts, by a majority of two thirds of both Houses. In his legislative capacity, he might, in common with the Senate and the House, institute an inquiry to ascertain any facts which ought to influence his judgment in approving or vetoing any bill.

This participation in the performance of legislative duties between the coordinate branches of the Government ought to inspire the conduct of all of them, in their relations towards each other, with mutual forbearance and respect. At least, each has a right to demand justice from the other. The cause of complaint is, that the constitutional rights and immunities of the Executive have been violated in the person of the President.

The trial of an impeachment of the President before the House of Representatives, preferred and conducted against him by the House of Representatives, would be an imposing spectacle for the world. In the result not only his removal from the presidential office would be involved, but what is of infinitely greater importance to himself, his family, both in the eyes of the present and of future generations, might possibly be tarnished. The disgrace cast upon him would in some degree be reflected upon the character of the American people who elected him. Hence the precautions adopted by the Constitution to secure a fair trial. On such a trial it declares that "the chief justice shall preside." This was doubtless because the framers of the Constitution believed it to be possible that the Vice President might be biased by the fact that, "in case of the removal of the President from office, "the same shall devolve on the Vice President."

The preliminary proceedings in the House in the case of charges which may involve impeachment have been well and wisely settled by long practice upon principles of equal justice, both to the accused and to the people. The precedent established in the case of Judge Peck, of Missouri, in 1831, after a careful review of all former precedents, will, I venture to predict, stand the test of time. In that case, Luke Edward Lawrence, the accuser, presented a petition to the House, in which, both in the eyes of the present and of future generations, might possibly be tarnished. The disgrace cast upon him would in some degree be reflected upon the character of the American people who elected him. Hence the precautions adopted by the Constitution to secure a fair trial. On such a trial it declares that "the chief justice shall preside." This was doubtless because the framers of the Constitution believed it to be possible that the Vice President might be biased by the fact that, "in case of the removal of the President from office, "the same shall devolve on the Vice President."

in the nature of things, be more impartial. In the case of Judge Peck, the witnesses were selected by the committee itself, with a view to ascertain the truth of the charge. They were cross-examined by him, and everything was conducted in such a manner as to afford him no reasonable cause of complaint.

In view of this precedent, and, what is of far greater importance, in view of the Constitution and the principle of eternal justice, in what manner has the President of the United States been treated by the House of Representatives? Mr. JOHN COVODE, a Representative from Pennsylvania, is the accuser of the President. Instead of the usual mode of proceedings of former times, and especially that in the case of Judge Peck, and referring the accusation to the Committee on the Judiciary, the House have made my accuser one of my judges. To make the accuser the judge is a violation of the principles of universal justice, and is condemned by the practice of all civilized nations. Every freeman must revolt at such a spectacle. I am to appear before Mr. COVODE, either personally or by a substitute, to cross-examine the witnesses which he may produce before him. I have no precedents of former times, and perhaps even this poor boon may be denied to the President.

And what is the nature of the investigation which his resolution proposes to institute? It is as vague and general as the English language affords, in which to make it. The committee is to inquire, not into any specific charge or charges, but whether the President has, by "money, patronage, or other improper means, sought to influence," not the action of any individual member or members of Congress, but "the action" of the entire body "of Congress" itself, "or any committee thereof." The President might have had some glimmering of the nature of the offense to be investigated, had his accuser pointed to the act or acts of Congress which he sought to influence, or to defile by his employment of "money, patronage, or other improper means." But the accusation is bounded by no such limits. It extends to the whole circle of legislation; to interference "for or against the passage of any law appertaining to the rights of any State or Territory, or for or against the employment of any right of some State or Territory." And what law or laws has the President failed to execute? These might easily have been pointed out had any such existed.

Had Mr. LAWSON asked an inquiry to be made by the House whether Judge Peck, in general terms, had not violated his judicial duties, without the specification of any particular act, I do not believe there would have been a single vote in that body in favor of the inquiry.

Since the time of the Star Chamber and of general warrants, there has been no such proceeding in England.

The House of Representatives, the high impeaching power of the country, without consenting to hear a word of explanation, have indorsed the accusation against the President, and committed it to their own act. They even refused to permit a member to inquire of the President's accuser what were the specific charges against him. Thus in this preliminary accusation of "high crimes and misdemeanors" against a coordinate branch of the Government, under the impeaching power, the House refused to hear a single suggestion even in regard to the correct mode of proceeding; but, without a moment's delay, passed the accusatory resolutions under the pressure of the previous question.

The institution of a prosecution for any offense against the most humble citizen—and I claim for myself no greater rights than he enjoys—the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States require that he shall be informed, in the very beginning, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, in order to enable him to prepare for his defense. There are other principles which I might enumerate, not less sacred, presenting an impenetrable shield to protect every citizen falsely charged with a criminal offense. The Constitution has violated in the prosecution instituted by the House of Representatives against the executive branch of the Government. Shall the President alone be deprived of the protection of these great principles which prevail in every land where a ray of liberty penetrates the gloom of despotism? Shall the Executive alone be deprived of rights which all his fellow-citizens enjoy? The whole proceeding against him justifies the fears of those wise and great men who, before the Constitution was adopted by the States, apprehended that the tendency of the Government was to the aggrandizement of the legislative at the expense of the executive and judicial departments. Again does the House of Representatives protest for no reason personal to myself; and I do it with perfect respect for the House of Representatives, in which I had the honor of serving as a member for five successive terms. I have lived long in this goodly land, and have enjoyed all the offices of honor which in the most remote bestow. Amid all the political storms through which I have passed, the present is the first attempt which has ever been made, to my knowledge, to assail my personal or official integrity; and this as the time is approaching when I shall voluntarily retire from the service of my country. I feel proudly conscious that there is no public act of my life which will not bear the strictest scrutiny. I defy all investigation. Nothing but the basest perjury can sully my good name. I do not fear even the most searching investigation, with confidence that the gracious Being who hitherto defended and protected me against the shafts of falsehood and malice, will not desert me now, when I have become "old and gray-headed." I can declare before God and my country, that no sum of money, or honor, or power, or position, or notice) has at any period of my life, dared to approach me with corrupt or dishonorable proposition; and, until recent developments, it had never entered into my imagination that any person, even in the storm of exasperated political excitement, would charge me with the most remote degree, with having made such a proposition to any human being. I may now, however, exclaim, in the language of complaint employed by my first and greatest predecessor, that I have been abused "in such exasperated and indecent terms as could scarcely be applied to a Venetian, a notorious defaulter, or even to a common pickpocket."

I do, therefore, for the reasons stated, and in the name of the people of the several States, solemnly protest against these proceedings of the House of Representatives. I declare that they are a violation of the rights of the coordinate executive branch of the Government, and subversive of its constitutional independence; because they are calculated to foster a band of interested parasites and informers, ever ready, for their own advantage, to swear before a mere committee to perjury, to pry into private conversations between the President and themselves, incapable, from their nature, of being disproved; thus furnishing material for harassing him, degrading him in the eyes of the country, and eventually, should he be a weak or a timid man, rendering him subservient to improper influences, in order to avoid such persecutions and annoyances; because they tend to destroy that harmonious action for the common good, which ought to be maintained, and which I sincerely desire to cherish between the coordinate branches of the Government; and finally, because, if unaided, they would establish a precedent dangerous and embarrassing to all my successors, to whatever political party they might be attached.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

WASHINGTON, March 28, 1860.

Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has made, for the first time, a protest against the exercise by the House of Representatives of the power of impeachment, a constitutional power. I am willing to give to his communication all the consideration which its gravity demands. I am willing that this House may now consider whether or not it has the power to investigate anything, and everything which may be wrongly done by the officers of the executive branch of the Government; because, if the privilege of exemption which the President now sets up for himself belongs to him, then it extends to and attaches to every subordinate under him.

The Constitution of the United States declares that the President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors. It further declares, in another clause, that this House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment. Under these clauses this House, sir, has the right to examine into anything which may affect the conduct of any public officer under this Government, from the Chief Executive down to the little page who runs your errands upon this floor. Every one of the officers of this Government is subjected to the power of this House. But the President says that we cannot make our inquiries but in one way, and that is by preferring articles of impeachment. How will you find an impeachment? How will you prepare articles of impeachment? How will you take preliminary proof necessary to ascertain whether an officer of this Government has violated his duty? Only one way, preliminary examination. There is no other way. It is only by taking testimony you can ascertain whether or not there is good ground to charge that an officer of the Government has violated his public duty. How else can we do it?

What does the President of the United States gravely ask us to do in the message which has just been read? That this high judicial body shall find an impeachment upon mere rumor. Shall we, upon the mere rumors which are circulating in the newspapers and upon the streets find an impeachment? The very necessity of the case implies that we have a right to investigate all charges made in the public prints and elsewhere. If it is alleged that the President has been seriously and improperly connected with certain transactions, we have a right to this House to inquire into the probable truth of these things. If we find that they are probably true, then it is our duty to prefer articles of impeachment against the President at the bar of the Senate.

Why, sir, we have examined into the conduct of our own members into the conduct of a Senator; we have the right to inquire into the conduct of any of the officers of this Government; and shall the President escape? At the last session of Congress, indeed at almost every session of Congress, the conduct of some executive officer has been investigated. Not a provision of the Constitution exempts the President from this inquiry? What distinction is there between him and the members of this House? Do not I stand upon the same constitutional right, as the Representative of one hundred and thirty people, as the President of the United States does as the representative of millions? I have the same constitutional right, and am subject to the same mode of trial for malfeasance or nonfeasance—no more, no less. So with every officer of this Government. There is no exception made in favor of the President.

Mr. Speaker, the doctrine set up by the President of the United States in this message is the same under which Europe was governed for a thousand years; that the King can do no wrong. That is the doctrine—that the King could not be tried and executed, because the King could do no wrong. Charles I. went to the block, because the people of England believed that the King was not above and beyond their power. So it was with Louis XVI. and it is the same doctrine set up by the President of the United States is, in my judgment, the very worst that has been enunciated since the foundation of this Republic. His conduct not to be inquired into!

Mr. CRAIGIE, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would prefer to go on without interruption.

Mr. CRAIGIE, of North Carolina. It strikes me that the gentleman is making a most extraordinary argument. The President does not deny the power of this House to inquire into his conduct, and therefore the gentleman's argument upon that point falls to the ground. The President only refers to the mode of investigation. He admits that the House has the right to impeach him, as the gentleman alleges. He only denies that his accusations are without charges, should also be the judges to inquire into and decide upon them. He insists that they are not the proper persons to inaugurate the necessary proceedings in order to put him upon his trial before the Senate. These are the arguments of the President and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] on the point to which the gentleman is now speaking—none, except in the gentleman's imagination. I have felt, as there are no charges made against the President, that I could not remain silent and allow to pass uncontradicted from this side the allegations which have recently been made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must have misunderstood the tenor of the President's communication, if he does not deny the power of this House to appoint a committee of investigation like that which was raised the other day upon motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CRAIGIE].

Mr. CRAIGIE, of North Carolina. That is true, sir; but he does not deny the right of the House to impeach. He does not deny that, but he says that the Committee on the Judiciary is the proper tribunal, and not Mr. COVENS's committee, with a view to an impeachment. He asks only that we shall treat him as we would treat any other citizen of this country, even the humblest in the land. Let me ask you, sir; let me ask the gentleman from Ohio; let me ask every fair and impartial man in this House, whether, in any State in this Union, or in any other civilized country, a criminal prosecution can be instituted against any man without the sworn declaration of somebody that there is reason to believe that he has been guilty? I ask if upon vague rumor you would allow a sweeping and general inquiry to be made against him? Would you prefer a general inquiry to a view to find an indictment against a man, to call up a witness and inquire: "Do you know whether this man has at any time been guilty of anything which may be set down in the catalogue of criminal acts against the Government? Do you know in Ohio? Do you do it in Pennsylvania? I ask gentlemen who have been engaged in prosecutions, whether even grand juries are allowed to pround to witnesses interrogatories as to whether they know anything wrong in the conduct or character of a man? Would you prefer to treat him as the humblest citizen in the community? I say no. In the name of law, in the name of justice, and in the name of common sense, I assert that you do not do so. What, then, do you do? You require specific allegations to be made. You require it to be asked whether the accused did it at certain time, or within certain times, do a certain specific thing which is criminal, or omit to do what is legally required of him?

Now, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COVENS] has any ground for that occasion, he should say that he had good reason to believe that the President of the United States had undertaken, by corrupt means, to secure the passage of a particular bill through the Congress of the United States, I should have been the last man on this floor to have stood against such investigation. This inquiry, on the contrary, was based on no sworn statement; and was vague and indefinite in its purpose, and sweeping in its range.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to refer the gentleman to a case in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, where this House expelled two of its members on charges very vague, and without being specified. Mr. BOCKOC. The charges there were specific. Mr. SHERMAN. Not when the original resolution of inquiry was adopted. I will send for the Journal, and examine the matter.

Mr. BOCKOC. According to my recollection, the accusations were specific and expressed. At all events, they were reduced to that form before the persons charged were required to answer them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to interrupt him, that I may propound a question in regard to the Pennsylvania case?

Mr. BOCKOC. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As the gentleman has referred to the practice of grand juries in Pennsylvania, I desire to say that they are sworn on oath to try the matters given them in charge on specific bills of indictment. They have an unlimited power to make presentations to the court in regard to such matters and things as may come within their knowledge. They have a right to do that without any specific charge having been sent before them.

Mr. BOCKOC. I thought the gentleman from Pennsylvania wanted the floor to propound a question; is that a question to which he wants an answer?

When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COVENS] submitted the resolution to the House which has given rise to this communication from the Executive, I found myself placed in a very awkward and embarrassing position. It is always difficult to make a case against a man, because the country desires purity, and does not always appreciate the apparently technical, or really constitutional, difficulties that stand in the way of such inquiries as this. I wished to sus-tain all proper investigation; but I was unwilling to countenance an inquiry like this of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. As the previous question was moved, which cut off debate, I stated at the time that I would vote against the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and would give my reasons at another time. I voted against that resolution, sir, for reasons which have been shadowed forth in the message of the President of the United States.

In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has entirely mistaken the ground upon which the President bases his protest against the action of the House. He does not object to our instituting inquiries against him, with a view to an impeachment. He asks only that we shall treat him as we would treat any other citizen of this country, even the humblest in the land. Let me ask you, sir; let me ask the gentleman from Ohio; let me ask every fair and impartial man in this House, whether, in any State in this Union, or in any other civilized country, a criminal prosecution can be instituted against any man without the sworn declaration of somebody that there is reason to believe that he has been guilty? I ask if upon vague rumor you would allow a sweeping and general inquiry to be made against him? Would you prefer a general inquiry to a view to find an indictment against a man, to call up a witness and inquire: "Do you know whether this man has at any time been guilty of anything which may be set down in the catalogue of criminal acts against the Government? Do you know in Ohio? Do you do it in Pennsylvania? I ask gentlemen who have been engaged in prosecutions, whether even grand juries are allowed to pround to witnesses interrogatories as to whether they know anything wrong in the conduct or character of a man? Would you prefer to treat him as the humblest citizen in the community? I say no. In the name of law, in the name of justice, and in the name of common sense, I assert that you do not do so. What, then, do you do? You require specific allegations to be made. You require it to be asked whether the accused did it at certain time, or within certain times, do a certain specific thing which is criminal, or omit to do what is legally required of him?

Now, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COVENS] has any ground for that occasion, he should say that he had good reason to believe that the President of the United States had undertaken, by corrupt means, to secure the passage of a particular bill through the Congress of the United States, I should have been the last man on this floor to have stood against such investigation. This inquiry, on the contrary, was based on no sworn statement; and was vague and indefinite in its purpose, and sweeping in its range.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to refer the gentleman to a case in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, where this House expelled two of its members on charges very vague, and without being specified. Mr. BOCKOC. The charges there were specific. Mr. SHERMAN. Not when the original resolution of inquiry was adopted. I will send for the Journal, and examine the matter.

Mr. BOCKOC. According to my recollection, the accusations were specific and expressed. At all events, they were reduced to that form before the persons charged were required to answer them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to interrupt him, that I may propound a question in regard to the Pennsylvania case?

Mr. BOCKOC. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As the gentleman has referred to the practice of grand juries in Pennsylvania, I desire to say that they are sworn on oath to try the matters given them in charge on specific bills of indictment. They have an unlimited power to make presentations to the court in regard to such matters and things as may come within their knowledge. They have a right to do that without any specific charge having been sent before them.

Mr. BOCKOC. I thought the gentleman from Pennsylvania wanted the floor to propound a question; is that a question to which he wants an answer?

Mr. COVODE. Well, without saying that we have it in evidence.

Mr. BRANCH. I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that the chairman of the select committee has not a right to divulge upon this floor any ex parte statement of the testimony that has been taken before the committee.

Mr. COVODE. I am glad to hear that. I will say, inasmuch as a specific charge is asked for, that I have the best reason in the world to believe that the President himself was consulted with regard to the use of money in Pennsylvania; and that, after consultation with him that very evening, one of his friends went forth to Pennsylvania, and took money with him to use against us in the election.

Mr. BRANCH. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know if the gentleman from Pennsylvania is stating now testimony that has been taken before the committee? If he is, I object to it.

Mr. COVODE. Well, then, if the gentleman objects to my stating anything that I know, postpone this matter until we can have an opportunity of reporting the testimony. The President will have an opportunity of reading it, and of producing rebutting testimony.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman allow me to say that I think he mistakes the character of the message of the President entirely? The President makes no objection to the later branch of the inquiry at all. He objects to the first branch of the first resolution, in which the gentleman did not bring against him any distinct or specific charge whatever; but constituting a committee to go abroad in the country, and inquire of anybody whether he knows anything against the conduct of the President in any respect whatever. To the latter clause of the resolution, in reference to which the gentleman is speaking, the President makes no objection whatever.

Mr. BOOCK. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will now go and finish his explanation, without further interruption.

Mr. COVODE. I will state that two members of this House were expelled in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, upon charges more vague and indefinite than any of the charges in this resolution. Here is the preamble and resolution to which I refer:

"Whereas certain statements have been published, charging that members of this House have entered into corrupt combinations, for the purpose of securing the passage of certain measures now pending before Congress; Therefore,

"Resolved, That a committee, consisting of five members, be appointed by the Speaker, with power to send for persons and papers, to investigate said charges; and that said committee report the evidence taken, and their judgment, in necessary on the part of the House, without any unnecessary delay."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have felt an interest, as well as the President, in investigating this matter, in respect to the use of money in carrying the Pennsylvania elections. I feel that Pennsylvania is the battle-ground, and that the morals of our people are being corrupted by the use that is and has been made of money in carrying our elections. I want to see an end put to it. I want to ferret out the guilty parties. If it fell upon my party, let it fall upon them. The President, in his charge, of course intended to intimate that it was the Republican party who were guilty. If so, let it be known. If, in the investigation of this matter, the President can make it appear that he is clear, then he will stand better before the country than he does now, and he will be indebted to me for placing him in a position where he could rest himself right.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to allow me to say one word. I wish merely to present my protest against this document of the President of the United States. I contend that it is not a communication which is contemplated by the Constitution of the United States, which authorizes the President to give information of the state of the Union," and should not have been received. If I had been present when it was received, and had known its character, I should have respectfully declined its reception. Is it a communication in regard to "the state of the Union"? If it be, it is competent for the President of the United States to appear in this Hall and make known his views. Such, we know, is his privilege; but if it be, as it seems to be, an argument against a matter pending in this House, it is an interference in the duties of the legislative branch of the Government of the United States; an interference in the prerogatives of this House of Representatives; and I enter my protest against any such exercise of executive influence in this branch of the Federal Congress. If he can speak in writing, he can orally; and upon this hypothesis he could come in and debate every question that we would care to discuss.

Mr. LAMAR. I call the gentleman from Iowa to order.

Mr. CURTIS. I say it is without precedent, without constitutional authority, and a violation of the constitutional rights and prerogatives of the President of the United States to attempt to interfere with the legislative powers of this independent branch of the Government.

Mr. LAMAR. I insist upon my point of order, and call the gentleman from Iowa to order.

Mr. BOOCK. I think the gentleman from Iowa has rather abused the courtesy I extended to him, in making a speech within mine.

Mr. CURTIS. If I have abused the gentleman's courtesy, I am sorry. It was not my intention to intrude further than it seemed necessary for me to do so, in order to maintain the whole subject, that the reason why I did not put the motion to the House was, that the gentleman had not the floor to make the motion. The gentleman from Virginia was entitled to the floor, and the gentleman could not, therefore, move to postpone this body for the moment without his consent. The Chair thinks it is but respectful to the gentleman from Tennessee to make this explanation.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRANCH] who, at this point, is desiring to move to postpone the subject, that the reason why I did not put the motion to the House was, that the gentleman had not the floor to make the motion. The gentleman from Virginia was entitled to the floor, and the gentleman could not, therefore, move to postpone this body for the moment without his consent. The Chair thinks it is but respectful to the gentleman from Tennessee to make this explanation.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Virginia proposes to move to lay this message on the table before he takes his seat, I ask of him to allow me three or four minutes.

Mr. BOOCK. I will try; but I am afraid I shall not have time to answer the gentleman who have already interrupted me.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I only want three or four minutes for the purpose of defending me from interruption. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I hope this matter will not be postponed. I think we are as well prepared now to go on with the discussion as we shall be at any future time.

Mr. CURTIS, of Maryland. I rise to a question of order. I object to the gentleman from Virginia coming up to the floor. I ask that he shall go on and make his speech, and then yield the floor.

Mr. BOOCK. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Maryland for assisting me in the enforcement of my rights. I have been desirous of extending all possible courtesy to gentlemen on all sides; but I hope I shall now be permitted to go on and finish what I have to say, without further interruption.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a few remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, who, a few minutes ago, addressed the House upon this subject, [I mean Mr. CURTIS.] I have to say that he is mistaken in supposing that this message of the President is without effect.

If I remember correctly, President Jackson, the hero of the Hermitage, once sent a message to the Senate protesting against the action of that body in relation to himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish simply to say—

Mr. BOOCK. Gentlemen object to my yielding the floor. I must decline. Why, sir, the gentleman from Iowa himself enters the protest here against the President's protest; and I will leave it with his constituents to decide whether he has violated his constitutional duty. "Protest is protest" is the issue made for their decision.

The gentleman from Iowa has just said [Mr. COVODE] who was last up, I do not see that he has, in the least degree, improved his position by his explanation. The President objects that the gentleman's resolution proposes vague and indefinite inquiries. Has the gentleman shown that this resolution is not vague and indefinite? Has he shown that the resolution does make specific charges, which will direct the committee in their inquiries, or enable the President to defend himself?

Mr. COVODE. I can make the charges definite.

Mr. BOOCK. The gentleman can make the charges definite. We have nothing to do with what the gentleman can do. The President is not protesting against what the gentleman can do. The President of the United States is protesting against what the gentleman has done; and I am now speaking about what the gentleman has done. I am speaking of the money which was offered by the gentleman and passed by this House.

The gentleman says, by way of apology, that the President has complained that moneys had been used to carry the elections in Pennsylvania; and that he had only made the charge or complaint of the President the basis of the resolution which he has instituted. Why, sir, does the gentleman undertake to say that his resolution was in response simply to the statement of the President of the United States? If I remember rightly, the President speaks of the use of money in the Pennsylvania elections. This resolution talks about corrupt means being used to influence committees, and procure the passage of laws through Congress; it talks about malfeasance in the Chicago post office, in regard to the public buildings; in the Post office, in regard to the yard; about failure to execute laws. Does the gentleman undertake to say that all this is in response to the statement of the President that money was used to carry the Pennsylvania elections? I do not see that the gentleman has mended his case at all by this explanation. He takes upon the ground upon which he has chosen to place himself for his justification—that money has been used to control the elections in Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I should be the last man to justify the use of money corruptly to carry or control any election; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just said that he has used in reporting what has come to his ears, has not even indicated that the President of the United States ever advised or aided in the corrupt use of money. He merely says that the President was privy to and proposed to aid in the use of money. Well, then, the gentleman mean to say that all use of money in elections is prima facie a corrupt use of it? If he does, then he stands before this House as his own accuser, and the accuser of his party; because, singular as it may appear, and as it is singular since a circular appeared, with the signature of the gentleman amongst others, in behalf of the Republican general committee, inviting Republicans all over the North country to contribute money to aid his party in the next presidential election.

Mr. BOOCK. Money only for the circulation of documents.

Mr. KILGORE. I will send for the circular.

Mr. BOOCK. I have seen such a circular published in the newspapers. I will give way to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COVODE,] or the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. KILGORE,] or any other gentleman upon the other side, who will rise and say that the circular published in the newspapers of the country is a forgery, and that they have not called upon their Republican friends in the country to come forward and contribute money to aid in the next election.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. KILGORE. I have the floor. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that the circular which he refers to is a forgery, and that I petition the Republican party to furnish means for the purpose of aiding in the dissemination of useful information to enlighten the benighted regions of Democracy. [Derisive laughter from the Democratic benches.] That circular proposes the same contribution of money that it proposes for missionaries of societies of Christian churches to send the Bible to the heathen. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOOCK. If the gentleman wishes to send information to his Republican friends, he is doing a good work, for they want it. I object to the Bible being sent to the heathen, to the ignorant people. It is a perverted Bible, a false Bible. It contains false doctrines; the teachings of false prophets is death to the political souls of those whom it reaches.

Mr. KILGORE. That is not the Bible we send our men to the Bible.

Mr. BOOCK. No; you do not send the Bible of the Lord, for that is true. Yours is a Bible made by men. The documents you send among your people are anything else than a political Bible, according to my conception.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the spectacle presented to the American public. The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Covens] asserts it is sufficient ground for sweeping inquiry about mismanagement in relation to navy-yards, public buildings, post offices, the non-execution of laws, and almost everything else, that the President of the United States has been engaged in carrying elections in Pennsylvania. Now it comes out by the confession of the gentlemen themselves, while so indignant in reference to the letter of the President to which they make allusion, that they—the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Covens] the accuser here, and his political friends—have given a general and widespread invitation to the people of their section of the Union, who are connected with them politically, to come forward and pour out their money in order that they may carry the next presidential election.

The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Kilgore], the graceful and courteous gentleman from Indiana, the courtly gentleman from Indiana, comes forward and takes upon himself to defend that investigation. He shoulders the responsibility, and he should shoulder the responsibility, because of the possibility of that movement. The gentleman from Indiana is the man, I understand, who pledged that the candidate for Printer of this House of the Republican party would, if elected, devote one-half of the office of the printer to the purpose of carrying the next presidential election for the Republican party. [Applause and laughter from the Democratic, and cries of "Order!" from the Republican benches.]

Mr. KILGORE. There were no corrupt purposes sought to be accomplished. Mr. BOCKOCK. Oh no! If the President happens to have known of the use of money in elections, then everything is corrupt, and a committee of investigation must, forthwith, be forthwith raised, with power to inquire into everything. Not so with the gentleman of the other side. They may divide the profits of the public printing; they may call upon the people of their party everywhere to come forward and pour out their money to carry the next presidential election, and it is all right.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the circular be read.
Mr. HASKIN. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. BOCKOCK. I cannot, now.
Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I will read an extract from the circular.

Mr. KILGORE. Read it all.
Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I will read the substantial part of it. [Cries from the Republican benches, "Read it all!"] Here it is:

"The number of documents that will be required will call for a large expenditure and justifies the request for assistance, even in the smallest amounts. Our opponents, by forced contributions upon their Federal office holders and public contractors, which they do not hesitate to levy, are able to raise a large fund for their party operations. The Republican party must rely upon the voluntary contributions of its friends, and it is therefore recommended that each club, or person, as far as may be convenient, send contributions in the form of money, or in the form of speeches or pamphlets of eight pages is fifty cents a hundred; of sixteen pages, one dollar a hundred; of twenty-four pages, one dollar and fifty cents a hundred."

Mr. DUNN. What is the price of the eight-page speeches?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Fifty cents a hundred. [Laughter.]

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. Here are the names that are named to it:

"We are very respectfully and truly,
PRESTON KING, JOHN B. ALLEY,
JAMES W. GRIMES, E. B. WASHBURN,
J. F. S. FOSTER, J. L. N. STRATTON,
JOHN COVENS, DAVID KILGORE,
E. G. SCHAUDING, J. L. N. STRATTON."

Mr. FLORENCE. I will read the heading, and the House will then know who are the officers. Here it is:

"PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN OF 1860.
Republican Executive Congressional Committee.
Hon. PRESTON KING, N. Y., Hon. JOHN COVENS, Pa.,
Hon. J. W. GRIMES, Ill., E. B. WASHBURN, N. Y.,
" L. F. S. FOSTER, Conn., " John B. Alley, Mass., (Senate.) " E. G. SCHAUDING, Ill.,
" David Kilgore, Pa.,
" J. L. N. Stratton, N. J.,
(House of Representatives.)
PRESTON KING, Secretary,
GEORGE HASKIN, Secretary,
JOHN COVENS, Treasurer."

Mr. HASKIN. I rise to a point of order. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the manner in which the message of the President has been discussed is unworthy of the dignity of the House of Representatives and the occasion which has called it forth. A discussion has been started, out of order, in my judgment, upon the dirty party politics of the day, when the motion is one of reference to a question of public policy. Shall we, or shall we not, maintain the legislative power and the independence of the House of Representatives, which have been insulted this day by a Napoleonic decree, coming here as a message from the President of the United States? I insist that the debate shall be confined to the question before us, and that it shall not be allowed to wander off from it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the whole question is open to debate on the motion to refer, and therefore overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York.
Mr. BOCKOCK. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York, and very properly. That gentleman, who announced himself, a few days ago, to be an ally of the Republican party, and of this House, comes forward, in his character of ally, and lectures us upon dignity and what is the proper proceeding for us to pursue. I bow in humble acknowledgment of the deep debt of gratitude we owe to the gentleman from New York for his lecture on dignity. I bow, to all others, in the same respect, to deliver such lecture. Verily, it appears no more. I dismiss him summarily.

When I was interrupted, I was showing to the House that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Covens] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Kilgore] had not, in my judgment, particularly aided their cause by the explanations which they have volunteered. The ground upon which they put their defense for appealing for money to the people to use for the purposes of the Republican party in the next presidential campaign, was that the money is to be paid for the circulation of documents. The circular insinuates that small amounts will be thankfully received; but that gentleman from Indiana has made that not a particle of objection will be made. He was willing to do this, and he was willing to let the profits to be derived from the printing for this House should be contributed to the electioneering uses of the Republican party. It is all right and proper that they should have the command of money, and that they should use it in elections, and it is to be assumed by us, by every body, that it is only to be devoted to the publication and dissemination of documents; but, sir, if anybody else employs money for election purposes, it is, upon their course of argument, to be taken instantly for granted that some corrupt use will be made of it. I do not see how, by consistency, this unfairness, this double-dealing, I object to. Now, if they can use money and not be corrupt in it, why cannot other people use money without using it corruptly? Why is it assumed of them necessarily that if money be employed for others, it is corruptly employed? That is the thing I object to.

And now, it may be proper for me to say a word in relation to the position taken by the other gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Gsw.] If I understand him correctly, he claims that the House had the right to make these sweeping inquiries; and on what ground did he put it? As I understand it, he claims that the House of Representatives has jurisdiction of such matters in two capacities. The one is, as the body to frame legislation to be tried by the Senate; the other is, as one of the coordinate branches of the Legislature. I admit that the House occupies that position, and that it has a right to do anything that is necessary and proper to enable it to carry out its jurisdiction in these respects. The House of Representatives has the right to make such inquiries as they may think will conduce to wholesome legislation. It has also the right to institute specific charges, with a view to put official persons on their trial before the Senate. But if, under cover and pretense of intending to legislate, or if, under pretense of intending to institute impeachment, the House of Representatives institutes these vague and sweeping inquiries against high official personages, which these official personages have no means of understanding, and no power to defend themselves against, then I say the House perverts a legitimate function into a means of oppression to be avoided. If a House had done it, I do not doubt, what that gentleman from Pennsylvania claims it has a right to do, it would be all right. But if, under the mere pretext of intending some wholesome legislation, or if, under the mere pretext of inquiring whether or not an impeachment ought to be brought, a House has made sweeping and vague inquiries against high official personages, with a view unjustly to injure them, then I say that the House has abused its powers, has invaded the rights of a coordinate branch of the Government, and has justly subjected itself to a protest from the injured.

Says the gentleman from Pennsylvania, "you instituted inquiry in the last House of Representatives, in relation to the conduct of members of a preceding Congress, while you could not act against them, and where no legislation has been introduced, and where no legislation has been introduced, as he states them, what right had the House to institute an inquiry in relation to the action of members of a preceding Congress, for which they could not be tried, and where no legislation in regard to this subject was introduced?" He says that in regard to the charges against the President of the United States, perhaps no punishment is intended. "No punishment intended!" Why, sir, to proclaim to the world, in effect, that there is good reason to believe that the President of the United States has been engaged in corrupt practices, which should be exposed; to open the door for men everywhere to come forward here and swear to private conversations and other mysterious circumstances in connection with the President, even although you do not intend to found any impeachment upon these proofs, and that no punishment? Will you say, after that, that no punishment has been inflicted on that officer? Is it no punishment to a man in high position, who cares for his character and his honor; who values the trust reposed in him by the people, as an evidence of his honor, to have it known that he is guilty of corrupt practices? I need not appeal to any gentleman to answer this question. The House to answer that question. It would be a severe infliction for any of these gentlemen themselves; and they know it.

Now, let not gentlemen undertake to mystify this subject. Let no gentleman of the House, on such a grave occasion, attempt to do injustice to the issue which the President of the United States has made. The President of the United States has not denied the right of this House to institute specific inquiries into his conduct with a view to impeachment. What he has denied is the propriety of the House of Representatives attempting to institute a general and sweeping inquiry against him without letting him know what specific charges he has to meet, and without any allegation being made by any one that there is good reason to believe that a particular wrong has been done—opening the door to witnesses to come from the North, the South, the East, and the West, to swear to vague and indefinite matters of suspicion against the President of the United States. In my opinion it is a great wrong.

gentlemen over the way, and some on this side, have intimated that they are not now precisely prepared to dispose of this matter. It was my purpose, Mr. Speaker, originally, to move that the message be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed. That would not preclude any action that the House might take hereafter with regard to it. It might be debated in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Gentlemen might base resolutions on it. But I feel some reluctance now to move to lay it on the table. I want, however, to have the message printed; and I am willing to move that the House be empowered to enable the House—to postpone it to a day certain, or to do anything else with it, except refer it to the Judiciary Committee. If the House think proper, I will move to postpone it to a day certain, and let the subject come up again.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 91.

in of the question under the new rule; which says that, after the ordering of the main question, any member may ask a division of a question which involves two propositions.

THE SPEAKER. In what way does the gentleman desire to have the question divided?

MR. JOHN COCHRANE. I want a vote upon the reference to the committee, and one on the proposition to allow that committee to report at any time.

MR. SHERMAN. Oh, that is not divisible.
MR. JOHN COCHRANE. There are two separate propositions.

THE SPEAKER. The question will be divided. The Chair will first put the question on the motion to refer and print.

MR. HICKMAN. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. BARNETT,) that, so far as I am individually concerned, I am perfectly willing to accede to the request that he makes, that when the report shall be made from the Committee on the Judiciary, it shall be postponed for two or three days and printed, in order that every gentleman shall have an opportunity to examine it.

MR. BURNETT. Very well, sir; with the understanding that we are to have an opportunity of discussing the matter, I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

MR. JOHN COCHRANE. I insist on my call for a division of the question.

THE SPEAKER. As a division of the question is asked, with the Chair decides to be in order under the amended rules, the first question will be on referring the message to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordering it to be printed.

The question was taken; and that branch of Mr. SHERMAN'S motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the latter branch of the motion, to give the Committee on the Judiciary power to report at any time.

MR. BRANCH. I understood the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to intimate that he would report the message back at an early day, and put it in a position where it can be discussed.

MR. HICKMAN. We shall certainly not be disposed to delay a report. So far as I am concerned, I shall desire to report at as early a day as possible, and to give gentlemen an opportunity to be heard upon the subject.

MR. BRANCH. Then, I will make no point of order on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, in the hope that the Committee on the Judiciary will report the message back at an early day, and that we shall have an opportunity to discuss it.

The question was taken on the latter branch of Mr. SHERMAN'S motion; and it was agreed to.

MR. SHERMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MR. SHERMAN obtained the floor.

PRINTING OF THE KANSAS BILL.

MR. GROW. I beg the gentleman to yield to me for a moment that I may ask for an order of the House in which members on all sides are interested. It is that the bill for the admission of Kansas, with the majority and minority reports, and the Wyandotte constitution, may be printed; so that, when the bill comes up on Tuesday, gentlemen may have the whole matter before them. I will be glad to have the bill printed.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

UNDELIVERED LETTERS.

MR. COLFAX. I desire, with the permission of the House, to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which a bill (S. No. 302) in relation to the return of undelivered letters in the post office was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads yesterday. The committee have considered the bill, and will bring it before the House at an early moment.

The motion to reconsider was entered, and passed over for the present.

PRINTING FOR THE HOUSE.

MR. HINDMAN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the Public Printing be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to this House an estimate of the cost of the printing ordered by the House of Representatives since the commencement of the present session, specifying the amount of each order and including any executive printing that may have been done by the House Printer.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

MR. SHERMAN, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee of Ways and Means the bill of the House making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1861, with the Senate amendments thereto; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments of the Senate, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. HOOPER.

MR. SHERMAN also, by unanimous consent, reported back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) authorizing the refunding of certain moneys expended by William H. Hooper, while Secretary of the Territory of Utah, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

It was so referred.

SELECTION OF OREGON LANDS.

MR. VANDEVER. I rise to a privileged motion. I desire a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House the other day referred to the Committee on Public Lands a bill granting to the Governor of Oregon longer time within which to select certain lands donated to that State by the act by which she was admitted into the Union. I desire to reconsider the vote by which the motion was considered, and then, as it is a matter about which there is no controversy, I hope, after a short explanation by the gentleman from Oregon, the House will allow the bill to be put on its passage.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 177) to extend the time within which the Governor of the State of Oregon shall select lands, as provided in the act for the admission of Oregon.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion to reconsider the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

MR. STOUT. I will state to the House that the object of this bill is merely to extend the time within which the Governor of Oregon may select certain lands, donated for a university and other public purposes, in the act for the admission of the State. That act provided that the lands should be selected within one year; but it did not provide for having the lands surveyed, and they have not been surveyed, nor has any appropriation yet been made for their survey. They cannot, of course, be selected until the Government has had them surveyed. I hope there will be no objection to putting the bill on its passage.

The motion to commit was disagreed to.

The bill was read. It provides that the time fixed by the fourth section of the act entitled "to act for the admission of Oregon into the Union," approved February 14, 1859, for selecting certain lands therein donated, shall be extended to three years from the date of the passage of said act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MR. STOUT moved to reconsider the motion by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE CHINESE COOLIE TRADE.

MR. ELIOT. I ask the consent of the House to report from the Committee on Commerce a bill to prohibit the Chinese coolie trade, by citizens of the United States, in American vessels.
MR. BARKSDALE. I object.

MR. ELIOT. I hope there will be no objection. My object is to ask that the bill be made a special order for this day four weeks.

MR. SHERMAN. I must object to that. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PAY OF PURSERS.

MR. MORSE. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House this morning referred a bill regulating the service pay of pursers in the Navy to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. My object is not to have the motion to reconsider disposed of now, but to have it entered, and after waiting a reasonable time, to enable every member to read the bill and report after they shall have been printed—say a week or ten days—to call up the motion and ask the House to pass the bill. It is a bill which will certainly be no possible objection.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

MR. WASHBURN, of Maine. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Illinois did not have the floor to make the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

THE SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider has been entered, but cannot be acted upon at this time. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to give to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. BARKSDALE. The gentleman from Massachusetts appeals to me to withdraw my objection to the reporting of his bill relative to the Coolie trade. If no one else objects, I will withdraw my objection.

MR. BURNETT. I object. The House has already voted to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and nothing is in order in the House.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. EWEHARD in the chair.)

DEFICIENCY BILL.

MR. SHERMAN. I move that the committee now take up for consideration House bill No. 499, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1860; and that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly taken up, and the first reading dispensed with.

MR. MONTGOMERY obtained the floor, and addressed the committee in reply to the speech made some days since by Mr. CRAW, relative to the doctrine of squatter sovereignty, and the claims of Senator DOLGAS as the candidate of the Democratic party in the ensuing presidential election. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.] Just before the close of Mr. MONTGOMERY'S hour.

MR. HILL said: I desire to make a proposition to extend the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as he has been so much interrupted. The same thing was done in the case of Mr. CRAW, the other day, and I think that it would be but fair.

MR. LOVEJOY. I believe the hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is out, and I claim the floor.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has one minute longer.

MR. HILL. Will not the gentleman from Illinois allow him a short time longer?

MR. MONTGOMERY. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will allow me to go on.

MR. LOVEJOY. If it can be understood that

I shall have the floor when the gentleman from Pennsylvania concludes, without my staying to claim it, the gentleman may go on as long as he pleases, so far as I am concerned. [Cries of "Agreed!" from the Democratic side of the House.]

THE CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania being allowed to proceed beyond his hour?

MR. CONKLING. I object.

THE CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania must go on.

MR. MONTGOMERY continued his remarks for some moments longer, when the hammer fell, his hour having expired.

MR. LOVEJOY obtained the floor.

THE CHAIRMAN. I suspend to the gentleman from Illinois to allow the gentleman from Pennsylvania to proceed. He has been interrupted.

MR. CONKLING. It was his own fault.

MR. UNDERWOOD. Do let us allow him further time. It is but justice. Give him twenty minutes longer. I do not agree with him; but I do want him to go on, because it is only fair play that he should be allowed to do so.

MR. LOVEJOY. I have no objection to that in the world. I do not desire to address the committee this evening, but only to have the floor when next we go into Committee of the Whole.

MR. VANDEVER. I have no disposition to intrude myself upon the attention of the House or the committee at any time, but there is one thing in reference to this matter that should be guarded against, and that is this previous arrangement in regard to turning out the floor. If a gentleman fairly gets the floor first, by addressing the Chair, he ought to be recognized.

THE CHAIRMAN. Is objection made to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding?

MR. CONKLING. Mr. Chairman—

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.

MR. CONKLING. No, sir. I want to make a remark. If the gentleman from Illinois is to have the floor the next time the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole; and if all of these complications, these indirect, silent, invisible schemes, by which the floor is mortgaged and farmed out—

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is out of order. [Lovejoy.]

MR. CONKLING. Well, I will take my seat, if I am called to order, or will be in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding?

MR. CONKLING. I was about to stand up, if what I have alluded to is to take place, I do not know that it makes it much more objectionable.

THE CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding?

MR. CONKLING. Well, I mean about to say to the Chair—which I believe is in order—that, if the arrangement which the gentleman from Illinois proposed to the Chair is to be carried out—and of that I want to be informed by the Chair—

THE CHAIRMAN. That is a matter for the committee, and not for the Chair.

MR. CONKLING. Then I want, before I withdraw my objection, to understand what direction the matter is to take.

MR. BURNETT. There is no objection to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Lovejoy] having the floor when the gentleman from Pennsylvania concludes.

THE CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding for a few minutes, without the gentleman from Illinois shall have the floor when he concludes?

MR. VANDEVER. I object. I have no objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding, if the gentleman from Illinois resigns his pretensions to the floor.

After some private conversation among members, the objection was withdrawn, and

MR. MONTGOMERY resumed the floor and closed his speech, occupying a little more than half an hour.

MR. McRAE moved that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and MR. DAVIS, of Indiana, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, MR. ETHELIDGE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly a bill (H. R. No. 499) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1860, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

K. GEORGE SQUIER.

MR. HILL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of E. George Squier, of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole, and when the accompanying report, ordered to be printed. And then, on motion of MR. UNDERWOOD, (in fifteen minutes after five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 30, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GERLEY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 21st of March, requesting the President to inform the Senate whether any instructions have been given to any of the officers of the Navy of the United States, by which, in any event, the naval forces of the United States, or any part thereof, were to take part in the civil war now existing in Mexico; and whether the recent capture of two war steamers of Mexico by the naval force of the United States was done in pursuance of orders issued by this Government; and also by what authority those steamers have been taken in possession by the naval force of the United States, and the men on board made prisoners, transmitting a report from the Secretary of the Navy on the subject.

MR. MASON. I move that the communication be laid on the table, and printed.

MR. SLIDELL. I suggest its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MR. MASON. Very well.

MR. FESSENDEN. Why refer it?

MR. SLIDELL. I think it proper to refer it, because it involves a grave question of international law.

MR. FESSENDEN. Let it be printed first, and let us see what it is.

MR. SLIDELL. Very well.

MR. MASON. I understand the order to print it will go to the Committee on Printing.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. It will go to the Committee on Printing, and the message will lie on the table.

CLAIMS AGAINST PARAGUAY.

MR. MASON. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred a message of the President of the United States, inviting the attention of Congress to the expediency of such legislation as may be deemed necessary to carry into effect the stipulations of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Paraguay, and in relation to the organization of the commission therein provided for, have had the same under consideration, and instructed me to report a bill. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The bill (S. No. 340) to carry into effect the convention between the United States and the Republic of Paraguay, was read the first time, and ordered to a second reading.

MR. PEARCE. I hope the Senator will allow us to present petitions first.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. That amounts to an objection.

MR. MASON. I hope the Senate will allow me to state that the bill provides only for the organization of a commission to adjudicate the claims of the Rhode Island Company against Paraguay, which the treaty provides shall sit in the city of Washington. The treaty provides further, that they shall sit but three months, and the expiration of the treaty by the delay by a passenger railway in Washington city; and as it is long, and will require to be printed, and as that bill will come up is here, and it would be desirable, for courtesy as well as for other reasons, that it should take place at once. The whole benefit of the commission is to inure to this country, and the bill provides that the expenses incurred by the United States shall be defrayed out of the claims. I should think, therefore, it would be very safe legislation. If the Senator objects, though, I cannot ask for its consideration.

MR. PEARCE. I shall be perfectly willing to take up the bill after we get through the presentation of papers. Most of us have our hands full of such papers, and it is very inconvenient to keep them.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator to object for the present.

MR. MASON renewed his request when the morning business was disposed of, but MR. TRUMBULL objected to the consideration of the bill to-day.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

MR. PEARCE presented a petition of assistant examiners and others in the Patent Office, praying to be paid, for the services which they have performed in the higher grade of Camden county, New Jersey, representing themselves to be members of the national organization of Brotherhood of the Union, Witherspoon Circle, No. 3, of New Jersey, and one hundred and twenty-two of the Continent, and others, irrespectively praying the passage of a homestead bill granting to every citizen able and willing to cultivate it a farm of one hundred and sixty acres. As a bill on that subject is now pending before the Senate, I ask that the petition lie on the table. I will state I know nothing of the order referred to, but I know many of the signers of the petition to be highly respectable and intelligent gentlemen.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table.

MR. TIGEN EYCK. I present the petition of H. L. Mason, of other citizens of Camden county, New Jersey, representing themselves to be members of the national organization of Brotherhood of the Union, Witherspoon Circle, No. 3, of New Jersey, and one hundred and twenty-two of the Continent, and others, irrespectively praying the passage of a homestead bill granting to every citizen able and willing to cultivate it a farm of one hundred and sixty acres. As a bill on that subject is now pending before the Senate, I ask that the petition lie on the table. I will state I know nothing of the order referred to, but I know many of the signers of the petition to be highly respectable and intelligent gentlemen.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table.

MR. TRUMBULL presented papers in relation to the claim of John Dixon to bounty land; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That the petition of Henry and G. K. Chesnam, of Arkansas, praying compensation for removing the salt in the Red river, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That the petition of John B. and Thomas Johnson, praying the reimbursement of expenses incurred in defending a defective title to land from the United States, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

MR. SAULSBURY. I understand this morning that the memorial of the Great Falls Manufacturing Company, which I presented on Wednesday, has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask, at the solicitation of the company, that they have leave to withdraw their memorial from the files of the Senate. It may be due to the company to allow them to do so. I present the memorial to the House of Representatives. They have no objection to a reference to the Committee on Claims of this body. I make this statement at their request.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Delaware that it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and is now in the custody of that committee. He can move to discharge the committee.

MR. SAULSBURY. I move that the vote referring the memorial to the Judiciary Committee be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. SAULSBURY. Now I move that the memorialists have leave to withdraw their memorial from the Senate.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

WASHINGTON CITY RAILWAY.

MR. PEARCE. I desire to give notice of an amendment which I propose to move to Senate bill No. 10, providing for a passenger railway in Washington city; and as it is long, and will require to be printed, and as that bill will come up to-morrow, with other District business, I ask to be allowed to lay the amendment on the table, and have it printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. LANE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 291) for the relief of John Anderson, of the State of Georgia, who was arrested by his title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. YULEE gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to refund to the State of Florida, certain moneys advanced by the said State for military purposes.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 289) to create a separate district upon the Pacific coast for the inspection of hulls, boilers, and machinery of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Joseph K. Boyd, praying remuneration for aiding in the capture of the frigate Philadelphia and the report of the Court of Claims in the case of Susan Decatur, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 341) for the relief of the captors of the frigate Philadelphia. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

FURNISHING NORTH WING OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Some days ago, it will be remembered, I offered a resolution, by instruction of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, for the purpose of authorizing that committee to have the committee-rooms of the Senate furnished, and such lights provided as should be deemed advisable and expedient. I hope the Senate will take up the resolution and pass it. I think it will save many thousands of dollars to the Government.

The motion was agreed to; and the following resolution, submitted by Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, on the 21st of March, was read:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized to have the north wing of the Capitol filled up with the necessary fixtures for gas (in conformity with the grant of the Senate on the south wing) in the parlors, corridors, committee-rooms, office and other rooms, and also to provide the committee and other rooms with such other furniture as, in their judgment, is necessary, and the cost thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. This is the second reading of the resolution. It must go through the same form as a bill. It is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. MASON. I would ask the honorable chairman of the committee, whether there has been any estimate of the cost of the furniture and fixtures which it is proposed to purchase. There is no statement in the resolution of the amount required.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I will say to the Senator that the Secretary has been going on and purchasing furniture and furnishing the rooms, as required by the members of committees. The Secretary is now indisposed, and cannot attend to such business, and the accounts have all to be submitted to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. The resolution authorizes it does not direct—that committee to have it done. Of course they will examine the prices, and know what everything is to cost the Government before allowing the expenditure. It is not directory, but simply to authorize them to do so if, in their judgment, it is required.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to offer an amendment to the resolution, to add:

Provided, That the contract for gas fixtures be let to the lowest bidder.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I think I may assure the Senator from Michigan that it will be let to the lowest and best bidder, considering all things.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know anything about this matter; but I understand that extravagant bills have been presented and paid in the other House, and I merely propose to put in this proviso, which cannot, I think, be deemed objectionable.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I have no objection to its going in. The committee will make the best contract they can.

Mr. POWELL. I will state to the Senator from Michigan, that the committee have universally acted on that principle during the session, and authorized no contract to be made except to the lowest bidder.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Does the Senator from Michigan press his amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; not if it is understood that that course is to be pursued.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope it will not be pressed; because I am willing to trust to the discretion of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw the amendment.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. SEXTON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 243) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased;

A bill (No. 246) for the relief of the heirs of Mary John Rivers, deceased;

A bill (No. 247) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Chaudont.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills, which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 247) for the relief of Mary E. Cason;

A bill (H. R. No. 941) authorizing publishers to print on their papers the date when subscriptions expire, and in relation to the postage on drop letters.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. POWELL. I move that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the consideration of certain claims against the Government, to-wit: the petition of Elizabeth Rowan, the petition of James Hudgins, administrator and heir of Ruth Murphy; the petition of Ann Patterson, the petition of William White; and the petition of Jane McClure.

Mr. CLAY stated that I understand a motion was made yesterday and carried, to withdraw these papers from the files, which cannot be done until the committee be discharged from their consideration; and I make this motion at the request of the parties, or their agent who presented the petitions.

Mr. CLAY. I trust that the motion of the Senator from Kentucky will not prevail. It happens that my memory serves me in this instance, inasmuch as to show the great impropriety of voting inconsiderately, without any discussion or explanation, in relation to withdrawing papers from the files. I know that the Senator from Kentucky did not understand the object of this motion properly, or he would have refrained from making it. I am sure that, like myself, he has been imposed upon, as we all are habitually in regard to such motions. Here was a motion made the other day by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. IVANSON], who doubt in like ignorance of the motive, to withdraw from the files of the Senate certain papers. It escaped my observation at that time; but the Senator from Kentucky has renewed it, and the records recall to my memory that the names of several of these petitions have been referred to me, as a sub-committee-man of the Committee on Pensions, and that they involve a principle which I made an elaborate report against during the last Congress, and which the Senate, by a very large vote, sustained. Now, these vigilante claim agents have observed the progress of this thing; they see that these claims are in my hands; they look for an adverse report, and then they come, through some Senator who is ignorant of the facts of the case, and ask that they be withdrawn from the files in order to take them out of my hands, and transfer them to the other end of the Capitol. I will not enter into an examination of the merits of these claims. I say they are without the slightest color of law or justice, and involve a principle which, if it is sustained by the Senate, as it is sought to be sustained by these petitioners, will involve the Government in not less than ten million dollars. Therefore I trust the motion will not prevail.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What are the claims?

Mr. CLAY. They are claims for the amount of pensions which might have been drawn by the creators of these individuals, if they had preferred their claim to a pension during their lives, which at least two Attorneys General of the United States have reported against, and which, I think, have not the slightest color of law, either in the spirit or the letter of the acts under which they are claimed. I trust the motion will not prevail.

Mr. POWELL. I will not press the motion. I was not in the Senate yesterday when the motion was made to withdraw these papers from the files. The agent of the parties requested me this morning to make a motion to have the committee discharged, in order that he might have them withdrawn from the files; but if any injury is to result, directly or indirectly, to the Government, I do not press the motion.

Mr. CLAY. I hope there will be a vote on it.

Mr. IVANSON. I word it justification of myself. Yesterday, or some time ago, a gentleman, who is a claim agent of this city, and who has been an acquaintance and friend of mine for a number of years, and I believe an honorable man—at least he has been so—has called on me to have these papers withdrawn from the files, in order that he might present them in the other House. That was his object, as he stated. I inquired of him if any adverse reports had been made in the cases. He informed me that there had not been an adverse report. I understood the rule of the Senate was, that when an adverse report had been made, the paper could not be withdrawn. I therefore acted on the supposition that no adverse report had been made. I do not know whether any adverse report has been made, or not. The Senator from Alabama has asked me to be certain of the fact whether adverse reports have been heretofore made in the cases or not. The objection which he now urges to discharging the committee, or to the withdrawal of the papers, is that the papers are under the consideration of a committee, and are in his hands, and that he intends to make an adverse report. Now, I do not know that the parties are not entitled to withdraw their papers at any time, if there be no adverse report actually made. They are not obliged to wait until the committee report, and then to withdraw their papers, if they desire, and not press their cases any further. Certainly, because a man has put in his papers here, and they have been referred to a committee, the Senator would not shut the door on him, and any he shall not withdraw them, if he chooses to withdraw them. A man can discontinue his claim when he thinks proper; and I do not think that the Senate has a right to shut the door on him, and say he shall not withdraw his papers, unless there has been an adverse report made. If there has been an adverse report, then, under the rule of the Senate, they cannot be withdrawn. I do not understand the reason of that rule; but I understand that it is the rule of the Senate.

I do not think the Senator from Alabama should insist that these papers should remain in his hands, with a view to make an adverse report, when the parties desire to withdraw them from the consideration of Congress. I do not think we ought to act thus partially towards claimants, but should let them withdraw their papers when they choose. They have the right at any time before there is an adverse report.

I do not see any difficulty in the motion of the Senator from Kentucky. The order was taken yesterday that these papers be withdrawn from the files. Now, this is the operation of that order? Is it that the papers be referred by the Senate to a committee? The possession of the committee is the possession of the Secretary; it is the possession of the Senate; and, as a matter of course, although the papers may be nominally in, and in fact, in possession of the committee, they are in possession of the Senate, and may be considered so, and may be withdrawn, so that the order made yesterday seems to me to apply. I should think so, according to my construction of its legal effect; but I do not know that I may not be wrong in this. I do not think we ought to preclude the parties from withdrawing papers, from the files of the Senate, when no adverse report has been made, simply on the presumption that the cases shall be acted upon, and, perhaps, adverse reports made.

Mr. CLAY. I am not prepared to assert that these particular cases have been reported upon adversely heretofore; but I am prepared to assert that they involve the same principle with other cases which have been reported upon adversely heretofore, and those reports have received the approval of the Senate. I will now suggest that this motion be postponed, for I wish to examine and see whether those very cases themselves have not been reported against heretofore, and I will, at the same time, move to reconsider the vote of yesterday, by which the order was made to withdraw them from the files of the Senate. I can make that motion, because I was present in the Senate when the order was made yesterday.

Mr. POWELL. When I was requested to make this motion this morning, I asked the gentleman who made the request, what was the condition of these cases. I was informed by him that a part of them were in the hands of the clerk of the Committee on Pensions, and perhaps some of them in the hands of the Secretary from Alabama. I really know nothing about the reports that have been made upon them; and I made the motion in order that it might be brought before the Senate and disposed of as they saw fit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama moves to reconsider the vote of yesterday by which leave was given to withdraw these papers from the files of the Senate. There is a question pending.

Mr. IVERSON. I hope the motion to reconsider will be over until we can investigate the facts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the committee be discharged.

Mr. CLAY. I move to postpone the consideration of that motion.

Mr. POWELL. I withdraw it for the present, if the Senator desires.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills of the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 243) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porter Portland, deceased—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 246) for the relief of the heirs of Major John Ripley—to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

A bill (No. 247) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Chudnowski—to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO.

Mr. IVERSON. The morning hour has not yet expired; and although I am in favor of taking up the Private Calendar, I will respectfully ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 112) to further carry out the provisions of the fifth section of the treaty between the United States and Mexico, concluded on the 21 day of February, 1848. It will not occupy time. Of course if it does, I will let it go over. I do not wish to trench on the private bill by its consideration. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read a second time, and considered as a Committee of the Whole. It provides for the appointment of a board of commissioners to receive and examine claims of citizens of the United States against Mexico, which were provided for in the treaty of 1848, and which were not presented to, or adjudicated upon by the former board.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to be informed by the Senator from Georgia whether there is any fund. Before we establish this board, and create these offices, we ought to know whether there is anything to be distributed.

Mr. IVERSON. I introduced a resolution at the last session of Congress, and another at this session, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to let us know whether there was any amount of the Mexican fund unexpended; and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, sent to the House at this session, and which has been printed and put on the desks of Senators, says there are $211,000. I ask that the letter be read.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to amend this bill by striking out "three," in the fourth line of the first section, and inserting "one;" so as to have but one commissioner. I recollect very well that the board of which we have now composed ourselves had knowledge was the one to settle the claim between this Government and Brazil, and it consisted of one commissioner.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator will let us hear the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, before going on with this amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I recollect the letter very well. It said the balance in the Treasury was about two hundred thousand dollars. I hold it in my hand, and, with the permission of the Senate, I will read it.

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 11, 1869.
SIR: In obedience to the resolution "that the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the Senate what the balance in the Treasury was on the 1st of January, and not paid by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, between the United States and Mexico, for the payment of the claims of Mexican citizens," adopted by the Senate of the United States on the 9th day of January, 1865, I have the honor to transmit herewith a report on the subject from the Register of Claims, in which the amount in question is stated to be $211,120.25.

I am, very respectfully,
HOWELL COBB,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. JOHN C. BRANCH, President, and President of the Senate of the United States.

The sum is small; and to appoint three commissioners at a compensation of $3,000 a year each, and a solicitor at $3,000, and a secretary at $2,000, will be eating up a very considerable portion, to say the least, of this small sum in salaries. I remarked a moment since that the last commissioner of which I have any recollection was a commission to settle claims between our Government and Brazil, and that was confined to a single commissioner and a single secretary. The amount of this fund is so small that I think we had better restrict the commission to one, and I think we had better only give him a secretary.

Mr. IVERSON. I have no objection to restricting the number of commissioners to one. I have only followed the example which was set heretofore in the establishment of similar boards.

Mr. HAMLIN. The amounts were larger there.

Mr. IVERSON. That is true. I have no objection to that amendment. This amount is unexpended in the Treasury Department, a part of that fund which Mexico set apart by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo for the payment of claims of American citizens. I will state that since I have been chairman of the Committee on Claims, a number of such claims have been presented to the Senate. One is the claim of Asch, amounting to a large sum. Another is the claim of Commodore Porter, and that is a very large claim. Another is that of General Robinson, who has a claim of some fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, and there are other claims. I understand, but I do not know how many, and to what extent they go; but they involve a large amount of documentary and other testimony, and it would be utterly impracticable for any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives to investigate them and decide properly whether they ought to be paid or not. If we appoint a commissioner, he can hear all the claims and adjudicate them upon principles of law and equity; and then, if they amount to more than the fund which is in the Treasury, he can report upon the sum to the various claimants.

This bill only opens the case to the extent of allowing the presentation of those claims that were not presented to the original board which was established under the treaty with Mexico, or which were not decided by that board upon their merits. I understand that the same claims which were presented to that board, and rested on some technical ground. We propose to let these cases, if there be any, come in and be adjudicated by this new commission. There are some claims which I understand were not presented to that board, and some commissioners, on account of the death of the parties or other unavoidable causes. This money is in the Treasury. It belongs to the claimants, if they can establish their claims to be just and good against the Government of Mexico. There is no reason why it should be retained in the Treasury. It cannot be applied to any other object; it has to lie there dead altogether; and it may create a difficulty with Mexico, because we do not apply it to the payment of the claims. Mexico has already claimed it, and will probably come again and demand that this money shall be paid over to her. If any of our citizens had just claims upon the Government of Mexico, which were not allowed by the board set up under the provisions of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, I think they ought to be entitled to this money, as far as they can establish their claims. These are the principles on which the committee acted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. To make the bill harmonious, I propose further to amend by striking out of the second and third lines of section two the words, "and a solicitor on the part of the United States both." That will have a commissioner and secretary. It will then read "the said board of commissioners shall have a secretary versed in the English and Spanish languages."

Mr. BRAGG. That matter was fully considered in the committee which reported this bill; and we came to the conclusion, from the past experience of the Government in relation to this very class of claims against Mexico, that the Government council was necessary. I think the history of claims of this kind which have heretofore been presented shows the necessity of such an officer. By evidence of ex parte character fraud and imposture are so prevalent in the claims, that the amendment will not prevail. The sum paid to the solicitor will be small; and I think such an officer is absolutely indispensable, in order that the Government may have justice done to it, and to guard against fraudulent and fabricated claims of the character which have heretofore gone on. At least, there will be some protection to the Government if there is an officer to examine them and the testimony is not entirely of an ex parte character. It is impossible for a commissioner to do this. We had three commissioners before, and yet we know very well that improper claims, to a very large amount, there being no one to sift the evidence, got in, and were allowed; and the Government was put to infinite trouble afterwards in getting a part of the money back.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not believe in the necessity of a solicitor. I do not believe there is one particle of necessity for him. Whoever shall constitute this commission will beyond all doubt be a lawyer. He should be such. He will be such. About that there can be no doubt. It is his duty to investigate these claims; it is his duty to investigate every claim that is presented to him, and to give a place for some individual, nothing else. I think I may say that in all commissions of this character involving less than half a million dollars, the Senator cannot point to a single instance where there has been a solicitor. I know of none. I know of several where there were none. It is true, where the amounts are large, where they are millions, and the means of depredation are large, and the inducements large, we have appointed solicitors, and not often in those cases. The solicitor in the case of the Senator has referred did not afford any check to the wrong that was perpetrated under that commission.

Mr. BRAGG. The former commission had no solicitor, as I understand, and it was for that reason that I understood frauds were committed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I supposed that you had had one, because I understood the Senator from Georgia to say he copied that bill. No matter whether they had one or not, I repeat again this is a simple proposition to give a man a place, where he will be as useless as the fifth wheel to a coach. I hope it will stick out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must call up the orders of the day.

Mr. IVERSON. I suppose we shall get through with this bill in a few minutes.

Mr. SLIDELL. I think not. It will lead to some discussion, and it will better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, and the Chair will take up the Private Calendar.

JOHN LOB'S REPRESENTATIVES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 224) for the relief of the heirs at law of the late Abigail Nason, sister and devisee of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the House at this session, and which has been printed and put

Mr. CLAY. This bill was under discussion when the Senate adjourned last evening. I then stated my objections to the bill, mainly on the score of the interest proposed to be allowed. Since that time I have examined the papers upon which the claim rests, and I concern fully in what was said by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] last evening, that there is no evidence whatever to sustain the claim, either for principal or interest. In the first place, there is no evidence at all to show that there is any claim which is due to the claimant. Here is a claim which is supported by the affidavits of two witnesses, swearing to a fact forty years after it is said to have transpired—one of whom asserts positively the existence of the fact, and the other that it did not occur. These two witnesses purport to have sworn before a justice of the peace; but the character of that officer is not established in any way. Their testimony is not authenticated according to the laws of the United States. We have no sort of evidence, upon the face of the papers, that this man was a justice of the peace. We have no evidence whatever that he had the legal right to administer an oath. We have no evidence whatever that these men did take a legal oath; that they incurred any legal penalty in perjury. I take it that the whole testimony, as presented upon these papers, was not fabricated by the claimant himself. Therefore I say that there is no evidence whatever. But admitting that the testimony was properly administered, and that the witnesses were authorized to administer oaths; and that these men did make these statements under the sanction of an oath duly administered, they do not establish the claim at all. Here is one witness who testifies that this man was a justice of the peace, and that he rendered the service. He does not know that he was not paid for it. The other thinks he was there. He, in like manner, does not know that he did not receive any pay. Now, I assert that it is a very incredible thing that this claimant should have sworn on this record that he should have served during the time of fifteen months; that at the expiration of this time others should have been paid, and that he should not; and that he should have been wholly ignorant of his right to payment. I say that this is an incredible story.

There are other marks upon the papers in the case. He sleeps upon his rights for near forty years, before he prefers any claim against the Government. Then there is one report in his favor; and after the lapse of about thirty years more there is another report in his favor. Why this claim slept during these thirty intermediate years, is wholly unexplained. I think, without multiplying words about it, (for it is a very small amount that is asked,) that the claim is wholly unsupported by testimony; and that, if well supported by testimony, the payment of interest would be a precedent which would return constantly to annoy us, and would involve an immense amount of money, such as the Treasury could not discharge.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Since the adjournment yesterday, I have looked at these papers. I was induced to do so by the doubt expressed by the Senator from Maryland yesterday. The Senator from Alabama has stated correctly that there is no witness who proves distinctly and directly the fact upon which the claim is presented. The other who proves indirectly. I have been under the impression that, in the action we take here, we are not in the habit of requiring the strictness that is required in courts of justice. Papers are presented here by gentlemen holding seats in the two Houses, purporting to be facts. Why before a justice of the peace in their States; and I think the presumption is a fair one, that everything is to be inferred in favor of the proper character of the officers who administer oaths. I take it that the Senator from Maryland, who reports on the case at one time, in substance, that the character of the officers who administered the oath. If that be an objection to this case, I suppose that very few claims can be made out in the Senate.

The case was first presented in 1828, forty years after the service was rendered. I do not see the proof made in the case as genuine. I doubt not the circumstances will justify any one in accounting for the delay. Then it establishes this fact: that the ancestor of the applicant performed fifteen months' service for the United States as a seaman

Forty years afterwards two witnesses come forward and prove the claim. Now, the kind of service that was performed here is a kind which would hardly ever be forgotten by anybody who was present. One of these witnesses says he was on the same vessel, performing the same service, and was taken prisoner at the same time; and he states positively that the ancestor of this applicant was with him. Now, it is possible that such facts as these ever could be forgotten, and that they are not to be taken as proved, because the witness who testifies to them may have arrived at the age of seventy-five? My understanding of the law that governs memory is, that old transactions are best forgotten by old persons. I take it that, granted, therefore, that there can be no real doubt as to the genuineness of this evidence, and as to the service having been rendered; and a committee of the other House, in 1830, so regarded it, when these transactions were much more fresh than they are now, and reported in favor of it, and the House of Representatives then passed a bill granting to this claimant $120—eight dollars a month.

The claim has lain for thirty years. The party died some time afterwards. Then his widow died, and he brought forward his claim. That is the reason why it has slept so long; but if the claim was just when presented, the proof was then made out, for it is the same proof which was made out in 1829 and 1830, and acted upon then, and the claimant has never made a new one. Two or three reports have been made, all carrying, except on the question of interest. The last committee, regarding the claim as having been established in 1830, proved then, and prima facie recognized as such by the action of one branch of Congress, considered it a debt then existing, and hence allowed interest. I do not contend by any means that the law carries interest with it; that it is a case that would necessarily carry interest. It is a question for the Senate to decide, whether it is a matter of justice that an established claim should be carried over by the committee, and that it ought to do so, and have reported the bill at $336, $120 of which is the principal, and the balance the interest. That is the whole question. It is now for the Senate to decide whether they will allow it, if they take on the claim just, the additional $200 interest, or whether they will pay the principal. On principles of justice, I think the interest ought to be allowed. I do not understand that there is any established practice—certainly no law—that governs the case. In the courts of justice, a claim of this kind would be considered as a matter of law, carry interest; but in such cases, as far as my observation goes, the jury is allowed to give interest or not; and I have never known them to fail to do so. On the same principle of justice governing this case, the committee have reported interest here.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to try this question of interest, and to do that I move to strike out $336, and insert $120. I think that is the principal sum.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays on it. It is an important principle.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think this claim, which is now reported by the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, was before the Committee on Claims last year or the year before, and I then examined the case. So far as any doubt may have been thrown by the debate on the propriety of making the allowance for the wages, I think that any one who would take the trouble to examine the papers would see that it is as distinctly proved as it is possible for an event of that length of time to be proved. The circumstances of the service are such as any man would remember; and the claim is made out as well as, and better than, three-fourths of the claims we are considering the time that it is made out. I think that when a claim has been proved before the proper Departments of this Government, and omitted to be paid by the neglect of Congress, interest is fairly due to the applicant from that time when we got out of the hands of the Government, and reported to the Committee on Claims at different times; once, I am sure, I hope the interest will be paid.

Mr. HUNTER. As the Senator is familiar with the history of the case, I ask why the man did not present his evidence at the Department, and get the money there?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is all stated in the report. It was reported, and passed the Senate last year, I believe, without a dissenting voice.

Mr. CLAY. I dislike to multiply so many words on so small a claim; and yet, as I said, it involves an important principle, and one which, if it is adopted by the Senate, will carry out, hereafter, what we require the condition of more than hundreds of millions of dollars, in my opinion, because it is an assertion of a right to interest upon a claim from the time it was preferred to Congress. If it is established by the vote of the Senate that there is a proper principle, and that interest ought to be counted from the time a claim is first preferred to Congress, I say you will repeat all the claims that have ever been preferred; because there is not probably one that has ever been prosecuted here where interest was paid from the time of presentation. Hence it is, in my opinion, an important principle, and I repeat, that no lawyer—I mean no man who has been accustomed to the practice of law in any court of this country—can say that this claim is well sustained by testimony. That is my opinion.

My friend Mr. John A. Bland says he thinks it is well made out; and yet I venture the assertion that it is sustained by the unsupported testimony of but one witness, conceding that he made oath to it before a person authorized to administer oaths, which does not appear. I have no witness to support what he has heard from the claimant himself. Even what he thinks he was there, and explains the reason, because he catechized him as to what had occurred there; and because the claimant evinced some knowledge of what did occur there, which he might have learned from another person, he thinks he was there. That is the sum and substance of his testimony. But, sir, there is not a particle of evidence to sustain the claim in any of the Departments. They have ransacked the Navy, War, and Treasury Departments, and nothing appears on file in any of them to support this claim.

Well, now, I submit to the Senate whether it is a credible story, that this man alone, of all this ship's crew, should have been unpaid for forty years; that he should not have had his rights, when the rest were paid immediately; that he should not have found out until 1792; and then, after finding out that others had been paid, and that he was entitled to payment, that he should have slept on his rights until 1828 or 1829; and then again, that he or his heirs, after one favorable report in Congress, should have failed to prosecute the claim for more than thirty years longer? I think it is very clear that the claim is wholly unsustained by such evidence as could carry it through the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says that this service is proved by but a single witness. I think there are two; but suppose there was but one forty years after the service was rendered; suppose they had all died but one; I should like to know if there is any law that would say that the claim was proved, if one substantial credible witness swore to the fact that he was on board the ship with this man during fifteen months? I should like to know if any court would not take that as satisfactory proof, provided the man told the truth? If he did not tell the truth, no number of witnesses that might swear falsely would strengthen the testimony at all. If the witness is truthful—

Mr. CLAY. If the Senator will permit me to answer him just here, I say that under the circumstances, I do not think his testimony is satisfactory, and I will give the Senator the reason; first because—

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator need not give me a reason. If he would not take the testimony of one man, he would not take two.

Mr. CLAY. I think the Senator is contradictory negatively, by the fact that there is no evidence on file in any Department of the Government of the actions of this vessel even, much less of the service of the individual; and in the next breath he says that the claimant is entitled to the money is said to have transpired, and in the next place we have no evidence of the credibility of the witnesses.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know that when a man makes a motion to resist a claim of a sailor, and lected and collated, and which the large commercial intercourse he himself had with those nations in early life enabled him to collect better than any other man in the United States, has been of very great benefit to the country. I cannot judge of it myself, and do not pretend to express an opinion on any information which I have collected personally; but we have the testimony of Mr. Clayton, who was certainly one of the most intelligent and honorable men in the country; a man largely connected with the operations of this Government, and a member of the Senate for many years, and Secretary of State for some time; a man who understood perhaps the commercial relations of this Government as well as any other man of his day—he bears testimony to the importance of the information which was collected and furnished by Mr. Palmer to the Government.

Now, the honorable Senator from North Carolina says this was all voluntary on the part of Mr. Palmer. Admit it for the sake of the argument; does it follow, because he collected a large amount of valuable information, and tendered it to the use of the Government, that he is not to be paid for it, if that information is valuable to the Government? Any man who makes an invention of a machine or anything of that sort, does it voluntarily; but he comes to the Government and asks for compensation. He does not get compensation, to be sure, in the shape of money paid by the Government, but he gets compensation under the law which gives to him a patent right for many years. He obtains the patent right, and is thereby remunerated for his invention. But he comes voluntarily before the Government to present his invention, and to enlighten the country in regard to it. It is not because a man voluntarily presents information of this sort to the Government that he is to be deprived of any compensation for it. If you were to say that if you will, you would never give a patent to an inventor, because he voluntarily comes to you for the purpose of enlightening and adding to the encouragement of commerce or manufactures.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I should like to ask for information, if I may, to understand the case. Has Mr. Palmer been deprived in any way, by our action, of a copyright to his book, if he chose to publish it?

Mr. IVERSON. I will speak of that point in a few minutes, and show the Senate the history of the case. I think that, although the information may have been, in the first place, voluntarily communicated by Mr. Palmer to various Presidents and Secretaries of State, yet still, if it be an admitted fact that the information has been of service to the Government, in a spirit of liberality, as well as justice, we ought to compensate him.

But, sir, Mr. Palmer was actually employed by the Government. All his services were not of a voluntary character. It has been stated by the Senator from Vermont—and it is true, and I think the resolutions of the Senate under which he was employed—that Mr. Palmer was here at the instance of the Secretary of State, superintending the printing of a document which was ordered by the Senate to be printed. The Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Bates) says that he was here a longer time than was necessary. I do not know how that was. It may or may not have been so. At any rate, the fact is established that he was here at the request and instance of the Secretary of State, superintending the printing of documents containing information which the Secretary of State and the Administration thought to be of vast importance to the Government; and being here employed at the request of the Secretary, it was no fault, probably, of his that he was detained here eight or nine months. He was detained here, at the request of the Government, if he was brought here and kept here at his request to superintend the printing of an important document, it appears to me that he ought to be remunerated for those services for the time thus spent.

Mr. FOOT. Quite a large outline map of those countries was also prepared by him during that time.

Mr. GRIMES. Allow me to ask whether there is any evidence of his being kept here to superintend the printing of a document at the request of the Government, except his own statement?

Mr. BRAGG. There is nothing but his own statement as to the time he was here.

Mr. IVERSON. I am not so familiar with the facts; but my impression is that he was requested to stay here by the Secretary of State.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not see it so stated in the report.

Mr. FOOT. It will be observed in the report that Mr. Clayton himself stated, on presenting Mr. Palmer's memorial, that he remained here in the employment and service of the Government, at the request of three Secretaries. It was well understood that Mr. Clayton himself was one of these three. In relation to his invitation to come from New York to Washington to promote the action of the Government, in reference to the subjects contained in the documents which he had communicated to them, I have before me a certificate from Mr. Walker himself, testifying the fact that Mr. Palmer did come here from New York at his invitation.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the Senator from Vermont will observe, if he will read the statement of Mr. Clayton critically, that he does not state that he knew, of his own knowledge, that Mr. Palmer was here on business, or that his action revoked the approbation of three Secretaries of State; but he merely says:

"I present the petition of Aaron Haight Palmer, praying compensation."

That is, the petition prays for "Compensation for services rendered by him, in communicating and making a direct and indirect appeal, and with the approbation, of three Secretaries of State."

That is to say, Mr. Palmer alleges in his petition, which Mr. Clayton presented, that he had performed this duty under the direction and with the approbation of three Secretaries of State; but I do not understand that Mr. Clayton says he had done this.

Mr. FOOT. Mr. Clayton was one of the three Secretaries referred to; clearly known to be so to each and every member of the Senate; and, if it had not been true, Mr. Clayton would probably have said so.

Mr. IVERSON. I leave that question to be replied to by those members of the committee who sit on the other side, who are more familiar with the facts of the case than I am; but now I want to refer to the history of the proposition to print Mr. Palmer's book. The documents, which the Senator from North Carolina has characterized, in the language of Mr. Benton, as "the battle of the books," The Senator is misled in relation to some of the points which he has stated. On the 16th day of January, 1850, I find by the Journal:

"Mr. HAYS submitted the following resolutions for consideration:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to communicate to the Senate such information or particulars as may have come to his knowledge, respecting the detention, imprisonment, and barbarous treatment, by the Japanese imperial and provincial authorities, of American vessels and crews, and the capture of American whaling fleets, on the coasts of Japan and its dependencies, which are now frequented by a large American whaling fleet in the peaceful pursuit of their lawful enterprise."

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be also requested to communicate to the Senate such information or particulars as may have come to his knowledge, respecting the detention, imprisonment, and barbarous treatment, by the Japanese imperial and provincial authorities, of American vessels and crews, and the capture of American whaling fleets, on the coasts of Japan and its dependencies, which are now frequented by a large American whaling fleet in the peaceful pursuit of their lawful enterprise."

These resolutions were offered on the 16th of January, 1850, and laid on the table. The second resolution calls upon the Secretary of State to communicate to the Senate all valuable recent information which he might have in relation to the oriental nations which would have a bearing on the future commerce of the United States with those countries. It may be that it had reference to the statements or documents or memoirs which had been drawn up by Mr. Palmer, at the request of the Secretary of State, in the Department of Mr. Walker, and then in the Department of State.

Mr. BRAGG. Allow me one word, just here. Mr. Clayton says, in his report, that that memoir, containing eight hundred pages, as it appears, was a résumé merely of the various papers which this Mr. Palmer had submitted to the Department from time to time; in other words, it was his book which he wanted to publish in 1845, and of which a prospectus is given here. He says he was preparing them for about three months—from some time in January up to the end of April—on that subject. I am not so familiar with the facts; but my impression is that he was requested to stay here by the Secretary of State. It was the book written in 1845, and which he wanted to have published when he was before the Senate before, with the memoir addressed to Mr. Polk. It is the same book, and that resolution was so framed as to bring in the book, and it came in with the report of the Secretary of State; and then it was that there was a proposition here to have the book printed. It had been before Congress during Mr. Walker's secretaryship, and there was a proposition to appropriate $40,000 to publish the book. It has been here in various ways. I did not state them all.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator's statement does not differ from my own. All this information, all this documentary evidence in relation to the trade of the oriental nations, that had been filed by Mr. Palmer in the State and Treasury Departments for several years previous was called for. It may have been made up of detached particulars. This resolution calls on the Secretary of State to report to the Senate all the "recent" information in his possession of the Department of State, with respect to the independent oriental nations, and their capabilities for a profitable American commerce." On the 21st day of February, of the same year,

"The Senate proceeded to consider the resolutions submitted by Mr. HAYS, relating to the conduct of the authorities of Japan; which were amended and agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to communicate to the Senate such information or particulars as may have come to his knowledge, respecting the detention, imprisonment, and barbarous treatment, by the Japanese imperial and provincial authorities, of American vessels and crews, and the capture of American whaling fleets, on the coasts of Japan and its dependencies, which are now frequented by a large American whaling fleet, in the peaceful pursuit of their lawful enterprise."

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be also requested to communicate to the Senate such recent and reliable information as may have come to his knowledge, respecting the independent oriental nations, and their capabilities for a profitable American commerce."

The resolution passed the Senate on the 21st of February, calling on the Secretary of State to communicate all this information. On the 22nd of February, 1850, on the 13th day of June, three days after, a resolution was submitted to these words:

"Resolved, That Mr. Palmer have leave to withdraw, take out a copyright for, and print on his own account, the documents entitled 'A Comprehensive View of the Principal Independent Maritime Countries of the East,' which accompanied the report of the Secretary of State to the Senate, under date of the 23d of April last, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to subscribe for—copies of the work under the above title, for the use of the Senate. The same shall be delivered by Mr. Palmer at a price not exceeding, per copy, the cost of the work, including the cost of the public sale of the documents of the Senate in 1849, with twenty per cent. discount."

This report had been submitted in April by Mr. Clayton, and it is stated amongst the papers, and I think conclusively proved, that Mr. Palmer was employed by Mr. Clayton to prepare this book. This report to go to the Senate, in accordance with the resolution of February 21, 1850, calling for all recent reliable information which he had in his Department in relation to the oriental nations.

That statement was made, comprising eight hundred pages. It took Mr. Palmer, it seems, three or four months—from February, at any rate, until April—to prepare the report which was sent in by Mr. Clayton. Then in June a resolution was introduced, doubtless at the instance of Mr. Palmer, to submit to the Senate a report which he had prepared at his own expense, and that the Secretary of the Senate should be authorized to subscribe for a number of copies, provided Mr. Palmer should furnish them at a certain price. What was done at that resolution? It certainly would seem that Mr. Palmer should have been authorized to print this work at his own expense. The resolution was to authorize him to withdraw the report, and to withdraw the documents he had prepared and sent in with Mr. Clayton's report, and to print them at his own expense; but it authorized the Secretary to subscribe for a number of copies. On the same day that the resolution which I last read was submitted,

"The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution by unanimous consent; and,

"The high having been filled with a three hundred, and another amount being proposed,

"On motion of Mr. CLAY,

"Resolved, That it be on the table."

That was the end of the whole proceeding.

Mr. BRAGG. The Senator is entirely mistaken; it was not the end of the proceeding at all. It was not satisfactory to Mr. Palmer's friends that the matter should take that direction; and it was brought up at a subsequent day, so the Senator will find on further examination, and then there was a proposition to authorize the Secretary to subscribe for five thousand copies, at two dollars a copy. Subsequently the amount was reduced to three thousand copies. That failed; and the Senate made an order, as I have already stated, to return the book to the State Department. That was the end of it. I know what I say.

Mr. IVERSON. I admit that a subsequent proceeding was had; but the Senator does not dispute the fact that this memoir prepared by Mr. Palmer was given to the Government, and that in the body with the report of Mr. Clayton, never has been given back to Mr. Palmer. It has been retained by the Government from that day to this; he never has been permitted to print it at his own expense, or given to his friends. That is the fact. Here was a proposition made in 1850 to authorize him to withdraw the paper and print it at his own expense; and when it was proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Senate to subscribe for fifteen hundred copies, the Senate refused to pass the resolution, and it was laid on the table, on motion of Mr. Clay.

Mr. BRAGG. I diallo to interrupt my friend; but I hope he will make me to ask him a question. He states that Mr. Palmer has never had an opportunity to print this book. I ask whether Mr. Palmer has ever had an opportunity to do so. In the debate from which I read, his friends refused to let him take the book. They considered it in the possession of the Government, having been communicated by the Secretary of State. They were anxious to get it printed. He wanted to lay it upon Congress, and have the book published at the public expense. Finally, to get rid of it, a resolution was passed to have it returned to the State Department. Now, I want to know if Mr. Palmer has applied to the State Department for the book, and whether it has been refused to him?

Mr. IVERSON. I again say that Mr. Palmer applied by this resolution, in 1850, to have the paper returned to him; and Congress refused to return it. Here was a resolution offered, in express terms authorizing him to withdraw the paper for his own benefit; and, on motion of Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, the resolution was laid on the table; and the Senate refused to permit him to withdraw the paper. The paper then did not belong to Mr. Palmer. The property of the Government was in the country. The property of the Secretary of State, it became the property of the United States; and when it was returned here by Mr. Clayton, it became the property of the Government; and he had then no more right to withdraw it, or use it for his own benefit, than I had, or any other man in the country. Now, I want to know to show me that Mr. Palmer has ever been permitted by the Government to use this paper for his own benefit.

When, at a subsequent day, a proposition was made to authorize him to print it and to subscribe for so many copies, the Senate refused to pass the resolution authorizing him to print it and to subscribe for copies; and instead of allowing Mr. Palmer to withdraw the paper and to print it for his own benefit, the Senate refused to do that, and it lay on the table. The property of the Government was kept there by the Government. Whose property is it? Will the Senator from North Carolina declare that these papers now belong to Mr. Palmer? No, sir, they belong to the Government of the United States; he can no more withdraw them from the treasury than I can. He can withdraw them, and he never has been permitted to avail himself of the benefit of the intellect and trouble and labor which he has expended on the work. The Government has deprived him of the work. It is refused to permit him to get back the papers he prepared with so much labor, and so much care—papers which have conferred benefits on the country—and have been considered important by its most exalted officials.

It appears to me that, under these circumstances, as he was undoubtedly kept here at his own expense to work for the Government, giving to the Government the benefit of his previous labors, and forming part of his mind, and his intellect, and his labor, it is hard to say that the Government should avail itself of the services, of the information, and intellect of a citizen, conferring important benefits upon the country, and then turn him loose and say we are not responsible to him for a book which he has prepared with his own mind, and for my own part, I shall vote for this bill to pay him $3,000. We could not very well arrive really at the correct amount, and we followed the example of former committees, that reported in favor of $3,000. It is an arbitrary sum, I admit; but, taking into consideration the fact that he was here for many months—more than a year—and leaving out of view the time, labor, and mental power which he expended upon this work prior to the time he was kept here in Washington city at the instance of the Government—that was here, and that he employed for the benefit of the Government, and I understand at the instance of the Government, at least for a portion of the time, in obedience to a resolution of the Senate—it seems to me that he is justly entitled to some compensation, and I cannot say that $3,000 is an unreasonable amount.

Mr. CLAY. I have only a word to say on this subject. The Senator from Georgia repeats what was said by the Senator from Vermont: that the information given the Government by this claimant was valuable.

Mr. IVERSON. I did not express that opinion myself. I say that I rely on the opinion expressed by Mr. Clayton and other distinguished persons, with better information and a better chance to judge than myself.

Mr. CLAY. Well, sir, I challenged both Senators, and I do it again, to show what advantage his communications have been to this Government. I deny that the Government has derived the slightest profit from them, and I defy them to show that the Government has enjoyed any advantage whatever. They talk of the Government's commercial advantages that have resulted, the profitable trade that has been opened with Japan; and yet they cannot show wherein we have imported anything from Japan. I have yet to learn that the Government has opened with Japan a new vessel, I say told, came into San Francisco. What it was freighted with, whether it promised to open any profitable trade, no one can tell.

Now, sir, I have traced the history of this claim some time since it has been under discussion, and I find that, like a pauper wandering from parish to parish for a settlement, Mr. Palmer has been before four committees before he found one to whom he would recognize his claim. First, he was before the Library Committee; they refused to print his book. Then he was before the Committee on the Committee on Foreign Relations, and they asked to be discharged from his consideration. Then it was referred to the Committee on Commerce; they, in like manner, asked to be discharged from his consideration. Lastly, it went to the Committee on Claims, and they recommended, and now, it seems, that we shall pay him $3,000; and for what? All that we can get in response to that question is, "for valuable information;" but wherein valuable, or how valuable, no one is able to claim. I have the great credit of Mr. Clayton that it is valuable, and that is the whole of it.

Now, sir, the Senator from North Carolina has suggested reasons for the opinion which he has formed, and which I think must be entertained by a majority of the Senate, that all these calls upon the Government for information have been given in haste and without request. He suggested the various resolutions calling for information. He came here, apparently called by Mr. Walker at one time, but doubtless it was at his own suggestion. He has been here, I believe, almost ever since. I am sure I have seen him, and heard from him during the last seven winters I have been at this Capital.

Mr. IVERSON. He lives here.

Mr. CLAY. I am told he now lives here. I dare say he was attending to his own business, and making money, and not that of the Government. At all events, I think the Government has compensated him amply for whatever information he has furnished. It is very clear that the Government has derived no valuable consideration from this party—none whatever. On the other hand it appears that the Government published his memorial, and along with that has published a prospectus of the work which he proposed to print. Thus he has been paid for the Government expense, and in addition to that it appears that they gave him two hundred and fifty copies of his memorial. If we vote this, in my opinion, we vote a pure gratuity.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, this bill seems to have met with opposition from a peculiar quarter. It seems that Senators cannot understand that a merchant can give valuable information to the Departments of this Government when they contemplate fitting out an expedition to ascertain what commercial relations we have with distant nations, and that the information cannot be worth anything unless Congress see fit to publish it for the benefit of the world; and from the fact that this information was not published, and large numbers of copies published for the benefit of the Government, it follows that the information they consider the information worthless. I do not consider that that necessarily follows at all. The Government of the United States was about to fit out an expedition to Japan, it seems, and sought for such information as would be of service to it. It do it most economically, and to ascertain what its probable results would be. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GATZERT] asks me what is the evidence that the Government sought it. The evidence is a certificate from the Secretary of the Treasury that he invited Mr. Walker to give him the information—Mr. Walker in the early part of Mr. Polk's administration; and the further evidence is, that the Secretary of State under General Taylor reported this to Congress, and stated that he had given it to three Secretaries, of whom he was one. Certainly, it was a matter of which he was proud. At any rate, this information was published by the Senate, and we know the fact.

This man was requested to confer with Commodore Perry when the Government fitted out the Japan expedition, and he was here to help us give him all the information that the Department wanted, to enable them to understand whether they were justified in fitting out the expedition. Now the Senator from Alabama wants to know what the commercial statistics prove that we get in dollars and cents for this information. It is worth anything unless there is a return in your Treasury books? We have made this expedition; we have found out this distant country; we have made treaties with it, and we have not yet realized the results. The returns of this labor are far distant. When an expedition is fitted out to find an open polar sea, which is said to exist, we contribute money, we do anything to get the information; but when do you expect to have any commerce with the north pole? There is nothing gross here. But there is valuable geographical information got by these expeditions, and we pay for them.

So with the expedition to Japan. Have not the commercial nations sent their exploring parties around the world from season to season, and from period to period in order to ascertain what they ever bring any return in money? There never was any expected in that way; but this is the way the geography of the world is found out, and this is the way the commerce of the world is ascertained; and any nation ought to be willing to contribute something towards this information as well as other nations. Nations derive some honor, some credit from these expeditions; and if this man has imparted valuable information, as there is abundant evidence that he has, he may as well have received a hundred thousand dollars. We must not expect, it is not reasonable that we should expect, that every expedition we fit out to open new sources of commercial resources, will give us a return in dollars and cents the moment the ships that go to explore a country come back. They will have gathered information, tribute information, and they do contribute it, I agree that a great deal is done for the mere vanity—if you please to call it so—the mere fame of displaying knowledge and communicating information; but when afterwards such a man disdains himself in circumstances that would be paid for, as for pay, it is but liberal and just that we should allow him a reasonable compensation. The committee have arrived at this sum, which is not a very liberal one, as I think. This man has been here a great while. I know books are stated to have been written by him, and that he has a hundred pages. I have not seen any of them, but I am sure. But we have thought $3,000 would be reasonable. Information has been obtained, an expedition has been fitted out, and we have spent a great deal of money. I think the result has been the result of that expedition, thus the allowance now proposed. It would be just as reasonable for us to require, if we had fitted out Dr. Kane's expedition, to allow the result to be paid to him three or four hundred dollars above the result he would import, just as much as in the case of the Japan expedition. We are going now, it has been said, to entertain some Japanese noblemen; and I think it would be reasonable to have the result of the scrutiny of a man like the Senator from North Carolina. If he comes here and undertakes to drive everything down to the hard pan for the money, he will find that there are many things that will not pay for themselves in money returns. Why should we pay money to entertain Japanese noblemen? We must do something a little different from this scale of dollars and cents, and must pay people for information, and for their services, although we have it in profit the first year after it is given.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to say a word or two on this bill, as I had occasion to examine the claim a year or two ago, and originally made the report which you have read to the Senate. I have been very glad to find that he was employed by Mr. Walker, then Secretary of the Treasury, in 1848, for a certain purpose to furnish information. Now, I understand that objectionable information was furnished, and communicated voluntarily on the part of the man, and that he is, therefore, not to be paid. Well, Mr. President, let us look at that position for a moment, and see whether that meets the case. Suppose that the man had furnished information from 1842 to 1849—supposing he came from New York to Washington and laid that information voluntarily before the Secretary of State—he would then be entitled to no compensation for coming here, and for the information he gave. He gets here, if the Secretary of State uses that information, and it becomes valuable to the Government, should he not be paid for it? I hold in my hand the certificate of that Secretary—Mr. Walker—that this information was valuable to him. He says:

"The facts stated in the body of the letter are correct, and the information and statistics furnished by Mr. Palmer, in connection with our commercial intercourse with Asia, were most valuable and important."

If we meet upon that point, that he came voluntarily to Washington from New York, and yet communicated valuable information to the Secretary of State, which was for the benefit of the Government, should we not pay him? Is it allowed that we should pay a man for his services here, before we pay him anything? We have had the benefit; we have had the product of his labor; now, why should he not be paid? If I go a little further in this memorial, if I come to the time when he was in the service of the Government, he says, in his memorial, that he completed a series of papers containing geographical descriptions of many oriental nations, enumerating, among them, the Empire of Japan. Now, what says Mr. Clayton? He says, "Mr. May, I have no objection."

"I only wish to say, as an act of justice to this gentleman, that, from all the information which I have had an opportunity of receiving heretofore in another position"—

That was when he was Secretary of State. That was the other position which Mr. Clayton held. Now, from all the information which he acquired in another position, that is, when he was Secretary of State, Mr. Clayton said:

"I believe he is entitled to more credit for getting up the Japan expedition than any other man I have heard of."

Mr. Palmer sets forth that he furnished information to Mr. Clayton. Years afterwards, in 1855, Mr. Clayton takes his memorial and thus substantiates it: he says "as an act of justice;" and he wants to say that Mr. Palmer had done more than any other man he ever heard of in regard to that expedition.

Now what shall we pay this man for these ser-ties? He has done more than any other man that has been heard of, in regard to this matter. What shall we pay him? It does not appear by the Treasury books to have been worth anything at all. He has been paid $20,000 for carrying out that expedition. Palm furnished more information than anybody else for it, and when it was successfully carried out, you paid $20,000 for it. Then what shall we pay for the information that he furnished? It is not worth anything; we have got no good from it. Why not be as liberal to the man who furnished the information, or in part so; why not do something more generous for him than what you did for Commodore Perry? And we would like to pay for Commodore Perry; you gave him a large number of copies of his own work—two hundred and fifty copies. I am informed—as a compliment to him—that you gave him a copy of the report he pleased with them, I think he bestowed them among his friends. Why then should we not reward this man for his services and labor? But I do not rest there. I want to call the attention of the President to the fact that he has done the report and to the memorial. The report says:

"Mr. Palmer further represents that, in pursuance of certain resolutions, presented by Mr. Hastings, chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, and adopted by the Senate, on the 21st of February, 1850, calling on the Secretary of State for information respecting the barbarous treatment of shipwrecked American seamen in Japan; also, in regard to the independent oriental nations, and their emancipation from the present American commerce, he, as a member of the Senate, has been actively engaged, and employed by Mr. Clayton, Secretary of State, in preparing his answer to said resolutions, and that he was diligently employed for about three months in that business."²

He was employed by Mr. Clayton. Now, the objection is, that he was not employed. Gentlemen say it rests on the statement of Palmer alone that he was employed. I want to call attention to this point. Was he employed, or not, by Mr. Clayton in assist in preparing his answer to the resolutions? Here is Mr. Clayton's report, copied into this. Here is what Mr. Clayton himself said in regard to that. If you turn to the last page of the report, you will find, in Mr. Clayton's own language:

¹⁰ He claims compensation for nine months' services, in which he was necessarily detained during that year (1848) in the preparation of the map, and correcting the proofs of the usual, as well as extra, numbers of copies of said memoir ordered by the Senate; and also for four months' services in preparing a report, illustrated by a special chart, for the Secretary of State, under a resolution of the Senate of the 16th January, 1850.¹¹

Was that in the book that was to be published? A special chart was prepared by him for that report. Mr. Clayton concludes:

"In view of the highly meritorious and valuable services thus rendered by Mr. Palmer, and their important results in preparing the way for opening new markets in the East to our commerce, your committee have come to the conclusion that he is justly entitled to ——— thousand dollars, in compensation for such services and expenses; and they accordingly report a bill allowing the same, and recommend its passage."

"That is the report of Mr. Clayton himself, after Mr. Palmer had said he was employed. Is it not confirmation strong from Mr. Clayton's own mouth, that he was employed? And yet it is said we do not owe him anything. You had his services for a long time, and he was the confidential Secretary of State in this instance, and you have not paid him a dollar. But you say you have given him certain books. What was that in payment of this service? Now, why not pay the man what we owe him? Why delay it, and say that he is not entitled to it? He has been until he has grown old and tottering, before you acknowledge and pay him for his services, and then refuse to pay interest in the end? Mr. President, I have only to say that I think this claim eminently just, and the services here named are eminently deserving of reward for at a small sum. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything on the subject of this bill, and I have purposely forbore. I know Mr. Palmer. He is a very civil, obliging gentleman, and has seraped together a good deal of information on the subject of commerce, possible as well as actual commerce, with these oriental countries. But I have known something of these manuscripts which lie prepared many years ago, and I recollect very well that they were written in a very loose way, allow what comes to me to be misconceptions to pass unnoticed. I have before me the paper on the sun on this subject, and I do not know that I ought to thority of which it is assumed that this gentleman came here to Washington by invitation of a high officer of the Government, in order to prepare information valuable and important to the Government. I had seen various little pamphlets of Mr. Palmer's, and I had seen a letter of his, in relation to the affair at Washington. It seems from this letter, which he has addressed to Mr. Walker, that in 1847, Mr. Walker being in New York, there was an interview between him and Mr. Palmer. Whether that interview was sought by Mr. Walker or whether it was allowed to him, I do not know; that it was, as hundreds of other interviews have been, sought by Mr. Palmer; and that after stating to Mr. Walker that he was preparing certain manuscripts on this subject, with a view to presenting them to the Government, Mr. Walker expressed a desire to examine them, and the Mr. Walker expressed an opinion that perhaps Mr. Palmer had better come on to Washington, and present the papers to the Government. This he did; and I am on the ground of the claim of Mr. Palmer that the Government had no right to the preparation of these papers for the Government.

The truth, and it is very well known by those who were in Congress at that time, that in 1850 Mr. Palmer, who supposed himself to possess peculiar information in regard to these subjects, was sent by the Government to make a diplomatic mission to these oriental islands and countries, I do not know which one, but somewhere; and that he was recommended to the Government for some such place. Doubtless, these islands were then in the hands of the United States, and he was sent to them, and he was intended to be presented to the Government, were intended to enforce his claims to such a mission, and to justify, as I dare say they very amply would have done, the Government in giving him such an appointment. But he never, however, gave him the appointment. Probably if they had we should never have heard of this claim.

All that Mr. Walker certifies to is that the information is valuable. It is interesting and valuable, I dare say, to some people. I have read some of it with a good deal of interest. Well, the Librarian of Congress is a member of the Senate from Maine [Mr. HAMLEN] were here, I should be very glad to know from him how it was that he happened to call for this information from the State Department? Doubtless he was solicited by Mr. Palmer himself, or if not, by some other member of the Senate. A number of members of the Senate who have been here a number of years, know very well how these things are got before the public, and how, afterwards, they become the foundation of a claim. I have seen several cases where papers have been prepared first for the Senate, and then afterwards, for reports, not made by an officer of the Government, but by a private individual, of which, finally, there is, by some contrivance or other, a deposit made in some of the Departments. Then a member of Congress is importuned to make a call on the Librarian of Congress. The Librarian then informs come here—and formerly it was, of course, printed by the Senate—and the next thing we hear is, that there is a claim for compensation. One case of that sort passed in the last Congress. I can find nothing about it, but I always thought it was exceedingly extraordinary. The Librarian, in the service of the Government ought not to be allowed to press their work upon us, and then obtain compensation for it. Possibly Mr. Palmer's manuscript or report, which came here first in the shape of a memorial, was once deposited before the Librarian of Congress, when I stated that, some years ago, were rather glad to get rid of it. The Library Committee of that day were very much averse to publishing books, or publishing anything, in short, but what might properly be called documents—such as the offer of the Government of the papers or another thing was going on. The committee on the subject; and finally, in 1850, Mr. Foote, of Mississippi, introduced his celebrated resolution upon which the great "battle of the books" took place between Mr. Benton and himself. The Librarian from North Carolina has correctly stated what took place upon that occasion and subsequently.

this claim will be urged in exceles scelerum; at all events, as long as Mr. Palmer here, I have no doubt; and if the gentleman who reported this bill would accept an amendment to pay $1,000, I believe I should vote for it, as an economical disposition of the subject; but if it is claimed as a matter of right, I know too much about it to be able to vote for it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 16, as follows: YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Benjamin, Bingham, Bright, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Colman, Crittenden, Durbin, Fessenden, Ford, Hattan, Prentiss, Rice, Seward, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilkinson—20. NAYS—Messrs. Bangs, Clay, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Grimes, Hammond, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Nicholas, Pearce, Polk, Powell, Saulsbury, Sebastian, Sidel, and Tuley—16.

So the bill was passed.

ELI W. GOFF.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 113) for the relief of Eli W. Goff. Mr. FOOT. I have a charge of that bill, and there are certain important papers that I omitted to bring with me; and I desire that it may lie over for the present.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over.

BLOCKER, DAVIS, AND GURLEY.

The bill (S. No. 114), for the relief of R. F. Blocker, E. J. Gurley, and J. F. Davis, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to require the Secretary of War to pay to R. F. Blocker, E. J. Gurley, and J. F. Davis, the sum of $1,000 in full for their claims against the United States for the professional services in defending Lieutenant Anderson and his detachment, who were arrested and tried for a criminal offense, alleged to have been committed while acting under orders of their commanding officer at Texas in 1854.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us hear the report read.

The Secretary read the report of the Committee on Military Affairs; from which it appears that on the 16th of April, 1854, Captain Richard H. Anderson, United States Army, received written instructions from Brexet Brainerd, General Harney, to proceed to Fort Gibson with a detachment of four non-commissioned officers and twelve privates and arrest Assistant Surgeon Josephus H. Steiner, of the medical corps, United States Army, and convey him to Austin for trial by court-martial, for mutiny and insubordination in killing Major R. A. Arnold, his superior officer. These written instructions stated "that H. P. Brewster, Esq., a gentleman of legal learning, would accompany him, and give such advice as the exigencies of the mission might require." But the report of Mr. Brewster's family so detained him that Captain Anderson went upon his mission without any legal adviser, and arrested Dr. Steiner, while he was chained by the sheriff of the county as his prisoner, under an indictment for the murder of Major Arnold. In returning to Austin with the prisoner in his custody, Captain Anderson yielded to the request of Dr. Steiner to pass Waco on his way, which is not on the most direct road from Fort Gibson to Austin; and while at Waco, Captain Anderson and his detachment were arrested by legal process under a charge of receiving the prisoner (Dr. Steiner) from the custody of the sheriff of Hill county. Captain Anderson was taken before a court of inquiry upon a charge the punishment of which was "hard labor in the penitentiary not less than one year and not more than two years." Under these circumstances, he employed the petitioners to defend him and his men, and advised his superior officer of what had been done. Captain Anderson was held to answer the charges; the men were discharged. The petitioners also defended Captain Anderson in the district court of Hill county, and the trial resulted in his acquittal. The claim for those services is regarded as reasonable and fair by several practicing attorneys, whose letter accompanies the petition.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The facts are all fully set forth in the report which has been read. It is a case that occurred in Texas, and one of some notoriety. This man Steiner committed a homicide on one of his superiors. The only difficulty in the allowance of the claim at the Department was, that the officer in charge diverged somewhat from the usual route directed by the Secretary of War, and therefore he did not consider himself bound to pay the account. It underwent the supervision of the committee on two occasions. The service was performed, and the difficulty was in ascertaining the compensation. The committee thought $1,000 was sufficient, and were unanimous in recommending the payment of that sum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not understand why so many law firms were employed in this matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There were three counsel employed. There was a great deal of litigation, as the Senator would be by reading the testimony. Two of them we understand to be a firm, and there was one other gentleman employed. They claimed a much larger amount—$5,000. We scaled it down to what we thought a reasonable rate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the committee allowed them the usual charges for such services?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The usual charges customarily allowed by the Department in such cases.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

SHELDON McKNIGHT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, next proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 30), for the relief of Sheldon McKnight. The bill was reported by the Postmaster General to pay to Sheldon McKnight, for carrying the United States mail from Cleveland, Ohio, and Detroit, Michigan, to Mackinaw, Sault Ste. Marie, Marquette, Copper Harbor, Eagle Harbor, Eagle River, and Ontonagon, Michigan, the sum of $100 per trip, for the year ending in 1854, and for the year ending in 1855, in all cases where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Postmaster General that the mail was carried by authority of the postmasters or agents of the Department, and without a contract with the Department, at an amount equal per trip to that now allowed by the Department for the same service, deducting therefrom the amount heretofore paid.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I think bills ought to be passed with great caution which mention no other persons than the Senator who is advocating.

I should like to know of the chairman of the committee who reported the bill what is the amount. I think in all such bills the amount ought to be stated in order that Congress may know what they're doing. To say he shall be paid as much as has been allowed to anybody else for doing such a thing, without mentioning any amount at all, is not the way to legislate; and I am a little surprised that a bill in such an unsatisfactory form should be reported by so able a committee as that presided over by my friend from Florida, [Mr. Yulee]. We know the bill is not worth anything.

Mr. YULEE. I am sorry not to deserve in this case the compliment of having given any particular attention to the case. It was reported directly by my friend from Florida. I am not informed sufficiently of the facts to be able to answer the inquiries, as to the relation to it, beyond what the report may show. The Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. Hale], who is a member of the committee, and who is not now in his seat, examined the case and made the report, as I was informed, accompanied by the bill which has just now been read. The report, I presume, contains a statement of the facts. Beyond that, I can say nothing, as I have not particularly given my attention to the case.

Mr. SIMMONS. Perhaps the bill had better be laid by until the Senator from New Hampshire is present.

Mr. RICE. I gave, at the last session, a good deal of attention to this claim. At the present session it was referred to another member of the committee. Mr. McKnight has carried the mail from Detroit through to the head of Lake Superior. I do not know for how long he has carried the distance for the round trip is two thousand miles. He carried the mail at the request and by authority of the postmasters upon the route. I am not enabled to explain to the Senate why a contract was not made by the Department with him for the service; but I know the papers show that he performed the service and that he did it in accordance with the request of the postmasters, and of the special agents of the Department. I know the testimony shows that he received no compensation for that service. I know, furthermore, that when the present Postmaster General came into power, he at once promptly entered into a contract with Mr. McKnight, making it a permanent contract, and allowing him $100 for the round trip.

Now, let me state to the Senate that the round trip embraces two thousand miles for $100—the cheapest service performed on this earth, and the most dangerous service. Not only has he carried the mails there since the completion of the canal at the Sault Ste. Marie, but prior to that he constructed a railroad connecting the lower lakes with Lake Superior, at his own private expense, over which he transported the mails. He and two other gentlemen carried all these mails in his boat and two others, and accommodated a population of fifty thousand people; and no other fifty thousand upon this continent have contributed so much to the resources of the country as the fifty thousand supplied by the mails in the basin of Lake Superior; and no other fifty thousand people have received so small a benefit from the Government as they.

I admit I cannot understand why it was that the powers that were did not make a contract directly with Mr. McKnight; but the evidence before the committee was positive that this gentleman had carried the mails. He carried them upon contracts made with the postmasters upon the route, and upon contracts with the several agents of the Department; but why the contracts were never perfected here, I do not understand. When the present Postmaster General came into office he very promptly stepped forward and said it was a cheap service, and entered into a contract for the future. Now all that Mr. McKnight asks is, that he should be paid the same for carrying the mails under contract with the postmasters that he is allowed by the Postmaster General; and when you take into consideration that these boats, the most magnificent boats that float on our waters, make only twelve or thirteen round trips in the year, and that each round trip is two thousand miles, and the service is done for $100 a trip, let us give the amount now allowed by the Department. They ask no more than the Department admits they are entitled to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This claim is of a similar character to one that was passed at the last Congress. That was the claim of Captain Turner, who I believe carried the mails at the same time and to the same extent.

Mr. RICE. There were three boats engaged. Mr. WADSWORTH. Captain Turner's claim was lowered. I investigated that claim at the time very fairly. It came before the Senate, and the bill then passed. Although I did not investigate this particular claim, I could not fail to see that McKnight stood on precisely the same ground, that it was a cheap service, and that the Government would recognize what they had done, and pay them for it. I believe the Department in that case supposed that the services were rendered at a low and cheap rate, in comparison to what they had contracted for in other cases; and the claim was adjusted and paid. I think, to the amount of some twenty thousand dollars. This, standing on the same ground, it seems to me, ought to fare the same way. That is all I have to say about it. I do not wish to go into particulars, but I think the bill is a fair one.

Mr. YULEE. I find, on looking at the bill, that it contains such a limitation as the Senator from Kentucky requires. Although the amount is not named to which the claim shall be limited, the Postmaster General is limited to the amount which he is now paying for the same service on proof that the service was performed.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I want to say one word. This bill passed the Senate, under the supervision of my friend from Florida, [Mr. Sumner, twice]; and it also passed the House of Representatives last year, but did not get the approval of the President. The next bill to it is similar.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I hope it is the last bill of the sort that will be passed. It is an exceedingly inequitable sort of legislation, and one that I think does very little credit to our prudence or our proceedings in the work of legislation. You do not know, from the face of the bill, what you are voting for; you are voting for an indefinite number of trips, an indefinite service supposed to be performed by a man, and voting that he shall be paid for it according to a certain criterion. You know nothing you do not know the sum of money you are voting away; you do not know what the service performed; you do not know the criterion according to which it is to be calculated. I think the committee ought to take the bill back, and report one which shall enable us to know what we are paying. No excuses, I do not intend to be scrupulous about it.

Mr. RICE. I will state to my honorable friend from Kentucky that there were but three claims of this kind. One has already been paid; the other has passed this body twice and the House once; the third one is now pending. The parties carried these mails in accordance with contracts made by the postmasters upon the routes, and by the special agents of the Department, and the Department has of itself approved of them by stipulating and agreeing upon the rate of service. $100 a trip; but the Department has not the power to make the contract apply to the past, but only to the future. They merely ask to be paid for the past the amount that the Department says it is right should be paid for the future. This claim and one other are all that are for that service. I believe I scrutinize these matters about as closely as almost any one, and I am opposed to claims that are vague and indefinite; but I do think that these are just. I think I may say I know they are just; and when I say to the Senate that the commerce that has passed the South Sea, Marie canal for the last year, by official statements from the State of Michigan, amounted to $100,000,000, and that this is every dollar that has been paid or is to be paid for mail service there, the Senate must be satisfied that it is a very small amount.

Mr. POLK. I should like to know if the chairman of the Post Office Committee or any member of the Senate can state how much this will amount to. I should like to know, as well as the Senator from Kentucky, what it will be.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know the precise amount, but the boat makes about twelve trips a year. It amounts to $1,200 a year.

Mr. POLK. How many years is the claim for?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think four or five years, but I am not sure.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Seven or eight.

Mr. CHANDLER. It may be six or seven or eight years. It is a very small sum.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have not heard this bill read, but I know all about the service. If the bill is framed in such a way as to pay to this claimant the same amount that was paid to the owners of the North Star, by Mr. Turner's bill that passed two years ago, it is right that it should be paid.

Mr. RICE and Mr. BINGHAM. It is just the same.

Mr. BRIGHT. That case was very carefully examined. I was a member of the Post Office Committee myself, and examined it, as I have examined this case. The only difficulty with these parties was, that they had no contract for the service; but they performed the service with the assurance that they should be paid a reasonable compensation. Congress, the session before last, declared what that compensation was in Mr. Turner's case. This bill, I suppose, is framed on the principle of allowing them the same amount. ["Exactly."] It is right, and ought to be paid.

Mr. BINGHAM. The objection which the Senator from Kentucky makes to this bill struck me upon reading it, and I have sent an amendment to the Secretary of the Department, asking him to have reported. The objection I have to the bill as it reads is, that it makes it the duty of the Department to give this party a fixed sum, equal to that now paid for carrying the same mail. We do not know whether the mail, during the time that this person claims to have carried without contract, was carried in the same way as often under the same responsibilities as it is now carried; and I propose to amend the bill so as to leave the discretion to the Postmaster General for the payment of the service that was rendered not under contract, not to exceed in any case the sum now paid, to be diminished if he thinks the service formerly done was not equal to the service now done, and ask the Secretary to read the amendment; and with that amendment I can vote for the bill.

The Secretary read the amendment, which is, from line fifteen to strike out to the end of the bill, in the following words:

"An amount equal per trip to that now allowed by the Department for the same service, deducting therefrom the amount heretofore paid."

And to insert in lieu thereof:

"Such compensation as the said Postmaster General may find to be just and equitable; in no event to exceed that now allowed for the same service, deducting therefrom the amount heretofore paid."

Mr. RICE. I do not understand the amendment. The Postmaster General has stated that $100 a trip was just and equitable.

Mr. BINGHAM. For the former service?

Mr. RICE. Yes, sir; and for the present service it is precisely the same. I will ask my honorable friend from Louisiana, suppose the Postmaster General should take, as a criterion, the amount paid in his State, or the amount paid for ocean service; could he not run up to two or three thousand dollars a trip?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator certainly does not understand the amendment. The bill, as reported, makes it imperative on the Postmaster General to pay as much as he now pays—makes that the criterion.

Mr. RICE. Yes; $100 for two thousand miles of service.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well. Now, it may happen that the Postmaster General may know very good reasons, which we do not know, why there should not be as much allowed. He has got that party now bound down. He is obliged to take the bill at the particular times and periods pointed out, and under the regulations of the Department. Formerly, it was a voluntary service; one at the request of agents, as they might happen to be—

Mr. RICE. Not voluntary, I will say to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BINGHAM. I leave that consideration out. Now, the proposition I have made is this: the Postmaster General shall have some discretion as to how much he shall pay; but he shall not go beyond the present price. That is what my amendment does, and I think the present price is too much, if he does not think it ought to be $100 a trip, he ought to diminish the amount.

Mr. RICE. The past service was the same as the present service precisely. The Postmaster General made a contract to commence the last season at $100 a trip for two thousand miles of the most dangerous service that is performed in the United States, and the cheapest service upon the face of the earth. Why leave this discretionary with him? I do not understand the object of it. Suppose you pay twenty-five dollars a round trip, or fifty dollars, why put these men, after having laid out their pay for so long a time, at the discretion of any one, when they come here and ask Congress to settle the matter? I do not know of any other case in which it is done.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is the commonest thing in the world.

Mr. RICE. Well, I will accept the amendment of the Senator of Louisiana, provided he will leave it at the discretion of the Postmaster General to pay whatever he deems proper, not limiting it at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. Not exceeding the present contract.

Mr. RICE. Why put that in? Let it be with him to decide, and let these gentlemen bring before him evidence of the expense they have incurred. They have been brave men, and have been the very lowest grade, because we, in that country, have been unfortunate in this regard. There is no service in the Senator's country for one fourth the distance where double the amount has not been paid.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETURN OF BILLS TO THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, requesting the Senate to return to the House the bill (No. 246) entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Major John Ripley;" and the bill (No. 247) entitled "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Chaudon."

On motion of Mr. BROWN, the Secretary was directed to return these bills to the House of Representatives.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, on the 27th instant, an act (H. R. No. 235) to establish mail routes in the Territory of Kansas; on the 28th instant, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 21) for the relief of the contractors of the Post Office Department; and on the 29th instant, an act (H. R. No. 216) making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Ponies in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington, for the year ending June 30, 1860.

ARTHUR EDWARDS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The bill No. 221 upon the Calendar is precisely the same as the bill we have just passed for Mr. McKnight, except in the names of the parties and that the mail was carried from Chicago, instead of Cleveland and Detroit. It is a bill of the same character, and the Senate have had a discussion on this, I move that we act on that bill at this time.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I object to taking up anything out of its order.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. (Mr. BAERW in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to take up the bill No. 221.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I object to taking up anything out of its order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The two cases are the same in principle; the report is the same; we have just discussed one, and it will take but a moment to dispose of it.

Mr. FITCH. So is the very next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not care which of them you take first.

Mr. FITCH. There are three.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, I will consent to taking up the next bill.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. In Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 59) for the relief of Arthur Edwards and his associates. It proposes to direct the Postmaster General to audit and settle the account of Arthur Edwards and his associates, for transporting the United States through mail, from the years 1849 and 1853, and intervening years, to and from Cleveland and Detroit, to and from Sandusky and Detroit, and to and from Toledo and Detroit, and to allow and pay them not less than $25 60 for each and every passage of their steamers between those places, during that time, when the mails were on board.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. S. SPENCER AND G. S. HUBBARD.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust now the Senate will suffer that other bill, which is for precisely the same service, supplying the same office, carried by a different route, taken up and acted upon. It is the Senate bill No. 221. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 221) for the relief of A. T. Spencer and Gurdon S. Hubbard was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Postmaster General to pay to A. T. Spencer and Gurdon S. Hubbard, for carrying the United States mail from Chicago, Illinois, to Mackinack, Sault Ste. Marie, Marquette, Copper Harbor, Eagle Harbor, Eagle River, and Ontonagon, Michigan, and La Pointe and Superior, Wisconsin, during the years from 1854 to 1859, inclusive, in all cases where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Postmaster General that the mail was carried by authority of the postmaster in agency of the Post Office Department, and without a contract with the Department, an amount equal per trip to that allowed by the Department, under contract last season, to the owners of the steamers North Star and Illinois, performing similar trips between Detroit, Michigan, and the same ports upon Lake Superior.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire what amount is now paid for the service of these steamers.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is the same as in the other cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, March 30, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Fryer by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. STOCKTON.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

NEW YORK LETTER CARRIERS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from Acting Postmaster General King, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House, a statement prepared in the Auditor's office, showing the number of persons employed in delivering and collecting letters in the city of New York in connection with the post office in that city, and the amount paid to each, for the year ending June 30, 1859; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF CHARLES PORTERFIELD.

The SPEAKER stated the first business in order to be the question on the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on Friday last.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That bill was before the House on Friday last, and was then discussed in a hasty manner; as I have, however, as I think necessary, as it is a matter of some rather than of substance that we are asking at the hands of the House. The bill did not pass then for the want of a quorum. Believing that no further discussion is necessary, I move the previous question.

Mr. NOELL. The previous question was ordered on this bill last Friday.

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir; and the question is now on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF MAJOR JOHN RIPLEY.

The SPEAKER announced as the next business in order, the question on ordering a bill (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of the heirs of Major John Ripley, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on Friday last, to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF FRANCIS CHAUDONET.

The SPEAKER stated as the next business in order, the question on ordering a bill (H. R. No. 247) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Chaudonet, reported on Friday last from the Committee of the Whole House, to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JANE B. EVANS.

The next business in order was the question on ordering to be engrossed and read a third time a bill (H. R. No. 471) for the relief of Jane B. Evans, reported on Friday last from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. WHITELEY. That bill was reported from the Committee on Patents unanimously. It was in charge of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. BURNHAM], who is not now in his seat.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What bill is that?

Mr. WHITELEY. The bill for the relief of Jane B. Evans.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Has it been reported to the House?

The SPEAKER. It was reported to the House last Friday.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I shall object to the passage of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the engrossment of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The previous question, I believe, has not been demanded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITELEY. I then call the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the previous question will not be acceded. I am sure, if the House understood the bill, they would not pass it.

Mr. WHITELEY. I think they would pass it. No debate, however, is in order.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to know how this bill came before the House.

Mr. WHITELEY. It was reported from the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PHELPS. Then it has never been before the Committee of the Whole House?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. PHELPS. Unless it can be sent to a Committee of the Whole House, I shall move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. WHITELEY. I call for the reading of the report.

A MEMBER. No debate is in order. I object.

Mr. PHELPS. I certainly think this bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole House. If it is allowed to go there, I will not make any motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think the gentleman who has charge of the bill ought to send it there.

Mr. TAPPAN. I hope not. This is a bill which ought to pass. I ask that the previous question may be acceded, and the bill be passed.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. FLORENCE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. THOMAS, and KELLOGG of Illinois, appointed.

Mr. PHELPS. If the gentleman who has charge of this bill is willing that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, I will withdraw my motion to lay on the table.

Mr. WHITELEY. Very well; let it go there.

Mr. PHELPS. I withdraw the motion.

The bill was then referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

Mr. FENTON. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 13) to provide for the settlement of the claims of the officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army, and of the widows and children of those who died in the service, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The motion was entered.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. GROW. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 23, to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was entered.

JOHN V. DOBNEY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 286) for the relief of John V. Dobney, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

HALL NELSON.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Hall Nelson; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH C. G. KENNEDY.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Joseph C. G. Kennedy; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY MILLER & CO.

Mr. TAPPAN, from the same committee, made an adverse report in the case of Henry Miller & Co.; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

HIRAM HUMPHREYS.

Mr. TAPPAN, from the same committee, also made an adverse report in the case of Hiram Humphreys; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

OUADALUPE ESTUDILLO DE ARGUELLO.

Mr. HUTCHINS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back Senate bill (No. 117) for the relief of Guadalupe Estudillo de Arguello, widow of Santiago E. Arguello, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I have a small bill here, which I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report to the House; but I am afraid there will be some who will object that it is not strictly in order upon this day. It is a public measure.

Objection was made.

HOCKADAY & LEGGETT.

Mr. ALLEY, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill for the relief of Hockaday & Leggett; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL S. GREEN.

Mr. ALLEY, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Samuel S. Green; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SPENCER AND HERBARD.

Mr. HELMICK, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of A. T. Spencer and Gordon S. Hubbard; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROBERT DOUGLASS.

Mr. HELMICK, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Robert Douglass, survivor of Douglass & Beman; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE F. MEANS.

Mr. HELMICK, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of George F. Means; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL H. WOODSON.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I am directed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to report a bill for the relief of Samuel H. Woodson.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I ask that the bill be read through. It occupies but three lines. If I get the consent of the House, I will move that it be put on its passage.

The bill was read through. It authorizes the Postmaster General to reopen and readjust the accounts of Samuel H. Woodson, late mail contractor on route No. 4965.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. The bill makes no appropriation. Colonel Woodson's accounts were settled under a late Postmaster General, and the present Postmaster General holds that under the law he has no right to look into the accounts. Mr. Woodson is charged with losing two sacks of public documents, and he is able at this time to explain their loss satisfactorily.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is there any report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER. There is not.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I have a written report, but I left it upon my table at my room.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does not the bill provide for the payment of some money to Colonel Woodson?

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. If the gentleman will listen for a moment, I will explain the whole matter. Colonel Woodson was a mail contractor under the late Postmaster General. He was reported by some postmaster out West for having lost two sacks of public documents belonging to the Delegate from Utah. Before he had an opportunity to explain the loss, his accounts were settled. The late Postmaster General having gone out of office, the present Postmaster General says that, under the law, he cannot reopen Colonel Woodson's accounts. Colonel Woodson is now prepared to make an explanation of the loss of these books.

The bill does not make an appropriation, but merely authorizes the Postmaster General to hear the explanation that Colonel Woodson has to make.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does it not authorize the payment of money?

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. Two thousand dollars of Colonel Woodson's pay was withheld as a stoppage, as it is called, for the loss of these two sacks of public documents. He neglected, during the time of the late Postmaster General, to make his excuse; but he is ready to make it at this time. But the present Postmaster General tells us that the law requires him to leave untouched the accounts adjusted and settled under his predecessors. He is willing to hear what excuse Colonel Woodson has to make, but he cannot do so under the law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Was not this claim rejected by the last House of Representatives?

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. No, sir.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am under the impression that this bill was defeated at the last session.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, at the last session, unanimously authorized me to report a bill for the relief of Samuel H. Woodson. I presented the bill to the House; but it was not passed, because, being taken up on objection day, the single objection of a gentleman from Pennsylvania prevented its passage. I did not get the floor afterwards during that session.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire the gentleman from Missouri to tell the House whether he has any statement from the Post Office Department showing that this House ought to consider and pass this bill?

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I have a verbal statement from the clerk who acted upon the accounts of Colonel Woodson.

Mr. TAPPAN. As this bill is likely to lead to discussion, I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I will not lead to discussion. I will only say one word in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky. The officer who informed upon Colonel Woodson's account has informed me, in conversation, that if he had understood the case at the time as he now understands it, he would not have acted as he did. It is a manifestly just bill, and ought to pass. I believe I could get a letter from that officer in five minutes.

Mr. HATTON. The statement of the gentleman from Missouri is amply sufficient and satisfactory.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Missouri will get a report from the Post Office Department on the subject, withdrawing the bill for the time for that purpose, I will make no objection to the bill. It seems to me that a bill directing the Post Office Department to reopen and readjust accounts like this one of Colonel Woodson, carries with it an implied direction to the Department that the account shall be readjusted, upon the principles set up by the party himself. There is no report, and no communication from the Department on the subject. I am not familiar enough with the laws regulating the Post Office Department, and the conduct of mail carriers, to say upon what law or laws the Postmaster General directs $2,000 for the loss of two bags of public documents. I cannot inform the House why he deducts $1,000 a bag.

Mr. TAPPAN. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order of business, and the question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BURNETT. I move to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

HARVEY ALLEN.

Mr. ADAMS, of Kentucky, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill for the relief of Harvey Allen, of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

METROPOLITAN GAS LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill for the incorporation of the Metropolitan Gas Light Company.

Mr. BARR. That is not a private bill, and I object.

GROUCH FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. CARTER, from the same committee, also reported a bill directing the conveyance of a lot of ground for the use of public schools in the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EAST WASHINGTON LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CARTER, from the same committee, also reported a bill to incorporate the East Washington Library Association.

Mr. ASHMORE. These are not private bills, and I object to them.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Speaker decide that this is not a private bill?

The SPEAKER. He does not. If it refers to a private corporation, it is a private bill.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

METROPOLITAN GAS LIGHT COMPANY—AGAIN.

Mr. CARTER. I now report the bill for incorporating the Metropolitan Gas Light Company in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FLORENCE. That is a public bill, though the corporation may, in the estimation of the Speaker, be private; and I have no doubt it is, judging from the price they charge for gas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is a private bill.

The bill was then read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GERMAN BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

Mr. EDGERTON. I am instructed, by the Committee for the District of Columbia to report a bill extending the charter incorporating the German Benevolent Society of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, approved July 27, 1842; and to ask that the same be put upon the calendar.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDGERTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN RIPLEY'S HEIRS.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to have entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the several bills for the relief of the heirs of Major John Ripley, and of the legal representatives of Francis Chaudon, were passed this morning.

The motion was entered.

SHREVE & CARTER.

Mr. BARRETT. I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the adverse report of the Committee on the Claims, upon the petition of Lydia R. Shreve and Walker R. Carter, administrators of Henry M. Shreve, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. In reference to these adverse reports of the Court of Claims, I would like to know what the House will do upon the decision of the Court of Claims accompanies the case.

The SPEAKER. All the papers in the case go with the reference.

Mr. HOUSTON. I find occasionally upon the Calendar claims reported favorably by the committee, which have been adversely reported upon by the Court of Claims, while only the action of the committee is cited on the Calendar; so that those of us who do not act specially upon the case in the committee, are not advised of all the facts.

Therefore, I desire that the rendition of the court shall follow the case, so that the whole action upon it may go with it to the committee.

Mr. FLORENCE. There are often errors in the Calendar. It often happens that there is equity in a claim, and the court so report, and their report comes before an adverse report, while it is in no way an adverse report. Therefore, it is proper that all the papers coming from the court should follow the case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Alabama that he supposes that all the papers in the case should be printed.

ROSS WILKINS AND OTHERS.

Mr. HICKMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, an act (S. No. 66) to authorize and direct the settlement of the accounts of Ross Wilkins, James Witherell, and Solomon Sibley; which was laid on the table.

SIEUR DE BONNE AND OTHERS.

Mr. HICKMAN, from the same committee, also reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, an act (S. No. 92) authorizing the court to adjudicate the claim of the legal representatives of James de Bonne and Sieur de Chavaler de Repentigny to certain lands at Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH M. COCKE.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, an act (S. No. 81) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Cocke, widow of James H. Cocke, late marshal of the district of Texas.

The bill which was read, after reciting that the United States, on the 29th of April, 1857, recovered judgment against Elizabeth M. Cocke, late marshal, of James H. Cocke, late marshal, and his surties, before the district court for the eastern district of Texas, for the sum of $2,041 93, and it being made to appear that it would be just and equitable that the collection of the judgment should not at this time be enforced, directs that no execution be issued for the amount of the principal and interest due on said judgment shall be issued, and that the same be suspended until sufficient time be allowed under the laws and according to the usual form of legal proceedings in Texas for the administratrix to prosecute to a final judgment a suit against James H. Cocke, deputy marshal of James H. Cocke, who received and embezzled the money for which said judgment in favor of the United States vs. Elizabeth M. Cocke, administratrix, was rendered.

The following is the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to stay the issuance of execution on said judgment for such time as in his opinion will enable said administratrix to prosecute to final judgment a suit against James H. Cocke, deputy marshal of James H. Cocke, who received and embezzled the money for which said judgment in favor of the United States vs. Elizabeth M. Cocke, administratrix, was rendered; provided, however, That before such stay of execution shall be granted, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be shown thereon the records of the court in which said judgment was rendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PARROTTE. I see that the bill (H. R. No. 260) to enable the trustees of the Blue Mound College to preempt a certain quarter section of land, and for other purposes, which was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, is entered on the Calendar as having been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I ask that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

It was so ordered.

UNITED STATES AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

Mr. BURNETT. I call up the bill (H. R. No. 213) to incorporate the United States Agricultural Society. It was reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia, and has been read three times.

The bill was taken up.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to say to the House that this bill is a simple act of incorporation. When I reported it back from the Committee for the District of Columbia, some gentlemen desired time to examine it. It was reported back on the 7th of this month, and has been printed. I merely confer on this agricultural society the ordinary powers of a corporation within and for the District of Columbia. It gives to Congress the power to alter, amend, or change the act of incorporation at any time. It accedes to me that there can be no objection to the passage of the bill. I therefore move the previous question on its passage.

Mr. FLORENCE. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then how did the gentleman from Kentucky get the floor?

The SPEAKER. He calls up a bill which he reported.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it a private bill?

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then I would like to know how the gentleman gets an opportunity to call it up? I do not know that I will object if it does not lead to debate. I have examined the act, and am ready to vote for it.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question.

Mr. BURNETT. I will answer any question the gentleman may desire to propound.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman what reason there is for the organization of a society of this character in the District of Columbia? Will it carry on the business of agriculture here?

Mr. BURNETT. It would require some time to answer that question, if I were to cover the whole ground. It does seem to me that the necessity for agricultural societies in every portion of the country will be apparent to every sensible man who thinks of it for a moment.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill was passed.

Mr. BURNETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. R. CRUMP.

Mr. HUTCHINS, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of J. R. Crump; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT JAMES TAYLOR'S HEIRS.

Mr. DUELL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant James Taylor, of the Virginia State line; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE G. DUNHAM.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of George G. Dunham; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JULIUS MARTIN.

Mr. BUFFINTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Julius Martin; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. AGATHA O'BRIEN.

Mr. BUFFINTON, from the same committee, also reported a bill, with a recommendation that it do pass, a bill (S. No. 269) for the relief of Mrs. Agatha O'Brien, widow of Brevet Major J. P. J. O'Brien, late of the United States Army; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

HORSES LOST IN MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. McRAE, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the bill to provide for the payment for horses lost in the military service of the United States; which was laid on the table.

SAMUEL H. ELLIOTT.

Mr. WINSLOW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, made an adverse report on the memorial of Samuel H. Elliott; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

JOSHUA DUELL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back the memorial of Joshua Duell, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

It was so ordered.

WOOD, KIRKLAND, AND OTHERS.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, made a report on the memorial of Samuel S. Wood, William B. Kirkland, and others; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to say that I regret very much that that report has been made. I supposed that it would not be acted upon until a regular meeting of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I understand that the meeting this morning was very thinly attended. I had no idea, as one member of the committee, that the subject would be acted on to-day; and my object now is to state to the House that I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made the report, particularly as some of us who felt an interest in it did not happen to be present at the meeting of the committee when it was authorized.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. I regret that the gentleman from Mississippi was not present at the meeting of the committee. This subject has been frequently under discussion in the committee, and they authorized me this morning, if I could do so before the next meeting of the committee, to make the report; and, acting under the authority of the committee, I have made the report.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I do not deny the authority of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make the report. I merely desire to say that I regret that the report has been made under the circumstances.

BEDA HAYES.

Mr. POTTER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Beda Hayes; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. POTTER, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions, and they were referred as indicated below:

The petition of citizens of the State of Kentucky, praying for the allowance of bounty land to Wendell Trout—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The petitions of the heirs of William Emmons; of the heirs of Captain Richard Jones; and of Jimena Christian—to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

ABNER MERRILL.

Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, an act (S. No. 96) for the relief of Abner Merrill; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARTHA SANDERSON.

Mr. MARTIN, of Ohio, from the same committee, reported a bill granting an invalid pension to Martha Sanderson; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JANE YATES.

Mr. MARTIN, of Ohio, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Jane Yates; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES C. MYERS.

Mr. BRADSON, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to James C. Myers; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RICHARD M. HADEN.

Mr. BRADSON, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Richard M. Haden; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADRIAN RICH AND JOHN T. SMITH.

Mr. BRADSON, from the same committee, (in behalf of Mr. SICKLES,) also reported a bill granting a pension to Adrian Rich, and a bill granting a pension to John T. Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed.

JOHN JACKSON.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a bill (H. R. No. 70) granting a pension to John Jackson, an invalid soldier; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. ROGERS.

Mr. STOKES, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to William H. Rogers; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AARON QUIGLEY.

Mr. STOKES, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Aaron Quigley, an invalid seaman; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

KATHERINE K. RUSSELL.

Mr. STOKES, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Katherine K. Russell; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY F. PARKER.

Mr. FOSTER, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Mary F. Parker; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES LEE.

Mr. FOSTER, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Charles Lee; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JONATHAN W. SWIFT.

Mr. FOSTER, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Jonathan W. Swift, of the United States Navy, which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES GOODSPEED.

Mr. FOSTER, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Charles Goodspeed, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EFFISIA C. DEMAY.

Mr. FOSTER, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Effisia C. Demay, widow of Charles F. V. Demay; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET WHITEHEAD.

Mr. FOSTER, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Margaret Whitehead; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RUFUS CALL, JR.

Mr. FOSTER, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Rufus Call, jr., a soldier in the war with Great Britain; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES DENNIS AND OTHERS.

Mr. FOSTER, from the same committee, also made address reports in the case of James Dennis, Joseph Perkins, Ware T. Courd, Duval, Jacob W. Moore, and Joseph Brewer; which was read on the table, and ordered to be printed.

GREGORY PATTI.

Mr. FLORENCE, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to Gregory Patti; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HESTER S. BARTON.

Mr. FLORENCE, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Hester Sergeant Barton; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NAVAL ASYLUM BENEFICIARIES.

Mr. FLORENCE, from the same committee, also reported back a memorial of the beneficiaries of the United States Naval Asylum, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD RUMMEY.

Mr. STORES, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Edward Rummev; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. FERGUSON SMITH.

Mr. LEACH, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Mrs. Ferguson Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY BULLOCK.

Mr. LEACH, of North Carolina, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of Mary Bullock; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE WALKER'S CHILDREN.

Mr. LEACH, of North Carolina, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of the surviving children of George Walker, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LOUISIANA LAND CLAIM.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made an adverse report in the case of the heirs of Don Carlos de Villamont, for confirmation of certain land claims in the State of Louisiana; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. JANE YENABLE.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, made an adverse report on the memorial of the widows of the Peninsular Legislature, in the case of Mrs. Jane Yenable, which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

RETURNS OF UNDELIVERED LETTERS.

Mr. COLFAX. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 302) in relation to the return of undelivered letters in the post office was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. This bill has already been considered in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and they have instructed me to ask that the bill may be brought before the House and be passed. The bill was drawn up by Judge Coleman, Postmaster General. The Post Office Department have no objection to its passage, and I hope there will be no objection here to its being passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion to commit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. COLFAX. I will say a few words upon the subject of this bill. The number of dead letters is constantly increasing, and now amounts to two million five hundred thousand a year. It has become a great burden upon the Post Office Department, and a great expense to the Government.

This bill provides that if the writer of the letter shall indorse on the back of it a direction that it shall be returned to him if undelivered, instead of incurring the expense of advertising and of sending it to the dead letter office to be destroyed, it shall, after remaining unclaimed for thirty days, be returned to the person who wrote it.

Mr. MILES. It is necessary that the writer of the letter should indorse upon it the direction that it shall be returned.

Mr. COLFAX. That is a provision made in this bill.

Mr. MILES. If that is to be done, it seems to me that this bill will have very little value in it. Of course very few persons will take the trouble of doing that.

Mr. COLFAX. It could not be told who wrote the letter, unless his name was indorsed upon it.

Mr. MILES. It seems to me that there would be very few who would give such directions.

Mr. COLFAX. There are very many persons who would give such a direction. For instance, John Smith & Co. write to a man to pay their taxes; the man is dead, or has gone away. They do not see the paper in which the letter is advertised; and the letter goes to the dead letter office, and is destroyed. This bill would permit John Smith & Co. to indorse on the letter the direction under which, after having remained unclaimed for thirty days, it would be returned to them, instead of going to the dead letter office. Another instance: a wife writes to a husband, who is missing in Pike's Peak or California, that he must hasten his return, to save his property from sacrifice, or to see a child, rapidly declining. She directs it to the post office who instructed her to address him at; but when it arrives, he may be prospecting hundreds of miles off, with no intention of returning there till the close of the season. The return of her letter to her, after twenty or thirty days' waiting, and not called for, lets her know that he has not received her notice, and warns her that she must write to him elsewhere. In this way, and many others that might be named, it will tend to increase the number of letters sent through the mails.

On all the letters advertised at the various post offices of the country, the Government has now to pay one cent for advertising, which is a dead loss to it on those that finally become dead letters. They pour into the dead letter office here by the millions, are there examined by clerks, and all letters which do not contain valuables are destroyed. They may contain information of the greatest interest, or business of the greatest importance, or may be misdirected to Washington, Ia., (Iowa), when Washington, Ind., (Indiana), is intended, and there is no remedy.

Under this bill, all unclaimed letters indorsed as required will neither be advertised nor sent to the dead letter office; but will be returned to the writers, saving expense to the Government, inducing other letters to be written in their stead, and saving in rendering the Post Office Department more of a convenience to the public—the great object which the Post Office Committee desire to attain.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. The evil is one which has been and is fast by commercial communities, and I am glad that this bill has been brought forward for its correction. It is the practice, in the city of New York and elsewhere, at this time, to give the directions which have been indicated, and I understand it is now the design to give out notices the sanction of law.

Mr. COLFAX. I will state that the bill was drawn up by Senator COLLAMER, a former Postmaster General. It has likewise received the unanimous approbation of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of this House, as well as of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the Senate. I consulted the officers of the Post Office Department about it this morning, and I am fully satisfied that it ought to pass.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. Does it apply to dead letters alone?

Mr. COLFAX. It is to prevent letters becoming dead letters; and provides for sending them back to the writers after a certain time.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. The bill does not go as far, I think, as it ought to be made to go.

Mr. COLFAX. The Post Office Department have informed us that they would, during this session, lay before the House, through the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, other reforms for lessening the number of dead letters.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I understand that only the letters which contain money and other valuables are now returned to the writers. It seems to me that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads might, with great advantage to the revenues of the Department, provide for the return of all letters to the writers, with the postage to be paid by them.

Mr. COLFAX. It would require a large addition to the staff of the office to do that. That, however, can be considered hereafter.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. COLFAX. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the bill was passed.

Mr. COLFAX passed to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and it was moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES E. ANDERSON.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Charles E. Anderson; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SOLOMON WHIPPLE.

Mr. NIBLACK, from the Committee on Patents, made an adverse report in the case of Solomon Whipple, of Albany, New York, which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

MARIA BUNNELL.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to move that this committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Maria Bunnell, widow of Isaiah Bunnell, and that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

EXCUSED FROM SERVING ON A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Speaker, I find by the Globe that I am appointed as one of the members of the committee, raised under the resolution

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 92.

of my colleague, [Mr. BARN], to inquire in reference to the contract for labor in the public store No. 12 Broad street, New York. I ask that I may be excused from service on that committee.

Mr. COWLING was excused; and the Speaker appointed Mr. TAPPAN to fill the vacancy.

The SPEAKER also appointed Mr. CHARLES as a member of the tobacco-trade committee, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. THOMAS; and Mr. READAN, in place of Mr. BENHAM, excused from service on the committee appointed upon resolution of the House, adopted on motion of Mr. HOARD.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next. There are a large number of bills which gentlemen wish to have enrolled; if the House adjourns over, they will be enrolled; if not, then they will not be enrolled; for there will not be the time to do so.

Mr. TAPPAN. If the House adjourn over until Monday, I hope that it will be with the understanding that hereafter there shall be no adjournment over in the weeks when Friday and Saturday are objection days in the Committee of the Whole House. When we have objection days in the Committee of the Whole House, I hope there will be no adjournment over, but that we will occupy them with the consideration of the business upon the Private Calendar. [Cries of "That is right!"] If that be the understanding, I do not object to the adjournment over.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. HICKET, their Chief Clerk, notifying the House that that body had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following title, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 303) supplemental to the act entitled "An act to authorize protection to be given to citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of copper," approved August 16, 1856.

An act (No. 46) to prevent desertion and to facilitate enlistment of soldiers in the Army of the United States;

An act (No. 42) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Mark Elkins; and
A resolution (No. 2) removing the restrictions upon a certain grant of five sections of land to the State of Iowa.

And also notifying the House that the Senate had ordered the printing of the following documents:

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to marine hospitals in the United States;
Memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi for land to aid in the construction of the Gulf and Ship Island railroad;

Memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi, relative to the graduation of lands along the Mobile and Ohio railroad and the Southern railroad; and Memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi, for a navy-yard at the Bay of Biloxi.

HEIRS OF MAJOR JOHN RILEY, ETC.

Mr. BURNETT. I move that a message be sent to the Senate asking for the return to this House of the two bills for the relief of the heirs of Major John Riley and of the legal representatives of Francis Clendenen. It will be recollected that I moved this morning to reconsider the votes by which they were passed, and they ought to be here.

The motion was agreed to; and the bills were subsequently returned from the Senate.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. TAPPAN. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House. The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. (Mr. WINTLOW in the chair,) and proceeded to take up the bills and reports of a private nature in their regular order on the Calendar.

DAVID MYERLE.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 81) upon the petition of said Myerle.

Mr. MAYNARD. That case of David Myerle has been referred to the Committee of Claims, and that committee has either made a report or directed a report to be made.

Mr. TAPPAN. That case has been considered at the present session by the Committee of Claims, and I move that the papers here be referred to that committee.

Mr. FLORENCE. This case illustrates what I said this morning, that cases appear here as adversely reported on by the Court of Claims when there has been no such report. The court said that this was a case of great equity; but that it was not a case for their consideration, and they referred it to the House. It had better go to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BURNETT. I move that the committee concur in the report of the Court of Claims.

Mr. TAPPAN. There is no adverse report from the Court of Claims in the case of Daniel Myerle. The question before them was a question of law; and they turned it over to Congress as one having equity in it. It has been before the Committee of Claims during the present session, and fully considered. A bill was introduced for the relief of Mr. Myerle, accompanied with a report.

FLORENCE. With the consent of the gentleman from New Hampshire, I desire to say that the committee concurred in the report of the Court of Claims, declaring that there is equity in this case, which involves the necessity of referring it to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. TAPPAN. I move that the case be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BURNETT. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. TAPPAN. It is a long report.

Mr. BURNETT. Gentlemen say this case has equity in it. I understand that the object of establishing the Court of Claims was to enable claimants to go before the court, present their case with the testimony to sustain it, and, if allowed by the court, to come here and have the House allow them, without investigation or debate. The same rule ought to apply to cases where the report is adverse. Now, this case has been before the Court of Claims. It has been acted upon by that court; they have had the question under consideration; they have taken cognizance of it; have investigated it, and have returned it here with an adverse report.

Mr. TAPPAN. That is not so.

Mr. BURNETT. They refused to allow the claim. The case could not have got here unless they refused to allow the claim. Now, I appeal to gentlemen here upon every side, and ask them, how are we to dispose of these cases? We never can do it if we refer them to the committee of this House after they have been acted upon by the court, and if we reverse the decisions of the court.

Mr. TAPPAN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FLORENCE. This case is not properly upon the Calendar.

Mr. TAPPAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has yielded to me.

Mr. FLORENCE. I think I can relieve the committee of the difficulties.

Mr. BURNETT. I will hear the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. TAPPAN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in reference to the fact that the Court of Claims has decided this case upon the merits. They decided the case on a technical objection; but the court itself makes a strong appeal to Congress to consider the equity of the claim. There is no adverse report from that court. The papers should go to the Committee of Claims, to be considered with the other papers before them. And I ask confirmation of what I have said, that the last clause of the report be read to this House.

Mr. BURNETT. I say to the gentleman now that I have no disposition to interfere with parties who have just claims by consuming the time of this House; but I tell him that he cannot act upon this case without that entire report being read. I am willing to let the case go over to the committee gentlemen may examine it, to see whether it is proper that it should be referred to the Committee of Claims; but I am not willing that it shall go by just upon the motion the gentleman has made.

Mr. FLORENCE. In the last Congress, the report of the Court of Claims in this case was referred to the Committee of Claims, and I question whether it is now properly upon the Calendar—certainly not properly here in the phraseology in which it appears.

Mr. BURNETT. I do not desire to consume the time of the House; but being satisfied that this reference ought not to be made at this time, I trust gentlemen will allow it to pass over on the Calendar.

Mr. TAPPAN. The case has already this session been before the Committee of Claims, a long report made in favor of granting relief, and a bill introduced for its relief.

Mr. FLORENCE. And the history of this case proves the correctness of the conclusion of the Court of Claims. It has been passed by one or other branch of Congress some four or five different times. It has been before Congress twelve or fifteen years; but, by some unfortunate circumstances, justice has not been done.

Mr. TAPPAN. I am perfectly willing to have this case disposed of, as it properly should be; but I appeal to the gentleman, if the most proper way to dispose of it would not be to let it go to the Committee of Claims, which has made a report in the case?

Mr. BURNETT. I have always doubted, and now doubt, whether this House, under the act organizing the Court of Claims, has the power to refer these cases to the committees of the House. But leaving that out of view, here is a case which, it is conceded, has been before that court, and in which the party could not obtain judgment there. Under the act organizing the court, the usual and ordinary motion is, that Congress concur in the action of the court; and yet gentlemen say we ought to refer this case to the Committee of Claims. In answer, I say I do not want to do the party justice, and that I am willing to let it pass over, in order that it may be investigated.

Mr. TAPPAN. What would the effect be?

Mr. BURNETT. It would leave the case on the Calendar, to be considered when reached again.

Mr. FLORENCE. The case is referred to the Committee of Claims. They have already had the case before them, and have made a favorable report upon it. And indeed the case has received a favorable consideration and report in every Congress since it has been here, by either a committee of the Senate or of the House.

Now, sir, how much better would it be to refer the report of the Court of Claims to the Committee of Claims? If it influence their judgment adversely to this claim, I suppose that will attain the purpose of the gentleman from Kentucky. I do not know his views in relation to this case. I know that when I was on the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the Thirty-Second Congress, I investigated the case thoroughly, and the committee reported favorably upon it. I recollect that the case was under very close discussion in the House, and that the bill was passed on a vote of yeas and nays. I am well acquainted with the case. I have watched the history of it. The Committee on Naval Affairs in the last Congress made a favorable report upon it.

The fact is that the committees of the last Congress reported favorably upon it; and that, too, since the action of the Court of Claims.

I cannot now imagine what objection the gentleman can have to having this case referred to the Court of Claims—if you choose to style it so—referred to the Committee of Claims, because, if he wants the judgment of the committee influenced adversely to this claim, he can do so in no better way than I propose to do.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will reflect for one moment, he will find that the easiest mode to get rid of this question is to pursue the course which I suggest. There is already on the Private Calendar a bill reported for the benefit of David Myerle. Let the case go over. I am willing to agree to that, and proposed it at the start.

Mr. TAPPAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow the last clause of the report to be read?

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection to that. The Clerk read the clause. The Court of Claims say in it that it is difficult to estimate, with accuracy, what would be an equitable sum to be paid under the circumstances; but that if Congress should be of opinion that justice required the claimant to be indemnified to that extent, it was for Congress to determine the amount.

Mr. TAPPAN. It appears, as I stated, that there is, in fact, no adverse report from the Court of Claims. But rather than have time consumed by the reading of this report, I have no objection that the matter shall lie over for the present.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have no objection to the reference. How is the investigation of the question to be made by Congress? On that report? Certainly not; but by a standing committee of the House.

Mr. WALTON. The committee has already reported it.

Mr. FLORENCE. I know it has. The bill was passed over informally.

ADVERSE REPORTS FROM THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. TAPPAN. I am anxious to dispose of all the cases reported adversely from the Court of Claims; and I propose to move that all of them shall be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that the reports be concurred in, except in those cases where gentlemen may see fit to make a different motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand the gentleman from New Hampshire to propose to let all the adverse reports from the Court of Claims go to the House with a recommendation that the adverse reports be concurred in.

Mr. TAPPAN. Yes; excepting in those cases where any gentleman makes a different motion, and can give any good reason why the reports should not be concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. In those cases where gentlemen do not wish the adverse reports concurred in, what do they propose to do? Leave them on the Calendar?

Mr. TAPPAN. I am perfectly willing to leave that matter to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing to have all these cases reported to the House with a recommendation that the reports of the Court of Claims be concurred in; but I am unwilling to have any of these adversely-reported cases brought into the House, and the report non-concurred in. If a case is to be reported on favorably, I want to have an investigation of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire is, that all the cases reported adversely by the Court of Claims be reported to the House with a recommendation that the House concur in the reports.

Mr. TAPPAN. That motion does not, of course, include the first case on the Calendar—David Myerle—which lies over.

Mr. BURNETT. If there be any gentleman who does not wish the House to concur in the report of the Court of Claims in any particular case, he may move to except it from this general motion.

There being no objection to Mr. TAPPAN's proposition, the following cases on the Calendar were laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that the reports of the Court of Claims be concurred in:

An adverse report upon the petition of Joseph Stokely and others, heirs of Nchemiah Stokely; An adverse report upon the petition of Jeremiah M. Williams and others, heirs of Thomas Williams;

ANSON DART.

A bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Anson Dart.

The bill directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Anson Dart, as superintendent of Indian affairs in the Territory of Oregon, the sum of $4,000 per annum, deducting therefrom $2,500 per annum already received, for the time he served as such superintendent, being from July 1, 1850, to May 4, 1853; and also to settle with him upon principles of equity and justice, so as to indemnify him for all moneys paid and expenses incurred by him for the use and benefit of the Government, for the services of an extra assistant clerk six months, and for the board of the Indian interpreter employed by him during his term of office as superintendent.

The report was read. It appears therefrom that Anson Dart asks provision for the payment of moneys due him for services rendered and expenses incurred while in the discharge of his duties connected with the Indian superintendency in the country now including the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, and presents the following specification of his claims: 1. He asks to be allowed the difference between his salary, as received by him as superintendent as aforesaid, and the salary established during his term of office for the superintendent of Indian affairs in California. 2. To be allowed the amount paid by him for an assistant clerk, for six months' service, to aid him in his negotiation of Indian treaties. 3. To be allowed for board of interpreters and of clerks employed by him in his official business. 4. For his traveling expenses in returning to Washington to settle his accounts after his office had terminated. 5. For interest on moneys paid by him for the use of the Government from time of payment. In support of his petition and of his several claims, the facts were established that he was appointed superintendent in June, 1850, and served as such from July 1, 1850, until May 4, 1853, and during that period had under his superintendency the Indian affairs in all the country now included in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington, as persons could not be obtained. This allowance was approved by the same authority to which I have already referred—that of Secretary Thompson.

Now, sir, I will take up but little more of the time of the committee upon this claim, for I know that members are impatient in the consideration of these private claims. I have, however, passed this claim may be of little importance in the view of the House, it is important to the claimant; it is his all. From the time he left Oregon he has been attempting to get this tardy justice done him by this Government. He has had the reports of five committees in this House, and they have passed the House for his relief, and they have passed the Senate; but it has been impossible to get the action of both Houses in the same session. There is no much difficulty in the manner of transacting our business, that it is almost impossible to obtain, not merely for the claims without merit, but to obtain for the honest claims, the necessary action of both branches in the same Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this bill, which has been before the House now for some four weeks, may receive the action of the House, and may go to the Senate, that the petitioner may receive that justice which has heretofore been denied him, merely for want of necessary attention. It was fully proved that he was a faithful officer; that he managed the affairs of the agency with great economy, that he saved the expenditures of his agency, including authorized presents and supplies to the Indians, did not exceed $24,000 a year; that peace was preserved during his entire administration between the Indian tribes, and between them and the white population around them; that he negotiated thirty Indian treaties; and was the disbursing agent for six Indian agencies, and that all the money placed at his disposal had been fully accounted for. Surely, then, it is not too much to ask, in these days of deliberation and discussion of duty, that a faithful public officer should receive at least justice in his application to this House.

Mr. BURNETT. I have examined this case carefully and attentively. I did it at the instance of the claimant. I was exceedingly anxious to do him justice. I tried to do it, but I could not. Justice may have a claim against this Government; but I must confess, I arrived at a different conclusion from the gentleman who has reported this bill.

What are the facts? In 1846 the Territory of Oregon was organized. By a law then in force, the Governor of that Territory was ex officio the superintendent of Indian affairs. He discharged the duties of both offices up to the time of the establishment of the office of superintendent of Indian affairs for the Territories of Oregon and Washington. That is a matter of fact.

This is no new claim before Congress; it is one that has been pending for years; and, in my judgment, it has neither law nor justice in it. The facts are these: this gentleman accepted the office of superintendent of Indian affairs in 1850, with the full knowledge, on his part, that the salary was $2,500 a year. He accepted and entered upon the discharge of his duty, and for the three years discharged his duties in that office faithfully. His salary of $2,500 a year was paid out of the Treasury, in accordance with law. And now what does he ask of this House? He asks that we shall pay him $1,500 more. For what? The salary of the superintendent of Indian affairs now for Oregon and Washington is only $2,500. That is the amount which the present superintendent receives. You are asked to pay this man more than you pay the Governors of the Territories—to pay him more than you pay the judges of the Territory of Utah. You are asked to pay him $1,500 a year additional for each of the three years in which he held office there, with the full knowledge and understanding on his part what his compensation was to be. If gentlemen are prepared to do this, I ask if they will not do it in every case where an officer thinks his salary is not adequate to the duties he has performed? Why, sir, it has been contended for years that the salary of the minister to China was not adequate, and that it ought to be increased; and gentlemen have gone out there with the expectation that the salary would be increased; but I ask you if, for that reason, we should be justified in going back and increasing their salary?

Well, sir, what else? This man, who went out there and continued to hold office for three years, says that when he went there he had a vague promise made him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and by some other persons, whose names I do not now remember, that his salary would be increased to $4,000 per annum. But it was not increased. Then, if he was to be paid for the compensation which he was receiving, did he not resign and go home?

Mr. EDWARDS. The gentleman, perhaps, did not understand the remark I made, in reply to a question that was propounded to me, that the salary of the superintendent of Indian affairs was not fixed for California until 1853—after Mr. Dart had gone to Oregon.

Mr. BURNETT. Suppose it was not. He entered upon the discharge of his duties with a full knowledge of what the salary was to be, and he has no claim, either in equity or in law, upon this House, that we should go back and pay him this $1,500 additional salary. Now, I ask the gentleman what, from 1848 down to the time of the establishment by law of this Indian superintendency, the duties of the Governor were changed ex officio, the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs? In 1850, I believe, this superintendency was established. In 1855, if I am not mistaken, the law establishing the superintendency was repealed, and again the Governor was made superintendent of Indian affairs.

Mr. STOUT. I will state to the gentleman that he is in error in relation to that matter. The law was changed in 1855, I believe, which provided that the Governor should be superintendent of Indian affairs; and again, the superintendent of Indian affairs was appointed. This jurisdiction included both Oregon and Washington Territories.

Mr. BURNETT. We have now a superintendent of Indian affairs whose duties cover both Oregon and Washington, and who receives precisely the same salary that was paid to Dr. Dart. The salary has never been any higher. We find that there are a number of gentlemen who are willing to take these offices at the salaries affixed to them by the law; and that, after they have held them for years, they come to Congress and ask for increase of salaries. I am, and have always been, opposed to this increase of salaries. So much for that branch of the case.

Mr. Chairman, the bill ought to fall upon the increase of salary demanded; but there is another objection to the bill. If the claimant employed a clerk for six months, and the services of that clerk were needed, then he ought to be paid the amount which he is out of pocket on that account. If a clerk was necessary, then I am willing to go for that part of the bill. I am willing that he shall be paid the $750, which he says is due for clerk hire. The law fixes the pay of interpreters. It provides that they shall receive so much. It was the law when this claimant accepted the office. Here in this claim there is a vague and indefinite claim for a clerk, and there is no reason why it should not be definite and exact. And then there is not only a charge of $750 for clerk hire, but there is a vague charge in addition to that for extra clerk hire. He does not state the number of clerks, or the time they were employed, or the nature of the services performed. We are not told whether the clerks were necessary, or what services they did for the country.

This account is to be settled upon terms of equity and justice. Now, sir, I would like gentlemen to tell me whether in that phrase "equity and justice" they include the payment of interest? If the claim be passed, and the account is settled at the Treasury, is it the design of gentlemen that interest shall be allowed on the amount of the claim? If the law authorized the payment of these sums now asked for by Mr. Dart, then he would not have needed them. The Government would have been no necessity for him to come to Congress; but the law did not authorize their payment, and what Congress gives him, it gives him outside of law and in the exercise of its legislative discretion; and I hold that interest cannot be claimed with any justice, and I insist that it ought not to be allowed.

What does this claimant ask at our hands? First, that we shall give him an increase of salary; secondly, that we shall allow him for clerk hire, when he gives us no proof that it was needed; and, in the third place, that we shall allow him for board of interpreters. There are two charges for clerk hire, and we have no statement of the amount in that head. In addition to all that, we are asked to allow him interest. Is this claim, Mr. Chairman, that appeals to the equity and justice of the Representatives of the people? Is this a proper matter for the House to consider? Is it proper for the House in making such a grant? I do not think that it is. Gentlemen on the other side admit that we are asked to pay to this claimant money which the law would not allow him. We are acting upon our annual discretion. Whence, I will always vote for, changes upon the Treasury, which may not come within the provisions of the law, I cannot be induced to vote for any that are evidently unjust and unfounded. I therefore cannot vote for this claim of Anson Dart.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I regret that my friend from Kentucky should feel called upon to oppose this bill. If there ever was a just private claim before Congress, then this is one. Let me state the facts in this case. In 1850, Anson Dart, then, as now, a citizen of Kentucky, was appointed and was appointed a superintendent of Indian affairs for Oregon. Previous to that time, he had received an appointment to the position of chargé d'affaires to the Argentine Confederation. There is a letter on file from Mr. Clayton, then Secretary of State, in which he is appointed to that position, and that office, with a salary of $4,500 per annum and no outfit of a like amount. About that time this superintendency of Indian affairs for Oregon was created, and it was desirable to have some gentleman to fill that place who was acquainted with Indian affairs; some gentleman who had experience among the Indians.

Dr. Dart was selected to accept the office of superintendent and to forego his appointment to the Argentine Confederation. The reason for this was his long acquaintance with the Indians, by reason of his high character and familiarity with all matters pertaining to the Indians. A brother-in-law of George Catlin, the celebrated painter, and in company with him, he had visited nearly all the Indian tribes from the frontiers of Mexico to the Gulf of Mexico, and was well acquainted with a familiarity with the language and manners of the red man such as few other persons possessed. Dr. Dart declined to accept this appointment, and urged as a reason the utter inadequacy of the salary, and signified his unwillingness to yield up his position in the Argentine Confederation. Mr. Ewing, then Secretary of the Interior; Mr. Luke Lea, then Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and Mr. Atchison, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, assured him that, if he would take the appointment, the salary of that superintendency should be raised to the amount proposed to be given as salary to the superintendent of Indian affairs for California—an office about to be established.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Upon what authority was that asserted?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I will answer the gentleman. Th. Hon. Daniel Wells, jr., a Representative of the State of Wisconsin in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, when this bill was pending, made a statement, which I will repeat for the information of the House. I read from the Congressional Globe. He said "that he had called upon Mr. Lea, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at the time of Dr. Dart's appointment, and asked him what was the understanding between Dr. Dart and himself when the appointment was made." He replied that Dr. Dart had declined to accept it, on account of the smallness of the salary. He stated further, that several conversations took place between Mr. Lea, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and Mr. Atchison, chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and Dr. Dart, at the time when Dr. Dart had declined to accept the appointment and went to Oregon, that provision was made to give him a salary of $4,500." The salary was afterwards fixed for the superintendent of Indian affairs for California at $4,000, and not $4,500, as was expected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What authority had the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to pledge the American Congress to raise this salary to the amount stated?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. None at all, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. There was evidence before the committee to show that at the time a bill passed fixing the salary of the superintendent of Indian affairs for California, it was intended to embrace a provision fixing the same salary to the superintendent of Indian affairs for Oregon. The Secretary of the Interior recommended at the time that it should be done. However, by some inadvertence, that was not done. There was also evidence before the committee that Dr. Dart had resigned from the Department of the Interior, the mother, that the attention of Congress should be called to the fact of the inadequacy of his salary.

Here the committee infinitely rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, several messages in writing were received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his Private Secretary, JAMES BUCHANAN, Esq.

The committee then resumed its session.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The explanation of the gentleman from Texas does not answer the point he has made. And let me say, that the bill increasing the salary of the superintendent of Indian affairs for California did not pass until 1852—nearly three years after this superintendent of Indian affairs had entered upon the discharge of his duties, and just about the time he was ready to leave Oregon.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state that there was evidence before the committee, given by a number of distinguished gentlemen; among others, by Mr. Corwin, of Ohio, and Mr. Rust, of Texas. I do not recollect precisely the statements they made; but the statements of the gentleman who was superintendent of Indian affairs acted upon assurance given to him, and he had a moral right to suppose that the Government would secure to him this salary.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is an increase equal to the California superintendency, passed two years afterwards.

Mr. REAGAN. If it be true that this bill was passed two years after, then I think the committee was laboring under some misapprehension or want of information.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The point I desire to bring to the notice of the House is, that the committee acted under a misapprehension if they believed that Dart had any right secured to him by the bill increasing the pay of the California superintendency, before that bill was passed until about the time this superintendent was about to return home.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. The gentleman asks what authority the Department had to bind this Congress, or what authority the chairman or any member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate had? I answer, no authority. We do not contend that Congress is legally bound to recognize any engagement or any pledge which the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, or the Commissioners of Indian Affairs, have made; but we do contend that it is the duty of Congress to take notice of this recommendation, and if it is just, proper, and right, to sanction it. The assurances then given were right and proper, and the public service was greatly promoted thereby; and the principles of common honesty require that we should sanction what was then done.

The gentleman from Georgia says that the bill providing for California did not pass until 1852. I think it passed in 1852; but that makes no difference, so far as the question is concerned. But if the passage of that bill was delayed until 1852 it is the best possible answer to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BURNETT], who desired to know why this claimant held on to the office for three years. Why did not he resign when the salary of his duties was established and he not mentioned it? You know the delay which took place in transmitting news to California and Oregon, and the presumption is that soon after the bill for the superintendency for California had passed he went out of office. That would the delay of the bill be concerned. But it does not surprise the gentleman from Georgia. He knows the difficulties in the way of getting bills through the two Houses of Congress.

I say to that gentleman and to the House that no competent man could have been induced to go there in 1850 at a salary of $3,500. It is true, as has been remarked, that that is the salary of the present superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon; but every man knows that the expenses of living upon that coast have been reduced since that time more than one half, and that $2,500 a day is equivalent to $5,000 in 1850.

It is not denied that this gentleman discharged his duties well and faithfully. The gentleman from Kentucky admits that fact. While he was in Oregon we had no difficulty with the Indians upon that coast. No delict of millions of dollars against this Government was run up by Indian war there. On the contrary, the total expense of the Department upon the Pacific coast, for the three years of his superintendency, was only $24,000 a year. I believe that Senator Bell was right when he declared in the Senate that we ought not only to pass this bill, but in addition, to give him a handsome testimonial for those services.

Mr. STOUT. I wish to say a word in reply to the suggestions the gentleman has made in reference to the remarks of Mr. Bell, as read from the Globe, and also the remarks just made by the gentleman himself.

I take this occasion to say, that while I am not in any way disposed to interfere with or embarrass the passage of the bill now before the House, yet justice to other superintendents of Indian affairs in Oregon and Washington compels me to say that when I arrived at the mouth of the Columbia, the gentleman from Wisconsin, as to the merits of Mr. Dart, as compared with other superintendents, is erroneous.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire just here to make a suggestion. This is the first bill of the session increasing the salary of the superintendent of Indian affairs. It is the first bill of this character as we are discussing this, we shall never make any advance upon the Calendar. I would suggest that the committee rise, for the purpose of closing debate in a reasonable time. After that, the bill will be open to five minutes, which ought to give the gentleman ample opportunity to express their opinions upon it.

Mr. STOUT. I hope I shall be allowed to make my remarks without interruption.

I know little about the merits of this claim. Oregon is a new territory, a new State. It is a new territory, but while I lived upon that coast, I believe that the salary of the superintendent of Indian affairs at that time was too small, as I believe it to be now. But I do not believe that Mr. Dart had more duties to perform than are now performed by the present superintendent. Nevertheless, I think that he is entitled to any special credit for having kept and maintained peaceful relations with the Indians. Circumstances connected with these matters, that might be easily explained, caused peaceful relations to be maintained. While I would not do anything to interfere with the just consideration of this claim, I protest against drawing these invidious comparisons between this gentleman and his successors—gentlemen who are entitled to as much credit as can be claimed for Mr. Dart by his friends.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I did not intend, in anything I have said, to cast any reflection upon any gentleman who have been connected in any way with the Indian superintendency in Oregon. I merely stated the fact that the present superintendent of Indian affairs, of the Government, arising out of Indian difficulties, were only about twenty-four thousand dollars a year; and that peace was maintained there.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would ask the gentleman who reported this bill why he inserted in the bill a provision to disallow the claimant for all moneys paid and expenses incurred by him for the use and benefit of the Government? Now, it must be very evident to every gentleman's mind that if he paid out and expended money legitimately, whatever amount was so expended and paid out would be paid by the Government. It is not possible he has paid back. Now, I suggest to the gentleman that he shall himself move to strike out the words to which I have referred, for the reason that it would be received, and perhaps properly received, an direction to the Secretary of the Interior to disallow the claimant for all moneys that it were paid in a way that would or would not justify a member of this House in voting for it. It seems to me that this language is too broad, and that the law now covers everything that Mr. Dart could claim, if he has expended any money at all.

Mr. EDWARDS. Discretion often makes quite a difference in the sense, and it may not be strictly accurate in the part of the bill the gentleman refers to. If the gentleman will read the whole sentence, he will put a different construction upon it, and see that the proposed indemnity is limited "to moneys paid and expenses incurred for the use and benefit of the Government for an extra clerk six months, and for board of interpreters." It was intended so to limit it, and so reads.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then, I shall propose to amend the bill, so as to indemnify him for the expenses.

Mr. BURNETT. I would say to the gentleman from Alabama, before the notice is made in reference to amending any section, that I do not want to be cut out from amending the first section of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is all one section.

Mr. BURNETT. I propose to amend this bill, in the first place, by striking out the following words: "the sum of $4,000 per annum, deducting therefrom $2,500 per annum." The portion which I move to strike out is that portion of the bill which gives him additional compensation for having discharged the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs. Now, if the gentleman from New Hampshire will accept that amendment, he may bring the bill to the House, and I will make no objection to it.

This bill, instead of going back to the session of 1852 and 1853, when the salary of the superintendent of Indian affairs in California was increased, goes back to the commencement of the service of this man, in 1850. I move to strike out the portion increasing the salary.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman from New Hampshire that he permit the amendment to be adopted, and let the bill go to the House, and have a vote upon it there. Mr. BURNETT. I make this proposition to the gentleman; let him agree that he shall have a vote in the House on the motion to strike out that portion of the bill. Let him do that, and I am willing that his bill be reported.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am willing to agree to this.

Mr. BURNETT. Very well, sir.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I propose to amend the bill. I do not intend to detain the House on this subject. It is a very simple one. It seems to me that there are no contracting parties in this Government in the way of money, and that the office, and that if no individual accepts an office under the impression that the salary shall be raised, he stands or falls by that impression independently as it exists. And there is no obligation, either in law or equity, on the part of the Government, or any of those who are acting under or for the Government, to increase that salary according to any expectation, however much the office-holder may have suffered by reason of disappointed hopes. There are thousands of individuals who suffer more grievously even than the holder of salary, in the way of money, of those applicants for office who have wended their way to different parts of the Union, disappointed expectants of office; I have known some who have applied even for consulates, day after day, and tarrying long by the way, and month, and frequently by the quarter, who have at last come to be humble applicants for old clothes. I hardly think that they have an equitable claim upon the Government or upon the sympathies of the people. The whole race of office-seekers and office-holders are those who must stand or fall within the circumference of their professional duties.

So much for the first branch of the bill. I think, however, in relation to the remaining parts of it, there are equities—equities of a grave and serious character. Here is a gentleman who received more than $4,000 a year for his duties. He is, or, as I would say, more than the duties imposed on him at the time he accepted his commission; for, according to the report of the committee, it seems that a short period after he entered upon the performance of those duties, his office was abrogated and dispossessed of, and his duties were imposed on him, and faithfully discharged by him. Now, it is true that the law is very clear upon the subject—that the office-holder who performs more duties than he expected to perform will not be entitled to increase of salary, even if he performs the additional duties of other officers that had been dispensed with. But the equity still remains—that if this gentleman, in the performance of such duties, has been to expense and has disbursed moneys, the Government should refund him, honestly and fairly, those expenses and moneys disbursed. Therefore, sir, it is that I think the bill should be amended in this regard, so that the increase of salary should not be warranted and referred upon the applicant here, but that the increased expenditures may be allowed him; and the amendment I propose is to this effect: to strike out all after the word "Oregon," in the seventh line in the bill, down to the word "him," in the eighteenth line; so that the bill will read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury and otherwise appropriated, to Aaron Drat, late superintendent of Indian affairs in the Territory of Oregon, all moneys paid and expenses incurred by him for the use and benefit of the Government, for the services of one extra assistant clerk and one aide, and for the board of the Indian interpreters employed by him during his term of office as superintendent as aforesaid.

One word, sir, in reference to this last clause. An objection has been taken that the pay of interpreters is fixed by law, and is very true, and that it would not be equitable in the Government to increase it here, upon this application and under this bill. But the facts and circumstances in the report disclose that the services of the interpreters could not have been had at that time at the legal compensation; and that to retain their services, and to avail himself of them, it was necessary for him, in addition, to pay the amount of their board. That consequently brings this clause of the bill broadly within the equity of the case.

Mr. EDWARDS. I ask the gentleman from New York whether he will be satisfied with the arrangement just made with the gentleman from Kentucky, that he may have an opportunity of offering his amendment in the House?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDWARDS. Then I renew my motion that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House.

Mr. BRANCH. I do not desire to discuss this claim; but I think it is the gentleman who reported the bill on this question. I observe that great merit is claimed for this party, on the ground that he negotiated thirteen treaties with the Indian tribes. I would like to ask the gentleman whether any single one of those Indian treaties was ever confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. EDWARDS. I cannot give the gentleman any information upon that point.

Mr. BRANCH. I would like, then, to ask the member from Oregon.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I can answer the gentleman from North Carolina. I think that none of these treaties were confirmed by the Senate. I think it highly probable that had the Senate confirmed them, we should have been saved many of the difficulties with the Indians in Oregon that have since occurred.

Mr. BRANCH. I understand the gentleman to say that none of those treaties have been confirmed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. None of them have been confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BRANCH. I will not contend with the gentleman from Wisconsin, or with any other gentleman, as to whether the treaties were good or bad, inasmuch as we do not know anything about them; but I will assume that the Senate of the United States, in rejecting those treaties, must have come to this conclusion, with ample means of information, that they were not treaties favorable to the interests of the Government, or that ought to be confirmed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. The fact that Dr. Drat negotiated the treaties is not called in question, nor is it called in question that he acted in good faith. No gentleman ever undertook to say that he did not perform his duty faithfully and ably. The service was performed, and it makes no difference whether the Senate confirmed the treaties or not.

Mr. BRANCH. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to have admitted that none of these treaties were confirmed. Now that fact does not detract at all from our estimate of the labor performed by this Indian agent; but it certainly goes very far to detract from any estimate that we could put upon the value of the services rendered by him in that regard to the Government. I understand this, from what I gather from this discussion, to be in the nature of a claim upon the Government for a gratuity or bounty in consideration of meritorious services rendered by this party to the Government. The fact that all the treaties that he negotiated with the Indians were rejected only by the committee as one of the grounds upon which he should receive this bounty or gratuity—were rejected by the Senate in proof that at least the services that he rendered in that regard have not been of such benefit to the Government.

Mr. BURNETT, of Wisconsin. The proof is, that immediately after the Senate refused to confirm the treaties the Indian war in Oregon broke out, for which we are to be charged some five or six million dollars.

Mr. BRANCH. It may be that this agent brought the Indian war upon us by holding out expectations to the Indians that the Government could not, in justice to itself, realize to them. It may be that, instead of being meritorious, he has brought this Indian war upon us, and fastened on the Government the claim for five or six million dollars for expenses incurred there.

Now, I repeat that I know nothing about the merits of this case, except what I have gathered from the debate that has gone on here; but I think that that single item is clearly not a ground upon which we can lay any favorable action to this agent. He may be an excellent agent. I will not doubt, after having heard what gentlemen have said about him on the floor to-day, that he was a faithful agent, and that he served the Government to the best of his ability; but here is one proof at least that he has not served the Government very judiciously, or very satisfactorily.

Mr. EDWARDS. I simply wish to state, in answer to the gentleman from North Carolina, that it is in evidence that there was profound peace with the Indians during the three years of this claimant's service. The other point, I perhaps not so important, and I do not feel disposed to discuss it. I ask for the question.

The question was taken; and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

BRIEF GENERAL ARMISTICE.

Mr. HUGHES. In looking over the last adverse report of the Court of Claims, my attention was attracted by one which I am averse to having disposed of in the summary way in which the committee seem disposed to get rid of them en masse. I refer to report No. 149, an adverse report upon the petition of the owners and officers of the brig General Armstrong. I know nothing of this case except so far as it belongs to the history of our country. I believe there is no gentleman upon this floor who is not aware of the circumstances upon which it has been founded. It is founded upon one of the most brilliant acts in the history of maritime warfare. I am not willing that the case shall be disposed of on a mere technicality, which may be the case in the opinion delivered by the Court of Claims. I propose that the adverse report be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee of Claims, and in making this motion I am influenced by no other consideration than a sense of public duty, for no individual has ever approached me about the case.

Mr. MAYNARD. I think the bill was referred to the Naval Committee in the last Congress, my attention was attracted by one which I am averse to having disposed of in the summary way in which the committee seem disposed to get rid of them en masse. I refer to report No. 149, an adverse report upon the petition of the owners and officers of the brig General Armstrong. The question was taken on Mr. HUGHES's motion; and it was agreed to.

REICHARD W. MEADE.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I desire to make a similar motion in reference to report of the Court of Claims No. 226, an adverse report upon the petition of Richard W. Meade, administrator of R. W. Meade, deceased. It was decided by the Court of Claims, probably, upon a mere technical point, and it is desirable that the Committee of Claims should have an opportunity of investigating and reporting upon the merits of the claim. I move, therefore, that it be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BURNETT. I do not desire to detain the committee at all; but this is one of a class of cases which have come back from the Court of Claims with adverse reports, and yet we are referring them back to committees of the House. We ought either to repeal the act establishing the Court of Claims, or we ought to act on these cases when they come here, and dispose of them. I do not know whether my motion will take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Maryland or not, but I move that the report be reported back in the House with a recommendation that the report of the Court of Claims be concurred in.

The CHAIRMAN. The question must first be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not understand how we got back to these adverse reports.

The CHAIRMAN. The order was, that gentlemen might designate such reports as they wished to have referred.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland; and it was agreed to.

ROBERT HARRISON.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to make a motion in reference to another case, as I do not see the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HAWKINS] in his seat. It is report of the Court of Claims No. 127, an adverse report upon the petition of Robert Harrison. It is a report which was made by the Court of Claims several terms since, and was referred in the last Congress to the Committee of Claims, and a favorable report was made upon the claim by that committee. It is what is called a "Florida claim."

My motion is that it be excepted from the general disposition that is proposed to be made of these cases, and be passed over informally.

It was so ordered.

HEIRS OF GEORGE YATES.

Mr. MAYNARD. I make a similar motion in reference to adverse report (C. C. No. 188) upon the petition of the heirs of George Yates. That has been referred during the present session of Congress to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and I see that Mr. JAGGON, of Georgia, has reported a bill in favor of the claimants. I ask, therefore, that the report be passed over informally.

It was so ordered.

TENNESSEE RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 89) to liquidate the unadjusted claims of the Tennessee river improvement.

The bill was read. It provides that all accounts made by the duly authorized officers of the Government, appointed under the act of the Thirty-second Congress making an appropriation of $50,000 for the improvement of the Tennessee river, shall be audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

From the report it appears that on the 30th of August, 1852, Congress made an appropriation, for the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee river, of $50,000, in conformity with the estimate of the War Department of 1853, 1852 to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of War. The work was placed under the charge of the late Lieutenant Colonel McClellan, United States Army, by the War Department. To aid him in the management of the work, it was thought necessary by the Department to invest him with power to engage the services of certain persons resident in the neighborhood, and familiar with the localities, as assistant engineers. Accordingly a commission was prepared, under the direction of the bureau of topographical engineering, and was sent to Messrs J. E. S. Blackwell, James C. Luttrell, Jacob Newman, C. W. Charlton, and W. G. Brownlow. During the years 1853 and 1854 a large amount of labor was performed under the general direction of Colonel McClellan and the immediate supervision of these assistants. Many persons, both mechanics and laborers, were employed, and the work was carried on with great activity until the death of Colonel McClellan by cholera, in the latter part of August, 1854. Finding the appropriation about exhausted, and apprehending that it was not likely to be continued, the work was suspended, and upon the failure of the river and harbor appropriation bill was discontinued, and the boats, tools, and materials sold. After the decease of Colonel McClellan, until the discontinuance of the work, his place was supplied by Mr. R. W. W. Byrd, civil engineer. On closing up the accounts, it appeared, after appropriating the proceeds of the sales, and exhausting the original appropriation, there remained some balances, which there were no funds to pay. A portion of the compensation due to the assistant engineer, and the pay of the foreman upon the work; small accounts due to various citizens for powder &c., used in their operations; medical and surgical attendances to a laborer injured while in the employ of the Government, under circumstances which rendered it proper for the engineer, in his judgment, to provide for his treatment; these are the accounts and items for the auditing of which this bill provides.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid aside.

ADVERSE REPORTS FROM COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. TAPPAN. A list, containing certain adverse reports from the Court of Claims, has been handed me, which I am now instructed to ask the committee to exempt from the number to be reported to the House with a recommendation that the adverse decisions of the court be confirmed. I present first the case of J. L. Wordena—adverse report No. 170.

Mr. BURNETT. I submit to the Chair, and to the gentleman from New Hampshire, whether that is in accordance with the agreement which has been made in reference to these adverse reports. The motion was adopted, at the instance of the gentleman from New Hampshire himself, that all these adverse reports should be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the decision of the Court of Claims be confirmed; giving gentlemen, at the time, the privilege of excepting from the general order any particular case which they might designate. Yet the gentleman now himself proposes to violate that agreement, by coming in now with a list of other cases, which he asks the committee to have referred to committees of the House.

Mr. TAPPAN. On the contrary, what I now ask is strictly in accordance with the proposal which I made, and which the committee has agreed in reference to these adverse reports. It was expressly stated that any gentleman who might wish to except any particular cases, should be at liberty to designate them. I have no interest in this claim, and know nothing about it. I simply make the motion, as I have been requested to do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to understand this matter. Does the right to go back and take cases out of the list extend to the entire sitting of the committee for the day?

Mr. TAPPAN. Yes, sir, my understanding. Mr. CRAWFORD. My understanding was that these adverse reports were all to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the decision of the court be confirmed, with the exception of such as should be designated at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now understood it, and has acted upon that understanding.

Mr. TAPPAN. That was certainly not my understanding; and such an understanding would have been doing great injustice, for there was no time for members to select the cases which they might wish to except from the long list, without taking some time to go over it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If that be the understanding, what do we gain by the order which was made, the majority of the cases from New Hampshire himself? It would have been better to have taken up each case and acted upon it separately.

Mr. TAPPAN. Not at all. The number of cases that will be excepted will be comparatively few. The great body of the reports will be reported under the agreement which was made. I have not more than half a dozen myself. The gentleman must see that it is so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the very thing the gentleman cannot see.

Mr. TAPPAN. I am as anxious to get these cases off the Calendar as any gentleman can be;

but I do not see any other course than the one I have proposed by which justice can be done. I think that it is right that such of those cases should be referred to some of the standing committees of the House as it is desired should be. That was my understanding. I make the motion, and the committee can do as they please in reference to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that he understood the agreement of the committee as the gentleman from Georgia has stated it; that no cases were to be exempted, except such as were named at the time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I ask the Chair to enforce that understanding.

Mr. TAPPAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, no such understanding has been acted on. Gentlemen have been permitted to more than bill excepted from the general list since the committee have passed from the consideration of the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Only in two instances; and then the gentlemen waited, at the request of the Chair, until the bill which was then under consideration should have been disposed of.

Mr. TAPPAN. I heard nothing of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Both gentlemen came to the Chair in reference to the cases which they proposed to except; and they delayed bringing them before the committee at the request of the Chair.

Mr. TAPPAN. Of course, I could not be a party to any such understanding as that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question upon the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire, if he desires it. The gentleman moves that adverse report No. 170 of the Court of Claims be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If that course is pursued, I would suggest that we can accomplish the same with less irregularity by going back and taking up the cases one by one as they occur on the Calendar.

Mr. TAPPAN. I should much prefer that the four or five cases which I have here should be disposed of as I have indicated. I had the list here with me when I came, but I did not refer to it. I should have disposed of all my cases before this time if I had been allowed to go on.

Mr. BURNETT. I think we shall consume much less time by going back and taking up the cases one by one.

Mr. CURTIS. I object to going back.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman that he had better go forward, and not consume any more time on these adverse reports.

Mr. TAPPAN. They have got to be disposed of some way, and I do not know why we may not as well do it now.

Mr. BURNETT. Well, sir, I hope the gentleman from New Hampshire will be permitted to make his motion.

Mr. TAPPAN. Very well; I will not consume five minutes. I now move that report No. 170 be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BURNETT. Now I ask the gentleman whether he can give the committee any reason why this case should not go to the House with the recommendation that the decision of the Court of Claims be confirmed?

Mr. TAPPAN. No reason whatever. I have said that I know nothing about the claim.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I hope the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire will not be agreed to.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. I now move that that case be reported to the House with a recommendation to refer it to the report of the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not necessary. It will go there with the others, under the order already adopted.

JOHN H. WAGGAMAN.

Mr. TAPPAN. I now make the same motion in reference to report No. 171, upon the petition of John H. Wagaman.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman whether he can give any reason why the committee should not refer to the same decision in this case as in the last?

Mr. TAPPAN. I know nothing about this case. I have made the motion, as I have been requested to do.

The motion was disagreed to.

THOMAS C. NYE.

Mr. TAPPAN. I make the same motion in reference to adverse report No. 177, upon the petition of Thomas C. Nye.

The motion was not agreed to.

MARY WILLIAMS.

Mr. TAPPAN. I move that the adverse report of the Court of Claims (No. 231) upon the petition of Mary Williams, widow of James Williams, be exempted from the general order, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a claim for remuneration for property lost and destroyed during the Florida war in 1836, in consequence of its having been taken for public use by military officers of the United States.

Mr. BURNETT. That case has been before the Court of Claims, and it has been investigated and passed upon adversely. I move that it be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that the report of the Court of Claims be concurred in.

Mr. CURTIS. I protest against its going to the Committee on Military Affairs. We have now more business than we can get through with.

Mr. BURNETT's motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that the adverse report of the Court of Claims be concurred in.

THOMAS ATKINSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 234) for the relief of Thomas Atkinson, of Pennsylvania, is introduced.

Mr. BURNETT. I objected to that claim when it was last up. Subsequently I investigated, and I am satisfied that it is meritorious, and ought to be passed. I move that it be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

ROBERT JOHNSTON.

A bill (H. R. No. 235) for the relief of Robert Johnston.

The bill was read. It authorizes Robert Johnston, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to locate, on any of the public lands of the United States subject to location with military bounty land warrants, the following described military bounty land warrants, heretofore issued under and by virtue of the act of February 11, 1847: No. 35885, issued to Charles H. Burns; No. 35913, issued to John Hurr; No. 35918, issued to John Leiman; No. 35919, issued to Ames Lightner; No. 37176, issued to Henry Weller; No. 38712, issued to Jesse C. Moore; No. 38713, issued to Thomas T. Madan; No. 38726, issued to James Smith; No. 38755, issued to James Deal; No. 38756, issued to William E. Fenimore; No. 38759, issued to John C. Hardy; No. 44579, issued to Samuel S. Smith; No. 44688, issued to Bagshaw Barsby; No. 44833, issued to John Kolk; No. 44859, issued to Charles Corragin; No. 44975, issued to Ludolph Wedemeyer; No. 44876, issued to Daniel Meyer; No. 44877, issued to Frederick Meyer; No. 44878, issued to Henry C. Johnson; No. 45729, issued to Daniel Adams; No. 45729, issued to Jeremiah Gensmer; No. 45731, issued to George M. Newell; No. 45866, issued to John Randolph; and No. 55298, issued to John Wallace, the discharges received by said soldiers after the conclusion of their respective terms of service having, as is alleged, been purchased from them for a valuable consideration: provided, that if it shall hereafter appear that the soldiers did not, in whole or in part, receive a fair and valuable consideration for such discharge, it shall be lawful for them, or their heirs, to assert their claims respectively in a court of law, and the particular tracts, selected in satisfaction of the warrants aforesaid, shall severally be subject to such claims in law or equity, and the patents which may issue for such tracts shall be subject accordingly to said claims, and that any assignment made of either of the land warrants, or the locations thereof, prior to the issuing of patents, shall be absolutely null and void in law and equity.

It appears from the report, which was read, that during the summer or fall of the year 1848 Robert Johnston purchased twenty-four discharges from soldiers of the late war with Mexico, having paid the sum of eighty dollars for each discharge; that he was engaged in the brokerage or banking business in Philadelphia, and was imported by the soldiers who were in that city at that time to purchase their discharges, but he stated that he was not in the regular course of his business; that he was unacquainted with the law regulating the transfer of the soldiers' interest and title to bounty lands, as was shown by evidence, but was advised and believed that a general power of attorney, acknowledged before an agent, authorized him to receive and dispose of the warrants to be issued, was sufficient to vest the title to the warrants, and that upon the discharges being forwarded to the Pension Office, accompanied by the powers of attorney, the Commissioner of Pensions would issue the warrants directly to him. It appears that he had the powers of attorney so acknowledged and executed before Chancery Bulkley, an alderman of Philadelphia, each soldier being examined, and declaring his intention to convey his bounty land warrants; and that soon after he became possessed of said discharges and powers of attorney, he made application to the Commissioner of Pensions for the issue of the warrants to himself; but that the warrants were issued on each of said discharges in the names of said soldiers, and in the name of the said Robert Johnston, as follows: No. 35712, Jesse C. Moore; No. 42740, John C. Hardy, (35759); No. 55298, John Wallace; No. 45729, Jeremiah Genesier; No. 45731, William E. Fennimore, (35756); No. 35746, John Lehman, (35818); No. 35716, Henry Wells; No. 43731, George M. Newell; No. 44889, Daniel Adams; No. 44875, Ludolph Wedemeyer; No. 44876, Daniel Meyer; No. 45566, John Randolph; No. 44659, Charles Corrigan; No. 35885, Charles H. Burns; No. 35919, Alma Lightner; No. 44878, Henry E. Layton; No. 35736, James Smith; No. 35918, James J. Jones; No. 44885, Deal; No. 44379, Samuel K. Worme; No. 44698, Bagshaw Barsley; No. 35713, Thomas T. Malan; No. 44853, John Kolk; No. 44871, Frederick Meyer.

It appears that all the above warrants were duly received, and have ever since been in the possession of Robert Johnston; and that it was not until after the discharges and powers of attorney were forwarded by him that he became aware of the fact that he could not by law transfer and dispose of the warrants in the names of the soldiers, which had been executed to him by the above-named soldiers. This information was first obtained from the Commissioner of Pensions by way of reply to the application made by him for the issue of the warrants to him direct. But owing to the press of business in the Pension Office, this reply was not communicated to him for several months after the application was made by him. It appears that he has made search for these soldiers, but has been unable to find any of them. They were generally young men, whose homes were in different sections of the State, and they have long since left the city of Philadelphia. Eight years have elapsed, and no arrests have been entered upon said warrants.

Mr. McQUEEN. That bill was examined last year by the Committee on Public Lands and great care, and before it was reported, to the satisfaction of a just claim. I applied to the Land Office for information on the subject, and by the evidence of gentlemen certified to be worthy of every credit, it was made perfectly clear that these discharges were transferred to Johnston for a valuable consideration. I would have reported in favor of the claim at the last session, but the committee did not meet after I had authority to prepare the bill. No injury can result from the passage of the bill. It is just. I move, therefore, that it be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

EBEN S. HANSCOMB.

A bill (H. R. No. 2255) for the relief of Eben S. Hanscomb.

The bill was read. It authorizes Eben S. Hanscomb to enter the southeast quarter of section sixteen, township twenty-eight north, range twenty-four west, in the district of lands subject to sale at Forest City, State of Minnesota, upon his payment of the usual minimum of $25 per acre, and directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent on said entry; and it also authorizes the superintendent of public schools in Minnesota to select an equal quantity of other lands in that State for the use of public schools, in lieu of the lands herein granted.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish, with the consent of the House, state briefly the reasons for this bill. I am well acquainted with Mr. Hanscomb. He lives not more than five miles from my house. It is right and proper that the bill should pass. [Cries of "Then let us lay it aside!"] Very well, then; I move that it be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

CASSIUS M. CLAY.

A bill (H. R. No. 240) for the relief of Cassius M. Clay.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Cassius M. Clay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,599.79, in full for property destroyed and lost in Mexico, and in reimbursement of the amount of a judgment, costs and interest, recovered against him by Eliza Bowles for trespass in executing a military order of his superior officer in 1846.

It appears from the report of the committee, which Mr. ALDRICH read, that the petitioner was a captain in the Kentucky regiment of cavalry, under the command of Colonel Marshall, in the war with Mexico. The first claim is for the reimbursement of the amount of a judgment recovered against him in the courts of Kentucky by Eliza Bowles for trespass upon her property, committed in the execution of an order of his superior officer for the arrest of deserters. This amounted, in October, 1848, with costs and interest, to $533.20, when it was paid by the petitioner. The second claim is for property destroyed in Mexico. In 1846. In this case it appears that he was ordered by Colonel Marshall to disperse a band of robbers who were threatening the train from Camargo to Monterey. The execution of this order compelled him to leave behind him property which was lost for want of proper attention, and before he had accomplished his orders he was taken prisoner, losing what property he had with him. This case was brought before Congress as early as 1848. At that time the Committee of Claims of the House of Representatives reported, with a bill for his relief, on the account of property lost in Mexico, to the amount of $760. In 1849 the same committee reported again in his favor. In 1853 the Committee of Claims reported in favor of the first claim set forth in this report, but adversely on the second claim.

The adverse report of the Court of Claims is based upon a want of authority to grant relief in such cases, saying that "the power to relieve in such cases belongs, we think, exclusively to Congress." At the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, the Committee of Claims reported this case, with a bill for the relief of the petitioner, was brought before the House, and after considerable discussion, in which Colonel Marshall made statements before the House in regard to the claim, the bill was passed by yeas and nays—

YEAS 107. NAYS 107.

Mr. HOARD. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BURNETT. This bill is in favor of a gentleman of my State, Mr. Clay. It seems that the Court of Claims have acted on that part of the claim to be paid the amount of judgment obtained against him, for a trespass upon certain property in Louisville. The whole question, I suppose, was before that court, and the argument which has been used time and again upon this floor in reference to the opinions of the Court of Claims, applies with all its force to this claim. No reason is given why this should be taken out of the regular course of these claims.

Here is a judgment that has been obtained against this officer in an action of trespass before the courts of Louisville, Kentucky, which he has satisfied. The allegation is, that he made the trespass in discharge of his duty, under order from his superior officer to arrest deserters. The question went to the Court of Claims, and upon the proof adduced, that court made an adverse report. The case is then referred to a committee of this House, and they report that the claim ought to be allowed, thus reversing the action of the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOARD. The court did not report against the claim; but only that they had not jurisdiction over it; that the power to relieve in such cases belonged exclusively to Congress. The law did not authorize it to be paid.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman says that that court did not have jurisdiction of the case because the law did not authorize the claim to be paid. Yes, sir, we are asked to take money from the Treasury, and put it into the pocket of an officer, who has been tried by a court of competent jurisdiction in Kentucky for trespass upon private rights, and had judgment rendered against him. Although he is from my State, I cannot vote any amount appropriated in this bill. I will not vote to put the pocket of a trespasser against an officer by a court of competent jurisdiction for having trespassed upon the rights of private citizens.

The other branch of the claim is for losses sustained in Mexico. From the report of the committee we are informed that Mr. Clay lost certain property in Mexico. The amount of the loss is given in gross. There is no specification, and the claim is loose and indefinite. I do not think it is right, and I must vote against it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am glad that my colleague is usually very watchful and sagacious in matters of this sort, and I oppose any position he assumes, upon private claims, with diffidence. I think, however, he is in error here. In reference to the first part of the claim, there is no doubt that Mr. Clay should be indemnified for the loss of property he sustained in Mexico. I understand my colleague is in favor of that.

Mr. BURNETT. My colleague misunderstands me. If the proof shows that he lost property in Mexico, then he ought to be indemnified. In this case, the proof is not sufficient to show that the character of the property he lost, or what was its value.

Mr. MALLORY. I understand the amount is provided; that the items were specified, and the whole matter ascertained by that committee, and that they reported the amount in that bill.

In reference to the other branch of the bill, I think it is a well-settled principle that where an officer in the discharge of his duty incurs an expense, or even damages, it is the custom of the Government to reimburse him. In this case Captain Clay, of the cavalry regiment of Kentucky, was ordered by a superior officer to arrest a deserter while in encampment at Louisville. In the execution of that order, he found it necessary to enter a house. He forced the doors, and arrested the deserter. He was sued by that act, and damages were recovered against him. Now, I say, if there ever was a claim of that character before Congress which the Government out to pay, that is this case. I hope the claim will pass.

Mr. NOELL. I desire to say one word just here, in reference to the second branch of this claim, we have a general law upon the subject. I think, myself, it is not such a law as can be executed. I had the honor, a short time since, to introduce a general bill to authorize the Government to pay for losses lost in that war with Mexico, and the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously reported against it. Now I wish it understood, that if the Missouri volunteers are not to be paid for their losses in that war, I shall vote against every bill intended to give relief in individual cases for the same kind of losses.

There is a law in reference to this subject upon our statute-books, but it is wholly ineffectual. The troops of Doniphan and Price, which went from Missouri, lost all their horses, and have not been paid for them. I have no doubt, without understanding this state of affairs, when a bill is introduced into this House, to meet this case, it is reported against unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to state to the House that the precise state of facts stated by the gentleman from Missouri, in regard to the volunteers of Missouri who lost their horses and property in the Mexican war, exists in Illinois. There are to-day hundreds of thousands of claims justly due to citizens of Illinois and Wisconsin for horses and other property lost during that war, and not a dollar of it can be got under the existing law; and although, in almost every case, they come, I think, within the true and just interpretation of the law, yet, by the construction put upon the law at the Treasury Department, none of those parties are enabled to obtain indemnity. I think there is great force and truth in the remark made by the gentleman from Missouri, and I am astonished that Congress has not yet before passed laws to enable those men who have lost their property in this way to obtain indemnity.

But I disagree with the gentleman in other respects. Whenever a particular claim is made before Congress, which is just and proper, for a loss of property in the service of this country, I am willing to indemnify the claimant in that particular case, though I am in favor of a general law for the relief of all such claimants, to be properly carried out by the officers of the Government.

Mr. BRANCH. I have no remarks to make in reference to the Missouri volunteers. I think they will in due time be taken care of to the extent of their deserts. But this claimant now before the committee appears to have been a captain in the Missouri militia. I gather from the report that on one occasion he was ordered by a superior officer to disperse a band of the enemy. While absent upon that duty, he lost property which he could have protected had he remained with that property, and had not gone off to disperse that band of the enemy. It is a case that comes under a commission. Is it the law of this country that the losses which a person shall sustain by the enemy under such circumstances shall be paid for by the Government? Has this person with him any property except such as pertained to his personal apparel and equipment?

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman from North Carolina labors under a misapprehension of the facts in this case. Mr. Clay was sent off upon business with other officers. While engaged in that service, he was taken prisoner, and was a lawful captive, and remained a long period of time within the Mexican lines. When he returned he found his horses, equipment, and everything, gone. It is a peculiar case, sui generis, and ought to be paid specially.

Mr. BRANCH. Was the property gone by capture by the public enemy?

Mr. CURTIS. No, sir; it was lost while he was a prisoner of the enemy.

Mr. BRANCH. I must confess that the explanation of the gentleman from Iowa has not yet enabled me to know what description of property this was, or how it was lost.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to let me send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, the views of the minority of the committee upon this question. They were hastily drawn up, and not so thoroughly matured as they should have been, otherwise they would have been presented before now as the report of the minority of the committee. Yet they embrace the facts, and, I think, the principles which should govern this case.

Mr. BRANCH. I am willing the views of the minority should be read, as I only desire proper information upon this subject.

The report was read, as follows:

The minority of the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Captain M. Clay, claiming compensation for losses sustained by him in Mexico, and relief against a judgment obtained against him, ask leave to report: That the property and other losses reported by Captain Clay are established, no far as the fact of the loss is concerned; but no person is perceived why this loss should be taken out of the treasury, and made up to the individual. It is not the duty of the Government to make good the losses of individuals. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its officers and soldiers. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its property. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its service. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its honor. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its credit. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its power. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its glory. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its name. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its reputation. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its honor. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its credit. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its power. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its glory. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its name. It is the duty of the Government to make good the losses of its reputation.

As to the second branch of the claim, to wit: the judgment recovered against Captain Clay, for having inflicted injury upon other parties in violation of law, but in execution of a military order from a superior officer. The order was not issued in a state of actual war, or in the enemy's country, but in a state of peace in one of our own States, Kentucky, where the civil authority prevailed. If the case was one arising under martial law, arising under an imperious necessity, it would be different. It is the duty of the majority of your committee to decide that the claim is allowable upon any principle of law, justice, or public policy. If it were a case of a military order issued in a state of peace, no compensation should ever be given to a violation of the civil law by the military arm of the Government. In some cases, however, it has been seen that the public use and judgment for the value afterwards obtained against the officer making the seizure, Congress has granted relief; but where an injury has been inflicted upon the person or property of citizens by military officers, in violation of law, every principle of public policy demands that such officers should be held accountable.

But this question has been frequently before [Congress], and as frequently decided adversely to the claimant. Only one case, however, will be cited in this report, as that is a case precisely in point. In 1853, Samuel P. Scott had the command of the revenue cutter Dash, then lying in the port of New York. William Davis deserted, and one Alfred Tans was sent to arrest him. Davis refused to return, and this report that Davis had a party of men on the lookout to assassinate Scott. The latter did not see him afterwards with Lieutenant Hodge, discovered Davis, and when he refused to return, and instead of being arrested, he was shot; and one John Anderson, a keeper of a sailors' boarding house, and six others, approached and demanded Davis's release, which being refused, they fired upon him, and down twice. Davis was taken on board the ship, and Anderson arrested on a warrant for assault and battery. Anderson was taken on a warrant for Scott's murder, and the latter was acquitted. Anderson was convicted. Anderson brought a civil suit for damages against Scott, and was awarded $500 and costs. The case was brought before the committee, and was referred to the committee. The committee reported that the claim was not allowable, and that the Government was not bound to make good the losses of individuals.

"There are many instances where an officer of the United States in the discharge of an official duty, for the benefit of the service, has taken the property of an individual for public use, and has been sued, and, after full defense, a judgment has been recovered. Congress has granted relief. This was a complete of personal injury, and a partial defense only made. To grant relief in this case would be both unjust and impolitic."

The apology was rejected; and a minority of your committee concurring in his view of the question, recommended the following resolution:

Resolved, That the claimant is not entitled to relief.

Mr. BRANCH. The report of the minority of the committee presents the facts and arguments very distinctly, and I shall not consume the time of the committee in reiterating them. It appears to me that the claimant in this case is in the same predicament as the claimant in the case of the Victoria, incident to military life, lost a portion of his personal property. He was subjected to such a loss as the man who goes forth to war, whether he bears a commission of his country or acts only as a volunteer, is liable to be subjected to. It is the first instance in which I have ever heard it claimed that the Government is to make good losses of that description. I am willing to leave this on the report of the minority of the committee.

In regard to the other branch of the claim I would say this: that where an officer, acting under the orders of his superior, attempts in good faith to carry out those orders, and falls into an error of judgment in regard to points of law, I would feel very much inclined to indemnify him for his losses, if he can show that he acted in good faith, and that he was not negligent. In this case, there is any proof of want of good faith on the part of Mr. Clay. But I am told that the Court of Claims, before which this case has been, has reported against it.

Mr. HOARD. Oh, no; the Court of Claims reported that they had no authority; they did not report against it.

Mr. CURTIS. I would say that this case is a very simple one. The minority report is based upon two propositions. The first is, that it was not an extraordinary service that he lost his horses. But it certainly was an extraordinary service.

Mr. BRANCH. I suppose the gentleman from Iowa understands that he is speaking in my time.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, I will wait till the gentleman from North Carolina gets through.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to make a remark in reply to the observation of the gentleman from North Carolina before he takes his seat. He says he understands that the Court of Claims reported against that branch of the claim for the same reason as that which we are now considering, that the Court of Claims admit the merit of the claim, but say they have no jurisdiction; and that they refer the claimant to Congress.

Mr. HOARD. I have the report of the Court of Claims here. They say that the power to relieve a claimant in this case belongs exclusively to Congress. They do not report against it.

Mr. BRANCH. I was going to say that I would not argue this case any further. It is now near four o'clock, and we have disposed of a great deal of business to-day, or we have got it into a condition to carry it into the House, and to clear the private docket of nearly all its adverse reports from the Court of Claims, so that hereafter when we go into a Committee of the Whole House, we will be able to take up cases reported favorably from the standing committees of the House. It is obvious that this claim is going to give rise to a great deal of discussion, and that it will be strongly resisted. I propose, therefore, that the committee do now rise, so as to have time to dispose of, and thereby save, what we have already accomplished to-day; and that this case be allowed to stand over till some future time. It can be taken up when we go into a Committee of the Whole House again.

Mr. CURTIS. I would rather that it were disposed of now.

Mr. BRANCH. I have not yielded the floor yet. I propose, before I close, to move that the committee do now rise, so as to have what we have already accomplished to-day.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like merely to reply to the minority report.

Mr. BRANCH. I would not hesitate to yield the floor to enable the gentleman to do so, and of course common justice would require me to yield, if I proposed to take up adverse to the case; but inasmuch as I do not propose any action adverse to the claim, but propose to leave it in the position in which it now stands, with a view to take it up at some future time, I do not think there is any necessity for the gentleman to make any explanation now; I therefore move that the committee now rise.

DENNIS CROWNS.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the motion is put, I wish to have a question settled. I understand that there was a resolution submitted and adopted to-day to concur in the adverse report of the Court of Claims in all cases, save where there was an exception. The case of Dennis Crowns was referred somewhat since to the Committee of Claims, and is now pending before that committee. I ask that it be exempted from this general resolution.

Mr. BRANCH. I have no objection myself, but I believe the gentleman from Louisiana has jumped into slippery ground, which has already given rise to a great deal of discussion. However, I have no objection to withdrawing my motion for the present.

Mr. TAYLOR. The case I refer to has been sent to the Committee of Claims, and is now before it. It was not properly on the Calendar in Committee of the Whole House. I therefore move that it be exempted from the report.

The motion was agreed to.

SUREVE AND CARTER.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire also to have exempted from the effect of this resolution, the adverse report from the Court of Claims (No. 205) on the petition of Lydia R. Shreve and Walker R. Carter, administrators of Henry M. Shreve.

It was so ordered.

Mr. BRANCH. I renew my motion that the committee do now rise.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE called for tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ASHWORTH and Messrs. appointed.

The committee reported, and the tellers reported yeas 24, nays 13, no quorum voting.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDWARDS, (interrupting.) I would inquire whether this matter cannot be arranged so that we may go on with the business? I am satisfied that we cannot compel a vote today upon the bill now before the committee, and I therefore hope that the motion to rise will be acceded to, so that we may pass the bills which have already been laid aside.

Mr. BRANCH. That is precisely what I proposed.

The Clerk continued the call.

Mr. TAPPAN, (interrupting.) Would it be in order to dispense with the further calling of the roll, with the understanding that the committee shall rise?

The CHAIRMAN. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENSON. I object.

The call of the roll was accordingly completed, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adair, Avery, Babbitt, Barksdale, Barr, Barret, Beale, Berock, Busham, Boudin, Boyer, Brown, Burch, Hurlingham, Burdick, Burroughs, Corbridge, Cox, Crenshaw, Clark B. Cochran, Coffey, Cowley, Cox, Crawford, Davidson, H. Winter Davis, John G. Davis, Robert Davis, De Jarnette, Dismick, Edmondson, Eastlick, Farwell, Fenton, Ferry, Foster, Fouke, French, Garrett, Gilmer, Graham, Hall, Hamilton, Handman, J. Harrison, Harris, Hart, Hays, Hendricks, Hickman, Irvin, Jenkins, Jones, Judd, Kent, Killinger, Kunkel, Landrum, Lamborn, James M. Leach, Leach, Longenecker, Loomis, Love, May, Mayhew, McPherson, Mitchell, Mitwell, Lahan T. Moore, Moffat, Pendleton, Perry, Pettit, Peyton, Perry, Reynolds, J. Smith, Root, Scott, Sickles, Smith, William Smith, Thomas N. Smith, Thomas, Spaulding, Spinner, Stanton, Stevens, William Stewart, Strait, Stratton, Thomas, Trimble, Vance, Venable, Wadsworth, Washburn, Webster, Wilson, Wood, Woodruff, and Wright.

During the roll-call,

Mr. QUARLES announced the following pairs: Mr. AVERY with Mr. KILLINGER; Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. MILLWARD, for one week; and Mr. VANCE with Mr. COVODE. He also announced that Mr. LEACH, of North Carolina, had been called home on important business, and had left the city.

Mr. FRANK announced the following pairs: Mr. BRENNAN with Mr. SICKLES; Mr. FEAT with Mr. MACLAY; and Mr. LOOMIS with Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana.

It was also announced that Mr. FORSTER had paired off with Mr. BARBER for the day.

Mr. MALLORY stated that Mr. LEACH was paired off for this week with Mr. STANTON. Mr. COVODE announced that Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, had paired off with Mr. GARRETT all Tuesday next.

Mr. UNDERWOOD stated that Mr. GARRETT was confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM stated that Mr. PENDLETON was still detained from the House by indisposition.

Mr. BRANCH stated that Mr. REFFIN was confined to his room by indisposition.

Mr. BLAKE stated that Mr. TINKLE was sick.

Mr. EDWARDS announced that Mr. MARSHALL had left the House this afternoon very well.

The roll having been called, and the absentees noted, the committee rose; and Mr. McRAE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WINSLOW reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and had directed him to report the facts to the House, with the names of the absentees.

A quorum having appeared, the committee resumed its session, the pending question being on Mr. BRANCH's motion, that the committee do now rise.

Mr. TAPPAN. As it is now near the usual hour of adjournment, and for the purpose of saving what has been done, I am willing that the committee shall rise.

The question was put; and Mr. BRANCH's motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and Mr. McRAE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WINSLOW reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report to the House sundry adverse reports from the Court of Claims, with the recommendation that some of them be concurred in; and that others be referred to the Committee of Claims; also, that the committee had directed him to report sundry bills to the House with a recommendation that they do pass.

ADVERSE REPORTS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House with regard to the several adverse reports of the Court of Claims reported to the House was concurred in.

By unanimous consent, the previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered, on all the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole, and the House proceeded to dispose of the same.

TENNESSEE RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

An act (H. R. No. 89) to liquidate the unjust claims of the Tennessee river improvement, was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAXNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS ATKINSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 234) for the relief of Thomas Atkinson, of Parke county, Indiana, was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT JOHNSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 238) for the relief of Robert Johnson was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLORENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANSON DART.

The question recurred upon ordering a bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Anson Dart to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Mr. BURNETT. It was the understanding with the gentleman who reported that bill that the gentleman from New York [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE] and myself were to be permitted to offer our amendments in the House.

Several MEMBERS. Offer them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen will have that privilege.

Mr. BURNETT. The amendment of the gentleman from New York precedes mine.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "Oregon," in the seventh line of the bill, down to the word "him," in the thirteenth line, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Any sum that may be found to be due to him upon a settlement with him, upon principles of equity and justice, for damages incurred by him for the use and benefit of the Government.

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to—ayes thirty-two, noes not counted.

Mr. BURNETT. I now offer my amendment, which is to strike out the words, "the sum of $4,000 per annum, deducting therefrom $2,500 per annum already received."

Mr. EDWARDS. I believe that that is the same amendment, in substance, as the one just voted on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDWARDS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EBEN S. HANSCOMB.

The bill (H. R. No. 225) for the relief of Eben S. Hanscomb was next taken from the Speaker's table, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLORENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAPPAN. I desire to inquire whether report No. 81, from the Court of Claims, in the case of David Myrick, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated that the cases from the Court of Claims would be disposed of as recommended by the Committee of the Whole. Such cases as were to be referred to committees have been referred.

Mr. BRANCH. I so understood it.

Mr. TAPPAN. I desire distinctly to understand how the adverse report in the case of Cassius M. Clay was disposed of? It would be hardly right that the decision of the court should be confirmed with the bill standing on the Calendar for his relief.

Mr. BRANCH. I trust that, by general consent, that case will be considered as still remaining on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be the understanding, there being no objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. BURNETT, (at fifteen minutes before five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 31, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GRALEY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Quartermaster General, together with the papers called for by the resolution of the Senate of the 14th instant, requesting the Secretary of War to furnish the Senate with all plans, estimates, and reports relating to the construction of new barracks for troops at the presidio of San Francisco, and especially the report of the inspector general, relating thereto, of May, 1859; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DURKEE presented the petition of Daniel Whitney, praying for the issue of patents for certain lands at Green Bay, Wisconsin, in favor of parties to whom the land was confirmed under the act of February 31, 1823, by commissioners appointed under that act; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. DOLITTLE presented the petition of Samuel Colt, praying an extension of his patent for an improvement in fire-arms; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

It also presented a communication from Samuel A. Clark and others, protesting against the granting of certain lands lying west of farm lot Nos. 1 to 23, inclusive, and between those lots and the Mississippi river, to H. L. Douman and others; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I present the memorial of Philip & Solomon and their associates, praying the privilege of constructing a horse railway in Georgetown and Washington; and move its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. The committee have had this whole subject under consideration; and in the course of this day I expect to have the bill which the committee has already reported before the Senate and discussed. For the time being, I move that the petition lie on the table.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know that I have any objection to its being laid on the table for today; but in case that bill should not get through, I should wish it to go to the committee, that they may bring it into consideration.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table for the present, if there be no objection.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. DURKEE, it was Ordered, That the memorial of citizens of Washington city, praying an examination and settlement of the claims of J. W. Nye, for furnishing horses and carriages for the House of Representatives, commanding Pennsylvania avenue, and for improving a lot of ground, on the site of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. YULEE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 342) to refund to the State of Florida certain moneys advanced by said State for military purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 343) amendatory of the act regulating the distribution of Potomac water throughout the city of Washington, approved March 3, 1859; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FITCH, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the message of the President of the United States, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 21st, a report of the Secretary of the Navy, accompanied by copies of instructions given to the officers of the United States naval forces on the coast of Mexico to protect the persons and property of the citizens of the United States, and copies of the official reports of Captain Jarvis and Commander Turner of the capture of two Mexican war steamers, and the causes which led to said capture, reported in favor of printing the usual number, which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print, and that two thousand additional copies be printed, of the report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a copy of the memorial of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel H. S. Roberts, relating to a reorganization of the militia of the United States, reported in favor of printing the usual number; which was agreed to.

CHARLES PORTERFIELD.

Mr. DURKIE. The House of Representatives yesterday sent to the Senate a bill (H. R. No. 943) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased. It was unnecessarily referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Inasmuch as the Committee on Revolutionary Claims have had the same subject under consideration and reported on it, I move that that reference be reconsidered, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. The motion was agreed to.

ALICE HUNT.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up the bill S. No. 233. It will not take a moment's time to consider it.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 233) for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas Hunt, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying per annum to the pensioner, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, from the 5th of January, 1860, to continue during life or widowhood.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. This bill, I think, does some injustice to this very excellent lady. It places her pension at twenty dollars a month. She was the wife of a captain, and is entitled to a captain's half pay. The half pay of a captain now is thirty-five dollars. I move to strike out "twenty dollars" and insert "thirty-five dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate amended, and the amendment was concurred in; and the bill, as amended, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

KATE D. TAYLOR.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask that bill No. 359, for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, be taken up. I think that it will occupy no time, as it is a case of the most crying necessity. She is the widow of Brevet Captain Taylor, who was lately killed in performing gallant service in the field in Oregon. She is poor, and left with two or three children.

Mr. BROWN. I am very reluctant, of course, to oppose anything that the Senator wishes—
Mr. CRITTENDEN. If it takes up any time, it shall not interfere with the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN. This day was set apart for the business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I will not interfere with the gentleman, if it takes any time.

Mr. BROWN. With the understanding that I am not to yield again, and that this bill is not to give rise to debate, I yield the floor.

The Chairman of the Committee on Pensions, and the bill (S. No. 359) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brevet Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brevet Captain Oliver H. P.

Taylor, on the pension roll, at the rate of thirty-five dollars per month, from the 17th of May, 1858, during life or widowhood, deducting the amount received through the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury, at the rate of $26 66 2/3 per month, under the fifteenth section of the act of 16th of March, 1850.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I only wish to recall this case, by a very brief statement, to the recollection and attention of Senators. The case of Captain Taylor is of recent occurrence. He was killed, in the course of the last two years, in the Indian expedition under the command of Colonel Sherman, while he was behaving very gallantly at the time of his death. As brevet captain, and in command of a company, he was compelled to occupy a very perilous situation; and did so with great gallantry, and lost his life. I believe he was placed at the rear of the little band with which he was associated, under the command of Colonel Slepston, and was killed in defending it against the attack of a large force. The only question before the committee was whether this lady should be entitled to the half pay of a lieutenant, or the half pay of a captain. They decided in favor of the latter, and entitled to the half pay of a captain; and I trust it will meet the approbation of every Senator. He was brevet captain at the time, and he was acting as captain of his company at the time; and at that character, and in that command, was exposed to the greatest danger to which he lost his life. I think, as he was acting as a captain at the time—being in command as a brevet captain—and as the perilous condition in which it placed him was the immediate cause of his death, nothing can be more just than to give his poor widow, with two or three little children, anything to sustain them but the pension which the Government shall allow her, the half pay of a captain.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further petitions and memorials, the Chair will call up the business for which this day was set apart. The first bill in reference to the District of Columbia on the Calendar is the bill Senate No. 62.

Mr. BROWN. Before proceeding to the consideration of District business, I submit a petition to the Senate, that the Mayors of Washington and Georgetown be allowed to come on the floor during the progress of their business. Perhaps they may have suggestions to make to us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection to that proposition.

PROVIDENT ASSOCIATION OF CLERKS.

The bill (S. No. 62) to amend "the Act to incorporate the Provident Association of Clerks in the civil Departments of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia," was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the charter as to allow any member of the association, on giving one month's notice to the president and board of officers, to withdraw from the association, and receive out of its funds and assets such sum as the president and board of officers may consider just and equitable, but in no case to exceed the amount he may have contributed, with interest at the rate of six per cent., nor his distributive share of the entire assets if distributed pro rata to family interest at the time of such withdrawal.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDRIA AND HAMPSHIRE RAILROAD.

The bill (S. No. 64) to authorize the extension and use of a branch of the Alexandria, Loudoun, and Hampshire railroad, within the city of Georgetown, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to inquire if this is a grant to run through the city?

Mr. BROWN. No. It is simply giving a Virginia company the privilege of crossing the Potomac, and establishing a depot in the city of Georgetown. That is all they ask.

The bill was passed.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. No. 76) for the benefit of public schools in the city of Washington, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to surrender no much of the fines and forfeitures heretofore to be collected in the District of Columbia as accrue to the United States, to the city of Washington for school purposes; and the amount so to be appropriated to the purpose of building permanent school-houses in the city of Washington, and to no other use; and when the whole sum so received shall amount to $50,000, the operations of this provision are to cease.

The bill further provides that the corporate authorities in the city of Washington may levy a special tax, not exceeding ten cents on each $100 worth of taxable property in the corporate limits of the city, for the benefit of public schools; and that whenever so raised by a special tax, the bill is officially notified by the Mayor that this tax has been levied and collected, it shall be his duty to pay from the Treasury of the United States, to the persons legally authorized to receive the school funds for the city of Washington, a sum equal to the amount so levied and collected, not more than $25,000 per annum are to be paid by the United States, and the payments are to continue for five years, unless Congress shall otherwise order.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARK. I think that bill had better be laid aside to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill cannot be put on its passage to-day.

The bill (S. No. 280) directing the conveyance of all of ground for the use of the public schools of Washington city, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It will be a direction to the Commissioner of Public Buildings to relinquish and convey to the corporation of Washington the right and title to the United States lot No. 14, in square No. 253, for the uses of the public schools, and for no other purpose; and the lot is not to be assigned or conveyed by the city corporation for any purpose whatsoever.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARKSBOURNE RAILWAY.

Mr. BROWN. I perceive that the next bill is the avenue railroad bill. Let us should get into a discussion on it, and defeat other measures to which I think there will be no objection, I propose that we pass that bill by for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that bill will be passed over informally, and the Chair will call up the other District bills.

GRAND LODGE OF ODD FELLOWS.

The bill (S. No. 332) to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to section four of the bill. That section provides that this bill shall not be construed to confer banking privileges. I understand that many of the corporations and individuals of the District exercise those privileges without right or law, and I desire to inquire whether it would be better simply to prohibit them from doing it? They may attempt to do it without right.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to an amendment of that sort.

Mr. CLARK. I offer the following amendment to section four: to strike out all after the enacting clause of the section, and insert:

That the said corporation shall not exercise banking privileges, or issue, or put in circulation, bank notes, or any other paper or coin, or device, or seal, or stamp.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to the amendment. It seems to me to be about the same as the section is now; but if the Senator prefers that phraseology, let it be so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

TAVERN AND OTHER LICENSES.

The bill (S. No. 951) to authorize the levy court to issue tavern and other licenses in the District of Columbia, was next considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to transfer from the circuit court of the District of Columbia to the levy court of Washington County the power to grant licenses to keepers of taverns and ordinaries, to hawkers and peddlers, billiard tables, bowling saloons, and auctioneers, in that part of the county of Washington beyond the corporate limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, under such regulations and penalties as the levy court may by law deem expedient.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GALLERY OF ARTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 287) to incorporate the National Gallery and School of Arts in the District of Columbia.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with amendments. The first amendment of the committee was on page 3, section three, line eleven, to strike out the word "law," and insert "the Constitution and laws of the United States;" so that it will read:

The trustees aforesaid shall hold their offices until the day of October, 1900, and until their successors shall be elected. And the said trustees shall have all necessary orders and by-laws for the complete organization, government, and administration of the institution herein established. They may appoint or elect a president and secretary of their own body, and all such officers, professors, or teachers, as in their may seem expedient, and may confer upon them such powers, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, as may to them seem proper to the end in view.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, line thirteen, to strike out the word "request," and insert "require;" so as to read: "and insert" "and the said books or journals shall at all times be open to the inspection and examination of the said subscribers and contributors, and when required by either House of Congress, it shall be the duty of the said trustees to furnish any information respecting the institution and its affairs which may be so required."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as a new section:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize said corporation to incur any note, interest, debt, scrip, or other evidence of debt, to be used as a currency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert, as a new section:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That this act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee some explanation of the objects of this bill for a gallery of art, from the casual reading which I have just given to it, that it is not an ordinary act of incorporation to gentlemen who desire to establish a school of art, but it is the creation of a school of art by Congress; and then it confers the control of that school of art upon sundry trustees of the act. That is the way I understand it; if that is so, I should like to know it.

Mr. BROWN. These gentlemen form a voluntary association, already entered into. They have made important contributions to art, and are offered a very important gift in the form of a lot and house, by a gentleman of fortune in this city. They want a corporate name, by which they can hold their property, and transact their business. I do not understand that we are doing anything more than simply giving a charter to a private association, already formed, under such restrictions as we think proper to impose.

Mr. GRIMES. Of course I should have no objection to such a bill as the Senator from Mississippi indicates. I not only would not object to that bill in favor of it; but this is a singularly drawn bill, at any rate, if that is the sole object of it. The first section enacts:

That there be, and hereby is, established in the District of Columbia, a gallery and school of arts, for the purpose of promoting the improvement of the fine arts, and their education to patriotic purposes, by means of exhibitions, libraries, museum, instruction, and any other practicable operations.

This section does not create any incorporation; but it declares that the part of Congress, that creates a school shall be established. Established by whom? Established by Congress, as I understand; by the authority that has the control of the municipal regulations of this District. The bill then goes on, in the succeeding sections, to say that certain men—keepers of the school—be trustees of this school for a limited time; and that those trustees shall have the power to provide for their successors by appointment. It is true, that at this time it does not take anything out of the Treasury. I have not given the bill any examination, except the simple reading of it now; but I apprehend that the design of the bill is really to attach this school to the Government as one of the permanent institutions of the Government, and I am fearful that such is to be the effect of it.

Mr. BROWN. I have no dream that there is any such purpose; but I have no objection to a provision being added to prevent such a use of it.

Mr. GRIMES. I judge solely from the manner in which the bill is framed. I have seen a great many acts of incorporation, but I have never yet seen where the Government is desired to establish a particular institution should exist, and then went on to confer the control of that institution, after having declared its existence, on certain trustees, and gave them authority to control it. It may be all right; I do not pretend to understand it. I only ask for an explanation.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will see by the concluding section of the bill, which we have offered as an amendment, that it is declared that this act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States; and putting that in, I think it is safe. If Congress does not want to give any money, if an application of that kind is made, it can repeal the charter.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I suggest to my friend from Mississippi to strike out of the first section from "Mississippi to strike out of the first section" and insert "hereby is," and then the objection of the Senator from Iowa will be met. That will leave it a permission to establish.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would suggest to the chairman this amendment: add after the word "Columbia," in the fourth line of the section, the words "by the persons hereinafter named." That makes it clearly and distinctly what the committee understood it, and what I have no doubt it now is.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would suggest by inserting after the word "Columbia," in the fourth line, the words "by the persons hereinafter named."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I think, to make the section sensible now, it is necessary to strike out the words "and hereby is," and insert "may be" before "be established." Then the section will read: "there may be established in the District of Columbia, by the persons hereinafter named, a gallery and school of arts."

Mr. GRIMES. That will do.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the Senate proceeded to consider it. The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON CITY RAILWAY.

Mr. BROWN. I now move to take up the railroad bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 201) in relation to a railway along Pennsylvania avenue and other avenues and streets in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill proposes to constitute Richard Wallace, George W. Riggs, Walter Lenox, Jonah D. Hoover, James M. Carlisle, William B. Todd, Charles W. Boteler, Jr., George Harrington, John F. Coyle, and their assigns, to be the trustees of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, with authority to construct and lay down a double-track railway, with the necessary switches and turnouts, in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, through and along the following avenues and streets: commencing on Bridge street, at its intersection with High street, or at such point on Bridge street, east thereof, in the city of Georgetown, as may be designated by the corporate authorities thereof, along Bridge street to its intersection with the street running to the tubular bridge, across the Potomac river, to the city of Pennsylvania avenue, in the city of Washington; along the avenue to Fifteenth street west; along that street south to the avenue; along the avenue to the foot of the Capitol; thence around the northern boundary of the Capitol grounds to the northern gate thereof, from the north to the southern gate; thence along their southern boundary easterly to Pennsylvania avenue; along the avenue to Eighth street east, or Garrison street, and along that street due south to the navy-yard gate; with a lateral road connecting the main road with New Jersey avenue at its intersection with the depot of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company; also a single-track railway commencing at the intersection of Seventh street west with M street north, and running south along that street to the south end of the avenue, and intersecting it with the road on the avenue, with the right to run public carriages thereon drawn by horse power, receiving therefor a rate of fare not exceeding five cents per passenger for any distance between any and all of the termini of the roads. The bill contains various provisions relating to the franchise of the municipal authorities of Washington and Georgetown, as to the manner of laying the railway, the time in which it shall be done, &c.

Mr. BROWN. It is very well known to Senators. Mr. President, that I have heretofore opposed the construction of any railroad upon any avenue; I am not less opposed to it now than I have always been; but in that position I have not been sustained in the Senate or out of it. It became perfectly apparent during the last Congress that a large majority of the Senate was in favor of a railroad upon the avenue, and it is a fact which was left to me, as the organ of the Senate for the people of this District, now to consider this second question: to whom should the franchise be given? There were before the committee three propositions: one, to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Company, incorporated by the State of Maryland; one from what was denominated the Citizens' Company; and the other from the association of gentlemen named in this bill. The Committee on the District of Columbia, in determining to favor these names, were influenced by considerations which I will state. First, in so much as relates to the Metropolitan Railroad Company, we found that that had been an existing company for six or seven years; that it had never, during all that time, made one inch of progress towards the construction of the road; it made an call of some eight per centage—I do not know how much—three or four or five per cent; it was paid by some subscribers to the stock, but nothing was done. The company seemed to be languishing—in fact, it died, in everything but name.

Mr. COLLAMER. What was that company incorporated to do?

Mr. BROWN. To build a railroad from a point on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, known as the Point of Rocks; a point some fifty miles, probably, east of Harper's Ferry, Georgetown, &c. It made no progress; it seemed to have no vitality; seemed indolent, heretofore, to do anything, and, in fact, did not do anything. Its directors came, through their agent, and represented to the committee that if this privilege of constructing a railroad on the avenue should be given to them, then, out of the profits arising from it, they were going to construct a railroad from Georgetown to the Point of Rocks—a work that is going to cost $3,000,000, I think, by the lowest estimate. We did not believe a word of that; we thought it was a piece of humbuggery, and dismissed the whole thing.

Then we considered the proposition of the so-called Citizens' Company. We found that there were some three, or four, or five hundred persons, who had subscribed on paper, agreeing to take so much stock in their company, but that none of their representative made before the committee seemed to be this; that the stock was to be distributed among a vast number of people, and was not to be monopolized and taken into the hands of any particular persons. The limitation, I think, carried in reporting the bill which came from the committee. I concurred in it, first, because I believed the character of the corporations was such as to insure its completion in the shortest possible time. That was the leading and controlling motive that operated upon my mind. If it was desirable at all, it was desirable that the work should be confided to those in whose hands we might have the most confidence of securing the rapid completion of the work.

The measure, which is now submitted by the Senator from Maryland was also antagonized to this bill in the committee; and the same reasons were urged there that have been urged here in its favor. In my opinion, in the opinion of the committee, they are not well founded; and I concur with the chairman in saying that your judgment, the Metropolitan Railroad Company may be regarded as a defunct thing, whether they get this charter or not; and I think it is the best illustration, legislatively, that I have ever known of what Virgil describes as blinding dead carcasses to bring bodies. This corporation, I say, in my judgment, is to be regarded as a defunct corporation. Some six or seven years ago persons subscribed money to it, but they never paid a dollar, or very few dollars.

Mr. BROWN. I will state in that connection, if my colleague on the committee will allow me, that the city of Georgetown made a subscription to the Metropolitan Railroad Company, and subsequently withdrew the subscription and transferred the money to the Loudoun and Hampshire Roads.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was going to make the same remark. They subscribed, I think, on paper about half a million dollars—a nominal sum. Perhaps enough to make the survey was paid in, and to have their charter the work commenced—quite a successful start, but it may be said to have the limitation in their charter, which was for a railroad from Georgetown to the Point of Rocks. It was designed to save the angle made by the Baltimore and Ohio railroad from Harper's Ferry to the Relay House, and thence to this place. The interest I think is some four miles, and the country between the Point of Rocks and Georgetown, as the Senator from Maryland I think has well said, cannot justify the expectation of very large dividends if the road ever should be running. In my judgment, it never could pay running expenses. If it could command traffic as it draws from the West at the Point of Rocks, and secure that travel to this place, it might be of some value; certainly of vastly more value than it can be now, because the Loudoun and Hampshire road is now constructed some ninety miles, and is to tap the western road some eighty miles west of the Point of Rocks, and will thus secure the western travel to this place which it was designed originally to secure over the Metropolitan route from the Point of Rocks to Georgetown. It is a direct road, and comes within about six days of any corporation on the south, and has the right to connect with Georgetown directly, by a bill which we have passed this morning.

Now, my friend, looking at all the antecedents of the Metropolitan road—looking at the fact that its promoters have not been successful in their efforts, looking at the fact that it has lumbered all this time, and will lumber always, in my judgment, whether you give it this franchise or not—I say it presents no case which commends it to our favorable judgment. I have my own opinions about this railway. I have formed them from the best opinions I can gather. My judgment is, that this bill, which the committee has reported, will not for years afford a sufficient remuneration to the men who invest their capital in the enterprise. I think it is not a profitable investment, and in our large cities, where there must necessarily be very much more travel than there is here, these roads are failing to be remunerative. A road from Georgetown to the Capital gate might be excellent property; but when you compel the corporation to carry the mail and passengers out of the yard, and when you compel them to go from the junction of Seventh street to the northern limits of the city or to M street, these branches must necessarily be non-paying. Taken as a whole, the effect will be beneficial to the city; but when you take the road as a whole, and as it is in this bill, I do not believe it will be as remunerative as it ought to be to any corporations who may construct the work. But suppose it is largely remunerative: what is the clause in your bill? At any time within ten years you may reduce the fares—

Mr. PEARCE. After ten years.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let me see:

Provided, however, that at any time within ten years the directors of said road, the Congress of the United States shall have power to alter, fix, and regulate the fare, &c.

And then, I think, after every succeeding five years. Suppose the work should be found exceedingly remunerative; suppose all that the Metropolitan gentlemen say of it should turn out to be true, and it should be vastly productive—so productive that you can build other roads in neighboring States upon it, what then would be the duty of Congress? It would be, to reduce the fare to that limitation which should only make it a paying road to the corporations; for I take it the good people of this city and those who come here ought not to be taxed in a right within their municipal boundaries with rates so high that they shall be compelled to contribute to build roads in adjoining States. I do not myself believe it will be very remunerative; but assuming it should be vastly so, then I say the power which Congress has retained to itself in this charter should be, for me, my judgment would be exercised, and very properly.

Mr. PEARCE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? I think he does not correctly understand the proposition. It is that, at any time within ten years, Congress may alter and fix the fare, and, during the succeeding five years, that they may at once bring the charge down; but they may at any time within ten years provide in advance for the charge for the succeeding five years.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand it precisely so; but I understand that you must have a series of years; you must have a sufficient time to test the whole work, and see what it will produce. Two years, perhaps, would hardly be a fair test; but after you have tested it, I understand the bill precisely the Senator does. Whenever that time comes, if the fare is not less than thirty cents, and you find it is paying twenty-five per cent.—I do not believe it will pay three, but assume that it will pay twenty-five per cent.—what then will be the duty of Congress? I say its plain and palpable duty will be to exercise its power and to reduce the fare in this class of work, because you ought not to tax the people in this District exorbitantly to build roads in neighboring States.

I am aware that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland contains a provision that the road shall be completed within six months, while the bill reported by the committee gives to the parties eighteen months. It was a question well considered in the committee whether that should not be reduced to twelve; and I am inclined now to think it might be reduced to twelve months. I do not mean to impute to him—conveys a suspicion upon the whole thing. I affirm that it cannot be done in six months. I affirm that it cannot be prudently and economically completed in six months; and the result would be that the attempt to attempt to complete the work, they would come and say, "we have exercised due diligence; we have invested our property here; now you must extend the time to us; you must give us sufficient additional time in which to complete the work." The whole matter in the Senator's proposition is so short, that instead of commending itself to my judgment as favorable, it creates, I confess, a suspicion. I have no opinions of my own that I form on my own experience upon these points; but I speak of the amendment submitted to me by practical men—by men who know all about the work—and I rely upon them, as I am bound to rely on them, for the best information I can have. Now I believe the best thing we can do will be to be of this matter; to pass the bill; to give the franchise to those who will complete a special and ability enough to insure the completion of the work in the shortest period of time, and be rid of it ourselves, and have the work in process of construction.

Mr. PEARCE. As to the impossibility of completing the railway in six months, that may well be the Senator's opinion; but I am of an entirely different opinion, and I have formed my opinion not on any information given to me by anybody else, but upon my observation of the time within which other railroads, of equal extent, have been laid down in other cities. There is no grading to be done. It is a very easy difficulty at the present, put down your timbers, lay your rails upon them, and the road is done. If three miles of such railroad cannot be completed in six months, then, sir, the company that cannot do it has not the slightest particle of energy, and never will do it. It is not a charge of any difficulty at all. The great difficulty in laying down a railroad is preparing the track—the bed of the road; but here it is prepared already; the streets are graded. There is nothing on earth to be done but to take up the stones with which the streets are paved, and lay down the timbers, and iron, and they have the money, as they may they have, they can easily lay down the rails within the time required. It is not a bogus proposition. These men are not the men to impose on the Government. They would not be willing to make themselves ridiculous by offering to do what they could not do. The men who are named have the means among themselves. Mr. Ogle Taylor himself has ample ability to build the whole of this road, if he pleases; and there are several gentlemen of large property among them, as I know. They can do it, and do it within six months.

Now, in regard to the remonstrance which was read by the Senator from Mississippi, I have received a note signed by one of the Messrs. Parker, for the firm of George & Thomas Parker, in which they declare that their name has not been taken from that memorial against the grant to the Metropolitan railroad. They say they signed it under a misapprehension.

Mr. Parker says:

"I was under the impression they only contemplated going to the Georgetown road, but, on seeing their bill, I found they intended going to the Navy-Yard, and down Seventh street, from the boundary to the river; and therefore, I am in the habit of saying in preference to the memorial."

There is something added, which I do not exactly understand, but perhaps, in all fairness, I ought to read it:

"But I am still in favor of the Citizens' road, believing that it is based on principles of public and private property. We are authorized to have any number of the memorial."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a third proposition.

Mr. PEARCE. That, I understand, is abandoned. There were three; one is abandoned, and the only propositions now here are the one submitted by the Senator from Mississippi and the one submitted by myself. Then in regard to the remonstrance of gentlemen who had subscribed to the Metropolitan railroad, I have a list of their names, and the amounts of their subscriptions. Their subscriptions amounted to $4,450; so that the remonstrants are as $4,450 to about $500,000. I shall not trouble the Senate with any extended discussion of this matter. We have had about it a great deal last year, and I desire to say just as little as is necessary.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President, I have an objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, which is conclusive with me. I do not think they have the power to pass any such proposition. I am afraid that it will involve this whole matter in inextricable legal difficulty, and the result will be that the construction of this railroad will be indefinitely postponed. There is a corporation now existing, organized under the laws of the State of Maryland, for the building of a railroad from one point to another; and the proposition is that Congress shall give to the directors of that road—I think the amendment is not very clear whether it is to be given to the directors or to the stockholders—the right to give the franchise to the directors, as a corporation organized under a new name here, the power to build a different road; that contemplated by the original charter; and it provides that that road, when thus built, shall be practically the property of the Maryland corporation. I think that is a very objectionable proposition. This proposition is made to us without the memorial of the stockholders of the company, but upon the memorial of the directors, in opposition to the remonstrance of some of the stockholders, at least.

Now, sir, there is one principle of law, which I believe has been established by the concurrent jurisprudence of nearly every State in our Union, and is well established in England. It is this: that when a corporation has been once organized for a particular purpose, and men have put their money into that corporation on the contract that their money shall be devoted to that purpose, no legislative power can take their money and devote it to anything else, and that the protest of a single member of the corporation will suffice to arrest the execution of any such law, the powers thus exercised being beyond the legislative power, being one in violation of contract. And any man who has signed his name to the Maryland corporation, agreeing to give his money towards building a railroad from Georgetown to the Point of Rocks, has the right by injunction to arrest that corporation from engaging in the construction of another and different road. That, I think, is clear.

That is beyond dispute. Now, the honorable Senator from Maryland says that there are only a few of these corporators who protest. That is all that is apparent to us now. Suppose this bill passes in the shape he proposes; suppose the true effect of this amendment be to give this power over the District railroad to the Maryland corporation; how is the money to be raised? Will you levy your installments upon the Maryland stockholders? How will you enforce their payment?

Mr. COLLAMER. Will the gentleman allow me to say that there is no provision in this amendment for making other corporations liable?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I was going to call attention to that in a moment. If this is a power granted to the Maryland corporation, where is your power to levy an installment towards building a road in the District on any one of those corporators? You cannot give it by this bill. Without their assent, you cannot give power to their directors to call on them for installments to build a road in Washington city. The amendment seems to have contemplated that difficulty, and endeavored to avoid it, or rather to get rid of it; and how? It provides that certain gentlemen, to be named, "having been duly elected and qualified, the first named as president and the others as directors of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, heretofore incorporated by the Legislature of the State of Maryland," they, and they alone, are to be the directors of the corporation, and they are hereby, created a body corporate, under the name of the Metropolitan Railroad Company.

Then the frame of the proposed bill is, that the directors of the Maryland company and their successors in office, for the Metropolitan Railroad Company for the cities of Washington and Georgetown. Well, now, if they are the corporators, and they alone—and that seems to be all that is contemplated—can we expect that these six or eight gentlemen are going to pay out of their pockets the money to build a railroad in Washington and Georgetown, with a provision that all the profits resulting from that investment shall be paid to a different corporation? We cannot expect any such public spirit from any body of gentlemen. I apprehend that all that they propose, but they propose, after they themselves, the directors of this Maryland company and their successors—shall have been incorporated into a Metropolitan Railroad Company, to ask the stockholders of the Maryland company to join them. Suppose some of those stockholders decline; what will be the result? Those that agree will be the members of the new company. They will be the members of this new company on condition that the money they put in this new road, and the profits of the new road, shall, in effect, belong to a different corporation; that those who decline to subscribe to this new corporation shall have the profits of the new corporation, and be subjected to none of the responsibilities. It is very easy to know what will be the result. The stockholders of the Maryland corporation will say: "We do choose to subscribe, and we have undertaken, and have undertaken, by this bill, to build the road, and to give us the profits, and there is no necessity for us to subscribe anything; we are to have all the profits without subscription."

That is the form of this proposition; that is the way it reads; that is the way it is framed. The measure is impracticable. You cannot give to the directors of a corporation power to build a different road; you certainly cannot do it without the unanimous vote of the stockholders; and you frame your bill here so as to render it absolutely certain that the stockholders will not vote to subscribe, because, by the frame of the bill, they are to get all the benefits without subscription. The whole of the profits are to go to them, whether they subscribe or not. The result is, then, we are to take it for granted that these few gentlemen, who are directors of another company, will compel the stockholders of this company to subscribe to this railroad, for the pleasure of giving its benefits to another corporation. That certainly will be the practical effect of the amendment. We may see, by examining that practical effect, what the result will be—that the road will not be built, and this subject will be before us again next session.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have but a single word of explanation to make. I was a great deal perplexed, last session, between these two projects. Representations were made to me in favor of each by highly respectable gentlemen; but, thinking that the Metropolitan road, if carried out, might be serviceable to the country, I made up my mind to vote for its proposition with some hesitation. It was urged then that it would merely have the effect of defeating the movement. We adopted it, and incorporated it, and then the whole matter fell dead. Now, as I am of opinion that it is better to allow the people here to have a road, I intend to vote against this amendment. We have not tried either measure; but all the indications lead me to suppose that we are more likely to get the road built by incorporating the company from Mississippi and of the committee, and therefore I shall vote for it, although I gave the preference, last winter, to the other proposition. I may say further, that while a good many representations have been made in favor of each, by persons who felt an interest in the subject, more of those citizens who seemed not to be the stockholders were anxious for the first proposition than any other, seemingly in the belief that they would get the benefit of a road by it; and as at present advised, therefore, in addition to the strong objection to the second measure, I shall vote for the first from Louisiana, I shall give my vote for the original proposition of the committee, and against the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe it is in order to perfect the original bill before the vote is taken on the substitute; and I offer the following as an independent section, which I hope the Senator from Mississippi will accept:

And be it further enacted, That the stockholders to said company shall be liable, each in his or her individual capacity, for the debts and liabilities of said company, never contracted, to the amount of stock held by each.

Mr. BROWN. I have no right to accept an amendment to a bill reported by a committee. The bill is not mine; but I think the amendment is right, and I shall vote for it myself.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I will not deny that there is much force in the objections which have been made by the Senator from Louisiana, some of which had only occurred to me this morning. I never read the bill which I presented as a substitute last year, and I have since made some slight amendments to it; but I should be glad to have an opportunity of considering this matter a little further. If the bill may be laid over for a few days, I will investigate it carefully, and I do not doubt but I can obviate the objections which have been made by the Senator from Louisiana, I shall withdraw the objection to the other bill.

Mr. BROWN. My only objection to that is this: this day has been given to the business of the District of Columbia; and if we postpone the bill, we know enough of the Senate to predict, I believe, in business, to know that we shall hardly ever get to it again, or at least, not in time for the House of Representatives to act on it during this session. I know something of the delays there; and I know that the Senate will respect the necessities of the day, and from week to week, and I should much rather dispose of the bill to-day.

Mr. PEARCE. That potent little phrase does not apply here. It is not the case of the other House, and you must therefore give them as much time as possible.

Mr. PEARCE. It will only make a difference of two or three days. Let the Senator make Wednesday; then, if all opposition be withdrawn to the other project, I take it for granted it will pass through without difficulty; certainly it will without any difficulty from me.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly; if the Senator wants until Wednesday to examine the proposition, and we can have any sort of understanding that the Senate will take up the bill and act upon it, then, I have no objection to its being even a Wednesday week. That will still give the House time enough to act. The only reason why I insisted on considering it to-day was, that this day in the Senate had been assigned to this kind of business.

If there be a general understanding of the Senate that on Wednesday we shall be allowed to bring it up and act on it, I have no objection to postponing it; but I do not want the bill to be postponed very long, lest it be lost in the House of Representatives for mere want of time.

Mr. PEARCE. I have no desire to postpone it, for I am really anxious to have this railway made.

Mr. HAMLIN. Before there is any disposition of that sort made, I want to offer an amendment to the first section of the bill reported by the committee, and I propose that it shall be read in committee. It is to add the name of Gilbert Vanderwerker after the name of Walter S. Cox, making him one of the corporators, as he was in the original bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before the bill is disposed of—I mean, before it is taken up in committee, I suggest by the Senator from Maryland—I move to strike out the seventh section, which is in these words:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That said body corporate shall buy of Gilbert Vanderwerker all the real estate, houses, omnibuses, and barns, used by him for the purposes of his line of omnibuses now running along Pennsylvania avenue, between Georgetown and the Navy-Yard, and that said body corporate shall be bound by two disinterested persons; one to be named by said body corporate, and the other by said Vanderwerker. And in case of a dispute, the same shall be referred upon oath amount, it shall be their duty to call in some third disinterested person to act with them in fixing said amount; and it shall be the duty of said body corporate to pay to said Vanderwerker, for such real estate, houses, omnibuses, and barns, whatever amount said persons, or any two of them, shall determine.

I know none of these parties, and have no interest whatever in giving the building of these horse railroads to one person more than another; but the public interest is to authorize anybody to construct these railroads in the city of Washington who will best accommodate the public. Now, sir, I know no reason why the persons who are to build these roads should be saddled with the purchase of all the omnibuses in the city of Washington. It may be said that this Mr. Vanderwerker has invested a large amount of money in omnibus lines, and that if you authorize the construction of horse railroads he will be a sufferer. This is but one of the misfortunes that overtake men in business every day. Suppose an individual builds a tavern stand on some important road; it is valuable only as a tavern stand; travelers stop there; and as the public exigencies require the construction of a railroad that takes all the travel past him. He has to suffer that inconvenience. He embarked in the enterprise of keeping a hotel, with the knowledge that improvements might be made which might take travel away from him. Those improvements are made, and he is a sufferer. It is the same with omnibuses. Why may a builder of a house? I know not whether he has made money out of his omnibus lines, or has lost money. It has nothing to do with the public interest. We are legislating for the public, and I am opposed to granting special favors to individuals; and I see no reason why we should buy omnibuses more than we should buy out the public hacks in the city of Washington. I trust that the action will be stricken out. If the company we are incorporating wishes to purchase the omnibuses, let them do so. Let the Senator, Gilbert Vanderwerker, they are at liberty to do it; let them do so; but do not let us compel them to purchase these things at a valuation that is to be put upon them by parties who may be selected.

Mr. PEARCE. If the section which the Senator proposes to strike out were offered by some gentleman who desired to protect Gilbert Vanderwerken, and against the consent of the corporation, it would become rather a different case from that which is actually before the Senate. It seems these parties have arranged with Vanderwerken. This is his bill, prepared according to their views. As I understand, they are willing to effect this arrangement with him; and if they are, I do not really see that we are doing any injustice, or forcing any bounty to individuals. It is a matter of arrangement between them, as I understand. If the parties agree to it, I really do not see that there is any difficulty.

Mr. BENJAMIN. There is another consideration. We have had experience in this matter in other States, and there is a public consideration making this action necessary. If a new company is to put a superior line of communication upon a line already served by Mr. Vanderwerken with his omnibuses. If you pass the bill, and make no provision such as is made in this section, the result will be that the omnibus proprietor, finding that he is going to be driven out, will withdraw his omnibuses, dispose of them as best he can, and in the interval the public will be deprived of the accommodation they require. By degrees, as this railroad is constructed, it will connect with the line of omnibuses to the extent that it will. By leaving the line of omnibuses and the railroad line in the same hands the public accommodation is subserved, and the public are provided with means of travel while the work is going on. If you leave these two lines in opposing hands, Mr. Vanderwerken, the independent proprietor, or he can find means of disposing of his property, will do so; or, otherwise, will withdraw it, and the public will be deprived, in the mean time, of all accommodations, either by omnibus or railroad. It has, therefore, been made in these charters, to require of those who build the railroads to take the lines of omnibuses, and then they continue the two works together, and keep the public constantly accommodated. We found it so in New Orleans, I know. After several attempts it was found that the lines of city railroads without some arrangement of that kind; and such a provision as this has worked exceedingly well. In theory, perhaps the Senator from Illinois would be right; but really practically, this mode of arranging between the old lines and the new is found to subserve the public interest.

Mr. HAMLIN. It was stated by gentlemen, who I supposed were well informed on the subject, to the committee, that it was the practice in our cities where horse railroads were laid down and lines of omnibuses were run over the continuous route, to make a provision for the rights of the omnibus owners. I think it is right. I have no doubt about it. The case of the hackmen in this city furnishes no parallel whatever. They go all around; they go everywhere; they go anywhere; they have no straight single line route, such as they have in New York, where thousands of dollars invested in a single project. They may have two or three sets of horses, and perhaps two or three coaches; but they have no such amount invested as an omnibus proprietor, who they run on one continuous line.

But, aside from all that, there is still another reason, which, it seems to me, ought to satisfy every gentleman here, even my friend from Illinois; and that is, that the company make no objection to it; that they want his horses; they want him to stay in his line of land on the route; they want to build additional stables for the horses they will use upon their line; and the only property which they do not want would be the omnibuses, and that would be the only amount of property they would be required to buy, or to share the loss of should it be so. This is a very strong case. If this be the understanding between the parties, I think we are a little more swift than justice, to step in between the parties and say: "You shall not deal in equities as you please." Then you may say: "Why is the section here?" They can do it outside of this. That is a very strong case. If they may disagree as to the amount, and this simply provides the ultimate method in which that disagreement shall be settled, if there is one.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If it be true that those parties have made an arrangement already, we need not legislate about it. What have we, as legislators, to do with this buying of horses or buying of omnibuses? We have nothing to do with it, and it is the principle that I object to. Why, sir, a State might just as well, when it chartered a railroad along the Mississippi, put in a clause that the company should buy out all the steamboats along the river. There would be exactly as much propriety in it.

Mr. COLLAMER. Why not buy out the hackmen?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I stand before you mighty with as much propriety compel this company to buy out the hackmen. If we are incorporating a company here that can afford to give a bonus to this omnibus line, we are incorporating it on principles which are unjust to the public. Instead of allowing them to charge five cents, allow them to charge but four. I presume, if you would allow them to charge ten cents for every passenger, they would not only agree to buy out the omnibus lines, but buy out all the hackmen. I do not intend to give a bonus to somebody else.

We are interested here, in legislation for this people and for the public, to look to it that we grant no privileges which shall amount to a burden upon the public; and when we get these railroads let us get them upon the cheapest plan. It cannot be otherwise than that this company expect in some way to get the money which they pay as a bonus for the privileges that they are to obtain by the passage of this act. They will get it back, I suppose, in a high tariff of fares. I think that the principle of the section is all wrong. It certainly cannot be here, if there is an arrangement, as the Senator from Maryland suggests, of direct trading, by which these corporations agree to purchase out this omnibus line. We have nothing to do with it. It is their business, not ours as legislators, if they cannot agree as to price. I suppose the bill is not prepared in this way, and I do not see how it is to their interest to do so; and I am not for compelling them to purchase them. I think we ought not to establish such a precedent.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. While we are legislating for the District, I suppose that it is our true purpose to legislate upon facts as they exist. There is already upon a public line of communication from Georgetown to the Navy-Yard, run with horses and omnibuses; and when you get your railroad laid down, you will still have omnibuses, but they will be drawn away by horses, and they will be running upon an iron track. We do not want both means of communication. We want the one, and we want to get rid of the other. I desire, for one, to get rid of the old omnibuses, if we have the railroad, for we do not want them both; and I think that an arrangement has been made, by which the omnibuses draw upon ordinary wheels over the cobble-stone pavements can be got rid of, and omnibuses substituted to be drawn with iron wheels and over an iron track. I decidedly prefer the latter. That arrangement having been made, as I understand, and the committee having reported the bill in this way, and the corporations being willing to accept the burden of removing what would become a nuisance upon the avenue, if they have a horse railroad—removing this omnibus line, the burden of the section remaining in the bill just as it is.

Mr. BROWN. The committee had very distinct reasons for reporting this section of the bill. Mr. Vanderwerken came here when every citizen and every stranger in Washington was subjected to delay and inconvenience by hackmen and their put on a cheap mode of travel between Washington and Georgetown. It seemed that nobody in Washington had enterprise enough to do that; at least, it was not done, or it was not efficiently done. He invested a large sum of money in the enterprise, and the result of four or five or six years before he can by any possibility have been remunerated, such a your go-ahead policy that you propose to supersede his lumbering omnibuses by a railroad, and thus break up his business. Then, what are you going to do? You are going to grant a monopoly to some seven or eight or ten gentlemen! Do not care whether you take these persons or strike them out and put others in, it amounts to that at last—you break upon one man in his business in favor of some ten or a dozen others in their business. That one man thus broken up, and especially if he be an enterprising man like Gilbert Vanderwerken, who came here and established this cheap line of travel when nobody else would do it, ought to be protected. It would be a great outrage if you did not protect him. He has rendered a great public service to the country; he has rendered a great public service to Washington, to every citizen and stranger here; and he deserves the protecting hand of his Government.

Nor is there anything new in this. For a long time it was the policy of the Government, when one man undertook another in carrying the mail, to require him to take the stock of the old contract at a fair valuation. The Government recognized the principle and enforced it; and yet that was not giving to the man who underbid the other the monopoly; it was only giving him the benefit of the old bid. But here you grant a certain privilege a monopoly; an important franchise; one which it is supposed at least to be worth a great deal of money. To do that, you propose to break up a citizen in his business, established by his enterprise; and the bill simply proposes to protect that citizen to regularity in the payment of the important franchise that they shall, in some way, indemnify the man who is broken up in business. I think the section is right. I think it the most important section in the whole bill. I cannot surrender it. The Senate may strike it out; but they will do it against the strongest protest.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for the yeas and nays. I think there is an important principle involved in it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe the section will not be stricken out. It will be recollected by most Senators present that a bill was introduced two years ago, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, giving the franchise for constructing this road to Mr. Vanderwerken and his associates. That bill failed to become a law through the opposition, as I am informed, of the very parties who are now petitioning for the right to make the road. I am in favor of the original bill, and would vote for it if it were before us, giving the franchise to Mr. Vanderwerken and his associates; but inasmuch as the bill now before us is one which actually defeated him and his associates from receiving this franchise will be compelled to pay him for his stock now on hand.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. All that could reconcile me to vote for such a provision as this, would be the assumption that the Government had been upon by these corporations and the gentlemen owning this omnibus line. If that is the case; if they are willing to take the grant of the franchise proposed to be made to them by this bill, and to pay this gentleman, I have no objection; but if it is to be imposed upon them, upon any ground of equity or justice, independent of agreement, I am opposed to it. I do not see why you might not as well make them buy all the hacks in the town—perhaps not all for the same reasons, but on the same principle. If we do not do this, and if we lose by it, let them indemnify everybody who loses by it. I think you had as well clog the great railroad that runs from New York to Albany or to Buffalo, by paying all the wagoners thereby thrown out of employment, and for all the wagons rendered useless, as you do this. I do not see any justice in it; but if it be true that there has been an arrangement made to this effect, I am perfectly willing that the owner of the omnibuses shall be indemnified by these parties.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Allow me to inquire what is the object of the provision, if there is an ar-management? We only force them to do it by this section of the bill.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. They might want this to sanction it; but if the fact exists, I suppose it is known to my honorable friend from Mississippi who advocates this bill. If not, I cannot vote for any such imposition.

The question here is asked by year and nays, resulted—yeas, 9; nays, 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bingham, Crittenden, J. Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Green, Grimes, Turner, and Trumbull—8. NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Brewster, Briggs, Burdick, Chandler, Clark, Chittenden, Collamer, Diodotie, Douglas, Fish, Ford, Gwin, Hamilton, Harlan, Hiram, Johnson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Lester, Mason, Nichols, Olcott, Pearce, Polk, Powell, Rice, Sebastian, Stewart, Simmons, Tompkins, and Wade—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. If there can be no other amendment proposed to the bill, I desire to make a preliminary motion before—

Mr. HUNTER. I am inclined very much to think that the bill ought to be amended, so as to take the road along another street, and not drive Pennsylvania avenue. It seems to me the best route would be to take the Capital gate along by the Post Office, Interior, and Treasury Departments, so as to save Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. BROWN. That is a question that can be considered. I think with the Senator from Virginia, but nobody had submitted any such proposition, and it was concluded by the committee that if one asked for bread, it was hardly worth while to offer him a stone. No one asked to run a railroad on the line indicated by the Senator from Virginia. I thought myself it was the most proper way to run the road, and I believed it would be more profitable; but those who petitioned for this franchise did not think so; they have not asked for it; and we have no assurance that anybody would build a road there if you granted the privilege. These parties have not asked it; and I supposed that when you were allowed to do a thing, we either granted them the privilege or denied it, and did not say to them, "You can do this; but you can do something else."

Mr. HUNTER. This would not coerce the parties to pursue this route. If they did not think it profitable they would not take the route. The whole result would be to present this issue: that they might either make a road along that line, or else have none at all. So far as I am concerned, I am not at present willing to see a road through the avenue, though I should be very willing that they should have a road through the Capitol. I have sort I have indicated, if it would suit them. If nothing else will suit them but a road on Pennsylvania avenue, I have not made up my mind to vote for the bill.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator and myself come very near agreeing. I have said to-day, I said a dozen times during the last session, that I was opposed, and I am opposed now, to putting a railroad on the avenue; but I found, on consultation with Senators, that they were determined to grant the privilege to nobody. I think the majority of the Senate are now in favor of a railroad upon the avenue. I have no doubt about it. Then it simply became, as I said this morning before, a question as to whom you would grant the franchise. But no one has asked for the privilege of building a railroad on the line indicated by the Senator from Virginia. If anybody wants it, and will ask the privilege, I am for granting it; but as nobody has ever asked for it, I see no necessity of granting it.

Mr. PEARCE. I hope the bill will not be amended in this particular. A railway along those other streets, and not along Pennsylvania avenue, would neither be productive to the owners of the road, nor beneficial to the public. That is the great thoroughfare of the city. The great throngs of passers from one end of the city to the other go along the avenue, and it is a proper place for a railway, if we have one at all. I would just as soon have none, as one put out on some distant streets.

In truth, there is no manner of objection to it. There is no inconvenience to the public in having a passenger railway laid along the avenue, as has been done, along this great avenue. Its immense width will make it a very easy thing to lay down this railroad, with all the width desired for it, and yet no inconvenience to the traffic in cars, carriages, or any other way. The rails are to be level with the street. They are sunk; but the roll of the rail is on a level with the street. Carriages can pass it with perfect facility. It interrupts no one; and the truth is, it is vastly more convenient and less disagreeable in every particular than omnibuses, which are constantly running. You have no noise from one of these passenger railway cars—none of that disturbance, which is very disagreeable from omnibuses, and which is a great inconvenience. It does not destroy the avenue. The company keep it in repair for three feet outside of their tracks. I cannot see a single reason for driving the railway from Pennsylvania avenue. The Senator's is a very reason for running it out of that avenue.

Mr. BROWN. I believe the Senator from Virginia has not offered the amendment. There is no proposition to amend before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor.) If there be no other amendments offered to either of the propositions before the Senate, the question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, to strike out the original bill, after the enacting clause, and insert what has been proposed.

Mr. BROWN. If that be the only proposition to be taken up, I will be glad to do so. I have expressed a desire to look into the legal question submitted by the Senator from Louisiana, I will move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until next Saturday; but, preliminarily to that, I would ask the Senate to allow me to postpone the bill until after the consideration of District business, so as to make it absolutely certain that this question will come up on that day.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Before that is done, I should like to be heard, and I think I may express what is the opinion of the majority of this body in regard to it. It is, that in all human probability next Saturday we shall not be able to get a quorum on this matter. Already the subject has been not only discussed, but decided upon by the majority of the body. If there is any new matter which the Senator from Maryland may find hereafter that he thinks would change and affect the minds of men, there is another House that is expressly provided where everything may be developed. The bill has been already passed by the Senate, and I do not know why, when there is a majority here who are disposed to settle this question now, are we to have it postponed and come up constantly hereafter? Why should we set apart another day and go through again the whole of this discussion? For what reason? I do not know. I do not know the Senator from Maryland to inquire, when the whole case has been prepared and put in his hands heretofore? I do not see any propriety in it. I do not think it is demanded of this body. I think, if we should do this, we shall come to no conclusion on this case. There can be no case stated that any member feels an earnest interest in, in regard to which he may not say that the arguments on the other side have shown something he did not expect, and if he is allowed a little more opportunity to modify his opinion, he may be able, very possibly, to satisfy the whole body or if not he will abandon his position. I do not see that it ought to be done.

I hope very much that we shall not be compelled to give another day to this subject. The subject has been decided by the majority of the body on by the other House. If there is reasonable ground to oppose and defeat the measure before it goes to the other House, the facts can certainly be communicated there; and we must have some confidence in that branch. In fact, we know, from the superior difficulty of passing any measure there, that they will not consent to pass this measure if they think it ought not to be passed. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not concede the postponement. If he does I cannot say that, for one, I shall be here next Saturday, and I shall be glad to see much more of the many Senators who would repeat with me that they feel no assurance that they can be here next Saturday to listen to unnecessary discussion on a subject that has been already fully debated.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator from Maryland is quite satisfied to allow the vote to be taken upon his amendment now, I should be gratified; but when a Senator says that he has doubts upon a very grave question presented by a brother Senator, and asks two or three days to consider it, I do not think it is in accordance with the usual every-day courtesy of the Senate to deny him that privilege. I even use the expression of my friend from Arkansas, cannot do it. If the Senator from Maryland wants two or three days to consider this matter, so far as I am concerned he may have them.

Mr. GRIMES. Fix Thursday, instead of Saturday.

Mr. BROWN. I object to fixing Wednesday or Thursday for this bill; because I am fearful that I shall run foul of somebody's special order, some Senator's special business, and have this bill displaced. Of the Senator will postpone the question until Saturday, and assume that day a second time for the consideration of District business, then I am absolutely certain on that day to get it up; and now let me say, upon the question of not getting a quorum, that there is plenty of other business, and very important business. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the honorable Senator from Mississippi allow me a moment? I think there will be no difficulty in having this question disposed of if we were set for either Tuesday or Wednesday, of Arkansas. The bill is one that the opinion stated by the honorable Senator from Louisiana is correct, that the stockholders of a corporation cannot, by any possibility, be bound without their consent, when there is a distinct proposition to allow them to build another and different road, and there is not the slightest doubt that when the honorable Senator from Maryland shall come to examine the question, he will be satisfied that that position is correct; and the thing will pass by without any debate whatever.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There is no such a proposition to the Senator from Maryland. In that view of the case, it is plain, I think, from what we may observe here, that the bill has reached that point where there is but very little difficulty about determining it, but for the consideration of the District business. I do not see any reason for it in all probability, that the Senator allow the vote to be taken on the bill, and then enter a motion to reconsider; and if his mind is not satisfied he can take time. He can make his motion, and call it up hereafter, with the understanding that he should be heard upon it, and then he can insist on it; and if not, of course it stands for nothing.

Mr. PEARCE. If the vote be taken now, under the circumstances, it will be in vain for me to move any reconsideration, undoubtedly. I am not in favor of such a course. I do not see the Legislature of Maryland which contemplates certain other powers to be acquired by the Metropolitan Railroad Company on application to the Government of the United States. I have not seen that act for a long time; I do not precisely express what its purpose is. It may be that it may cover this case; it is possible it may not. All I ask is, that I may have an opportunity to investigate it. I have been pretty frank to say that I think the objections of the Senator from Louisiana are not in fact objections, but they are questions of substance to be discovered in the course of an examination, which will not take more than two or three days at the furthest. There will be no difficulty, I take it, if opposition be withdrawn, in passing this bill. It has reached the point at which the Senate can vote on it. I do not think it would be a waste of time to take it up some day next week if it were made the special order for any day at half past twelve o'clock, which would give time for the morning business to be gone through, and would give time to settle it. I suggest, therefore, that it be made the special order for Wednesday next, at half past twelve o'clock.

Mr. HUNTER. Saturday will be a better day. We shall have appropriation bills ready by that time, I think.

Mr. BROWN. That is what I feared. I think Senator HUNTER had better let me take my own course with this matter. It will be more convenient to all of us to come here on Saturday. ["Say Saturday."] This is not the only matter. Let me remind Senators again, that the District has plenty of business to engage you on Saturday for next Saturday, but for a dozen Saturdays, if you will devote yourselves to it. We have another important question lying back of this, about the grading of streets. Then you have the Capitol extension question; the water works question; if plenty of business to attend to on Saturdays, and you have a mind to attend to it. I have no fears of not having a quorum. Senators will very much neglect their duty, if they do not come here and attend to important business relative to the District of Columbia, not only from my committee, but from others. Therefore I will allow me to draw me. I will ask that Saturday again be assigned for the consideration of District business, and then I shall move to postpone the consideration of this question to that day.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. By common consent, the Chair will entertain that motion. It is not strictly in order, if objection be made.

Mr. WADE. I hope this bill will be postponed until Saturday, and I wish to give notice now—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on assigning Saturday for the consideration of District business.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on postponing this bill until Saturday next.

Mr. WADE. I am glad it is settled as it is; and I rise to give notice that early next week I shall move to take up the homestead bill, and I will antagonize it to anything else that may be got up, and I hope its friends will all be on hand.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

DAMAGES FOR GRADING.

Mr. BROWN. I now move to take up the bill in reference to the grading of the streets. The motion is agreed to; and the clerk (S. No. 313) to authorize the Court of Claims to award damages against the United States in certain cases therein mentioned, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that whenever any owner of real estate in Washington shall desire compensation to have been damaged by the act of the Government in causing the grades of the streets and avenues of the city to be changed, he may petition the Court of Claims for damages against the United States; and the court shall hear the petition, and award such equitable damages as, on proof taken in the usual form, may appear to be due; but in no case shall the United States be held in damages where the grade has been made in accordance with the survey existing at the time the petitioner desired the change of grade. It is also provided that the United States is not responsible for damage done to private property by grading streets and avenues according to the surveys existing when the owner thereof made his or her purchase, but only for damages resulting from changes and alterations made in such grades by order of Congress. And it shall in all cases be lawful for the United States to plead as offset any benefit resulting to the real estate of any complainant by reason of such change of alteration; and to have the amount deducted from the award before judgment rendered for the compensation.

Mr. HUNTER. This seems to me to be a very dangerous bill. According to this, we are to become liable for all the damages which may have been occasioned by the altering of the grades of the streets of Washington, and I am not sure how much money this will involve, and what sort of inquiry are we to go into in order to avail ourselves of the little guard the bill gives us? We are to take testimony to know whether the house was built according to the original survey or not; we are to take testimony, and present it, to see whether the advantage conferred on the property-holder by the change of grade is greater than the injury sustained. I know cases where individuals say they were injured to the amount of thousands. There is no telling what the bill will cost us. Nor is it equitable that we should be made to pay these damages. I believe it has been a matter of decision—my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. BAXAMIN.] I think, has a case on the subject—which shows very clearly that we are not bound in law or in reason to pay for such things.

Mr. BROWN. The committee did not report this bill lightly. They admitted, as the printed report shows, that the Government was not legally liable. That is the uniform current of decisions in this country and in Europe. The Government is not liable, simply because it is regarded as a sovereign. As a sovereign, it is not liable except where it admits its liability. These very complainants have had their cases before the courts, and, as the report shows, have been dismissed with costs, because they had no legal right to damages; but the report is based upon equitable grounds. What ought the Government to do when by its own act it has injured a public interest in its own citizen? Look out, sir, from your Capitol at the house which belongs to Captain Wilkes, built originally according to the survey established and approved by George Washington, who made the plan of your city; but now, by change of grade in the city, the house is left standing upon an elevation twenty-five or thirty feet above the level of the street. This was arbitrarily done by the Government. You are not legally bound, because, I say again, the Government is sovereign; but has the Government, out of its own accord, the right to wrong its own citizen, to inflict palpable, downright, and outrageous injury on him, and say it will not compensate him, simply because it is in its power to do so? This would be the argument of the highwayman who has the power over his victim and robs him. I undertake to say, that in cases of this kind, the Government, while not legally bound, according to the rulings of the judges, is equitably bound to make indemnity, and ought to do it. Sir, here are citizens who went according to the grade established at the time they were purchased by disinterested parties that they examined the surveys, the surveys approved, standing approved at the time, built their houses accordingly; then, the Government comes and arbitrarily digs down the street fifteen or twenty feet in its own power, and renders the property of the owners utterly worthless. I claim that in cases of that sort, equity requires us to make indemnity, and it is not honest to refuse it.

Mr. POLK. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask whether it is the Government of the United States who does it, or the corporation of Washington?

Mr. BROWN. The bill says expressly that the Government is to be responsible only where Congress alter the grade.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask if that does not make us responsible, in fact, for every alteration in the streets; because the corporation cannot alter the grade without the consent of Congress?

Mr. BROWN. I do not care. If Congress ordered its creature to do wrong, Congress is responsible. I suppose that the time can not tell whether the man who went and dug away the earth was paid out of the national Treasury or the treasury of the city of Washington; it was still the act of Congress, and Congress ought to be responsible for it. I do not recognize the right of any Government to destroy my property, and yet refuse to make indemnity. If it were the case of the Senator from Virginia, instead of being the case of these complainants, I dare say he would regard himself as entitled to damages. If he had bought from the Government—mark you, from the Government itself—a lot of ground, and had erected a magnificent house upon it, such as were suited to the dignity of a Senator from Virginia, with a guarantee that the Government would make no grade in front of his house which would cut it off from the street, and the Government cause and dig a great ditch in front of his house twenty feet deep, rendering his property valueless, what would the Senator expect this Government to do, and what would the Government do? He would expect indemnity, and the Government would award it, and the humblest American citizen is entitled to the same thing.

Mr. HUNTER. As I understand it, the proposition of the Senator is that though, in passing laws for the government of this city, we pass the laws, we can give according to the best lights of our wisdom and the best interests of the people, and authorize the corporation to do things which may injure an individual, we are to pay the damages. It would be just as proper to say that we were bound in our individual capacities for the errors we commit.

Mr. BROWN. Understand that an individual is bound in his individual capacity for his individual errors.

Mr. HUNTER. For a law he votes for? Mr. BROWN. No, sir; but I understand that the Senator from Virginia, if he commits an individual error against me or my property, however honest and well meaning he may be, is bound for it; and if Congress commits a wrong against a citizen, Congress ought to be bound. I admit it is not legally bound, because it has not agreed to be so; but equitably bound.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I really think, sir, that this is a very extraordinary proposition, and it is to be said that the Government of Washington has control over its streets, but we have a right to supervise that control. Having large interests here, this being the seat of Government, we see that the streets are not laid out and graded to the inconvenience of the public, but to the damage of the public property; but in all other respects we give the corporation of Washington the same powers that all other cities have for the grading of its own streets. The proposition now is, that whenever we authorize the city of Washington to grade its streets, we, the Government of the United States—not the city of Washington, not the corporation, but the Government of the United States—shall pay every man whose property may be inconvenienced or diminished in value by it, the damage he suffers. The streets belong to the public. The fee of the soil carries the right to the surface down to the center of the earth, according to the fiction of the law books, and a right to the sky above, as high as you can carry your buildings. You take a street which belongs to you, either dig it down or fill it up to the surface of the ground, for the purpose of the public convenience, and the proposition is, that because you have used your own property in that way, you shall pay, somebody else whose property is thereby rendered less valuable.

In using your own undisturbed legal right, you are not only to pay for what you do for the public convenience, but you must pay everybody else that may happen to be injured; so that in legislation we are not to be guided, as people generally are guided, by the consideration of the public interest regardless of the rights of the individual; but we are to regard the public interest, and take care of that, and then pay for every particular inconvenience that may be suffered besides. I do not see the justice or the equity of it. Why more in the case of the public body than in the case of an individual? The man who digs down a street then in the case of the individual who digs down his foundation next to your lot? The man next to you has a right to dig as deep a pit as he pleases, provided he keeps on his own lands. It may be an injury to your property; what of that? It is his own property, and he has a right to do it his own way, and you hold your property subject to that contingency. The public does the mine with its roads.

But the Senator from Mississippi says that there is equity in this; that peoples' property is left worthless. I do not see how that can be. People buy their property according to grades which are established, says the Senator. True, but every man who knows a grade has already been established, knows that the corporation always has the power, or somebody over the corporation has the right to give the streets the grade, because in accordance with the public convenience. The grading of streets is not something, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, so fixed that it cannot be revoked and changed. Every man holds his property subject to the public convenience, either as to the grade of the changing of grades or the way that the roads run. On principle it has been thought that private property has been sufficiently protected everywhere, both in the cities and as against the General Government, by providing that you shall not take a man's property for the public use without paying him for it. The proposition now is to go a great deal further, and to carry the principle far beyond anything that I have ever heard of—not only that you shall not take his property for public use without paying him, but that you shall not take his property for the public convenience without paying him if it happens to be an injury to his particular property. On the same ground you might say, in your country districts, if a road went over a hill, that you could not wind it around and carry it up in that way by the county or whatever authority, because it would injure the man who lived on the hill formerly had a road going by his door, and now he is to be paid if it is found to be a public convenience to carry the road around the hill on a better grade. All these things are contingencies to which men are subject who own property.

This is a city in which the grades are still, in my opinion, in a state of transition. I do not think that anybody can say that this city is graded in many of its parts, as yet, with any degree of certainty. Shall it be imposed on the public ever again to grade those streets; shall it be impossible for Congress and the corporation to grade these streets without knowing but that they are giving rise to some monstrous extravagant claim for damages? Shall we put the Government of the United States at the mercy of the public, who have just interest here, to pull up each other's property, and to exaggerate the amount of damage done? Do we not all know what is the result of these things? There was a little island in the Potomac which some company owned—I believe the case has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; I have never examined the details; I do not know its merits; but I know this, that for the uses and advantages of the water of the Potomac, on land which the Government bought, there is a claim before us, of how much I do not know; but a jury of inquest of the neighborhood, on account of the alleged damages done to the riparian proprietors, for an acre or two of ground on the Potomac river, miles away from Washington, awarded $150,000. Their property was not taken; but for the damage done to their riparian rights, the diminution of the volume of water, $150,000 were assessed by the jury for damages against the Government. What protection is there? What need of our going beyond the regular established rules of law? Why more in Washington than in any other city in the Union, give the owner of property the right to claim from the Government, either the corporation or the General Government, damages of this character?

The decisions of your courts are here in every State of the Union. In every State where this question has arisen, the courts have held that this is one of the contingencies to which the owners of property are liable. The courts have everywhere held that neither the municipal corporations nor the States are bound for these damages; that it is an incident of the ownership of property, like many other incidents, which the owner must bear. Sometimes less valuable and less convenient than at others. Now, in this very case I have before me the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Suit was brought against the corporation of Washington. The court does not alone hold the claim to be one of the contingencies, but gives reasons showing that there is no equity for the claim. After first determining, at the suit of Anne C. Smith, that the corporation had a right to change the grades, they examine the question of damages, and they say:

"Having performed what was confided to them by the law, according to the best of their judgment and discretion, without exceeding the jurisdiction and authority vested in them as agents of the public, and on land dedicated to public use for the purposes of a highway, they have not acted 'unlawfully or wrongfully,' as charged in the declaration. They have not trespassed on the plaintiff's property, nor exercised a nuisance injurious to it, and are, consequently, not liable to damages where they have committed no wrong, leave nothing to be claimed by the law as agents of the public. The plaintiff may have suffered inconvenience and have been put to expense in the consequence of this action, as the result of the defendant's not being 'unlawfully or wrongfully,' they are not bound to make any recompense. It is what the law says 'damnum ab injuria.' Private interests must give way to the accommodations; one cannot build his house on the top of a hill in the midst of a city, and require the grade of the street to conform to his convenience, as the result of that of the city."—Smith vs. Corporation of Washington, Howard's Reports, vol. 99, p. 145.

Now, sir, in a city, the surface of which is as irregular as that of the city of Washington, where it is obvious, on first inspection, that the grades must constantly change to conform to the public convenience, it is evident that anybody who buys property, buys with his eyes to the possible diminution of its value by change of grades. He gives less for it for that reason, anticipating all the contingencies that may occur. He says, "This property is worth so much; it would be worth more if I were sure the grade would never be changed; but inasmuch as power exists in the municipal corporation to change the grade for the purpose of subserving the public convenience, and as they may take it into their heads to change this grade, I shall have to pay something; it may cost me some money to conform my property to the new grade, and therefore I shall pay less for it now. Every prudent man who foresees these things, must foresee them in a city whose surface is not a dead level. Therefore, to pay money now, after the property has been injured by a change of grade, is paying it to the detriment of the former prudent proprietor, who, having foreseen this injury, sold for less than he would have sold for. The present proprietor would, in point of fact, be making a speculation out of the public; because, if a prudent person, (and for these alone laws are made,) he ought to have foreseen the possibility of this change of grade, and, accordingly, he would have considered the price for the property. It is true, the grade was formerly fixed; but from the very nature of things, from the aspect of the city, from its surface, everybody must have known, who bought property which was not on a level, that the grades were liable to be changed; that there was a possibility somewhere that could change these grades; and I think it is too late now to ask us to pay these damages.

The Senate will observe, that if we once, upon that principle, pay, if we agree now to admit the equity of the principle, where will you stop? How much will you pay? How many years will you pay? Suppose the grades were once fixed: how were those who bought, even before the grades were fixed, to know how you were going to make your grades when you did fix them? There must be a fixed grade existing at the time of the property bought previously. There was a grade existing from the very foundation of the city—the natural grade. It was a grade that might be changed, and was not intended by anybody to be so fixed that it could not possibly be improved afterwards. The Government, in making the very foundation of the city to do exact justice to all, if you allow damages to anybody to-day.

I think the claim is a dangerous one, the claim is an inequitable one. I do not see the basis in natural justice for it. It is admitted by the committee that it is not a legal claim, and I trust the Senate will not give any foundation for it as an appeal to equity. It does not possess any to my mind. I do not feel it as an equitable claim that would be just against me as an individual, or as an equitable claim against the public. If there be no equity in the claim, how can the equity be against the corporation, not against the Government of the United States. Why should the citizens of Mississippi and Louisiana pay damages to the inhabitants of the city of Washington, in consequence of the construction of the city of Washington, the streets of the city are differently graded? On that principle, I can see no basis whatever. If the Senator chooses, at the request of citizens of the District, to introduce a law making it incumbent on the corporation, when it changes a grade, to give every citizen who may be paying him damages—if the people of this District want that—I do not know that I should make any objection to it; but on principle, I should very certainly object to its being saddled on the public Treasury.

Mr. BROWN. I wish my very learned and eloquent and esteemed friend, the Senator from Louisiana, would not criticize bills which I introduce until he has taken the trouble to read them. The bill itself answers nine tenths of his objections. This bill is based on this principle, which is the basis of all the bills of this kind, that whereas the grades were originally fixed and established by the survey ordered and afterwards approved, put upon the record, and then Congress, by its own direct act, interposed and caused them to be changed, damages are only to be assessed in such cases.

Mr. GREEN. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that there is no quorum present?

Mr. BROWN. I do not care; I am not speaking to a quorum.

Mr. BROWN. Do you not intend to pass the bill, or do you not do that without a quorum?

Mr. BROWN. I do not know that there is not a quorum, and I do not intend to give way to ascertain that fact, at least until I reply to the speech of the Senator from Louisiana. The bill does not propose to pay damages, except in those isolated cases where the result from the direct grades of the Government. Where Congress orders a change of the grades, and in making that change individual damage is inflicted, the Government is equitably responsible; and why? As the report states, the Government is not responsible for the change of the grade. It said it under an implied contract that it never would make grades in front of the particular house or lots, beyond so many feet. It was a positive contract, because the survey had been made, had been approved, and had been put regularly upon file. Now let me ask the Senator from Louisiana, how can he suppose I sell him a lot of ground adjoining my own premises, and enter into a contract with him that I never will dig a ditch on the line more than three feet deep, and a ditch afterwards, in the exercise of my right of proprietorship, dig a ditch twenty feet deep, and then, in the exercise of my right of proprietorship, to him in action of damages—in a legal action?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Yes, I admit that; and if there is any contract, as the Senator says, then the law gives a remedy.

Mr. BROWN. The law gives no remedy against the Government; because the Government has not recognized its responsibility, because it is sovereign. What I want you to do is to open the courts of the country to legal suits for damages like this, and declare that you will not protect yourself behind the principle that the sovereign is not legally responsible for its actions.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am willing to do that; but I understand this bill does not do that.

Mr. BROWN. The bill does not so declare in terms, but that is the effect of it. It puts the Government in the precise attitude that I would stand towards the Senator from Louisiana in a like case.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am willing to do that.

Mr. BROWN. It does nothing more, nothing less. The Government sold the lots; the Government sold the ground to the persons whose houses you are all up around us here on high peaks. You put the money in the Treasury, and did it, I assert again, under a contract that the grade should be thus and so. The report which accompanies the bill says that, for grades made in accordance with the original survey, no damages shall be awarded. The Government is responsible only for changing the grades in such a manner as to injure private property. I supposed the case of two proprietors adjoining, one of them selling to the other under a contract not to dig ditches in front of his premises to a certain depth, and then violating his contract and digging them five or six or seven times as deep, because that is the Government's case. I tell you all these buildings here in sight of the Capitol, which you can look out upon at any time, and dig ditches in front of them, and are originally according to the survey approved, filed away, recorded. The Government then, for its own convenience, or for its own profit, went and graded the streets twenty feet below that original survey, thus ruining these private proprietors. I say that in a case of this kind, the Government stands equitably in the same attitude that I should stand towards the Senator from Louisiana if I thus treated him. No court would refuse to award damages against me; and if the Government will acknowledge its responsibility, no enlightened court will ever refuse to award damages against the Government.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have no desire to debate the subject any further; but I wish to call the attention of my friend from Mississippi to the fact that in his bill, which he has introduced, the bill provides that any person who has been injured by the grading of a street may bring suit against the Government, before the Court of Claims; but it does not go on and say that the Court of Claims may thereupon inquire into the liability of the Government, and, if the Government is found to be legally liable, assess damages; but provides that any man may go before the Court of Claims and allege damages; and if he prove damages, the Government shall pay the damage. In fact, the report made by the Senator proposes that the Government shall be liable by the law. It admits the absence of legal liability, but says it would be just to pay them. I do not think it would be. If the object is to allow the Government to be sued for these damages, upon the principles of law and equity, as administered by the courts, I am willing to have the Government be sued at any time. I am in favor of that principle always, with proper guards for its defense; but to create a liability, as this bill does, when none previously existed, I am certainly not willing to allow.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to postpone the further consideration of this subject until Saturday next, with a view of going into executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. There is a nomination which it is important should be acted on.

Mr. GREEN. There is no quorum.

Mr. BRIGHT. There is a quorum in the building.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

Monday, April 2, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GERLEY.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BROWN presented the petition of Francis Miller, praying compensation for services while assistant keeper of the penitentiary of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WIGFALL presented the petition of Sarah G. Bryant, widow of Charles G. Bryant, a quartermaster and commissary of subsistence to a company of rangers called into service by the Governor of Texas, praying a pension and arrears of pay, which she alleges to be due; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEBASTIAN presented papers in relation to the claim of James Ford to compensation for corn furnished the Seneca and Shawnee Indians; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DOOLITTLE presented resolutions of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of the passage of the amended bill of the House of Representatives; which were ordered to be laid on the table, and be printed.

Mr. MASON. A few days ago I presented to the Senate certain resolutions of the Legislature of Virginia, concerning revolutionary claims of that State against the United States; which, on my motion, were laid on the table. I ask that they be taken up now, with a view of having them referred to the appropriate committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I now move that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WADE, it was Ordered, That the letters of the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, papers relating to the application of Richard Fitch for bounty land, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. POLK, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of General John Robinson, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. FITZPATRICK, it was Ordered, That the petition of William George C. Culbert, late a surgeon in the United States Army, praying an allowance in lieu of quarters, which he was entitled to while in the States, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 344) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend 'An act to establish a criminal court in the District of Columbia,'" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MASON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 345) to declare the meaning of the act entitled "An act making further provisions for the satisfaction of Virginia land warrants," passed August 2d, 1852, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Mary B. Walbach, reported a bill (S. No. 345) for the relief of Mary B. Walbach, widow of the late Brevet Brigadier General John De B. Wal-bach, of the United States Army; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Mary Chase Barney, sole daughter and survivor of Samuel Chase, of Maryland, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, praying a pension, reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of George W. Babin, praying to be allowed an increase of pension, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. THOMSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Patten, a participant in the war of 1812, praying a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 346) for the relief of Joseph Patten. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Catherine Wilkie, daughter and only heir of Joseph Paine, praying relief on account of the military services and sufferings of her father during the revolutionary war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Adam Huter and others, praying that bounty land may be allowed to the heirs of the militia of the Indian wars and of 1812, who, if living, would be entitled to the same, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Jordan, praying that his pension may commence from the date of his discharge, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Anna B. Johnson, of Henderson county, Virginia, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 348) for the relief of Anna B. Johnson, of Henderson county, Virginia; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Elizabeth Kug, of Virginia, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 349) for the relief of Elizabeth Kug, of Virginia, without amendment; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Lydia Clapp, of Washington county, New York, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 350) for the relief of Lydia Clapp, of Washington county, New York; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Hannah Meuzies, of Kentucky, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 351) for the relief of Hannah Meuzies, of Kentucky; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Nancy Ittig, of Herkimer county, New York, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 352) for the relief of Nancy Ittig, of Herkimer county, New York; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Elizabeth Morgan, of Rensselaer county, New York, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 353) for the relief of Elizabeth Morgan, of Rensselaer county, New York; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Anna Hill, of Monroe county, New York, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of Anna Hill, of Monroe county, New York; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Sarah Eaton, of Worcester county, Massachusetts, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 355) for the relief of Sarah Eaton, of Worcester county, Massachusetts; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Mary Pierce, of Cortland county, New York, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of Mary Pierce, of Cortland county, New York; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Phoebe Polly, of Otsego county, New York, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 357) for the relief of Phoebe Polly, of Otsego county, New York; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Jane Martin, of Harrison county, Virginia, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 358) for the relief of Jane Martin, of Harrison county, Virginia; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Mary Pierce, of Cortland county, New York; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Temperance Childers, of Virginia, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 360) for the relief of Temperance Childers, of Virginia; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Sarah Weed, of Albany county, New York, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 361) for the relief of Sarah Weed, of Albany county, New York; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Sarah Loomis, of New London county, Connecticut, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 362) for the relief of Sarah Loomis, of New London county, Connecticut; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Rebecca P. Nourse, of Kentucky, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 363) for the relief of Rebecca P. Nourse, of Kentucky; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill reported by the Court of Claims for the relief of Jane Smith, of Clermont county, Ohio, with the opinion of the court in favor of the claim, reported the bill (S. No. 364) for the relief of Jane Smith, of Clermont county, Ohio; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Dent, Van & Co., praying to be reimbursed for supplies furnished to the United States Indian in the State of California, by direction of the United States Indian commissioner, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Court of Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of West Point, Kentucky, praying that the pension now allowed to Franklin W. Armstrong may be increased, reported adversely, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Philetus Burch, pray-league; but if there be some old grant under which a large number of settlers have occupied land, a very large quantity of lands might be passed away under a single claim to a great variety of occupants. I desire to guard against any case of that sort. I hope the Senator from Louisiana will move the amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will indicate an amendment which will cover the Senator's scruple. It is, in section four to strike out the first eight lines down to the words "square league," and then make the rest of the section conform, by some changes which I have marked.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment; which is, to strike out, in section four, after the enacting clause, the words:

"That wherever the Commissioners of the General Land Office shall approve the report of the said commissioners in cases embraced in said clause No. 1, such approval shall be final, and patents of relinquishment therefor shall issue in favor of the claimant: Provided, however, That such claim shall not be so finally approved and patented for a quantity exceeding one square league."

In line ten, after the word "class," insert "or," so as to make it plural, and insert "No. 1 and," so that the section will read:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever the said Commissioners shall approve the report of the said commissioners in cases embraced in classes No. 1 and No. 2, he shall report the same to Congress for its action; and whenever the said Commissioners shall approve the report in cases embraced in class No. 3, the rejection of the claim so acted on shall be final and conclusive, and the land embraced within the claim shall be sold and treated as other public lands belonging to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

LOCATION OF LAND WARRANTS.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will now call up the special order.

Mr. HAMLIN. On consultation with the Senator who is entitled to the floor, and with his permission, I ask the Senate to allow me to call up bill No. 199, which I am sure will not occupy five minutes' time. If it does, I will move to lay it aside. I move, I say.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 199) to authorize the location of certain warrants for bounty lands heretofore issued was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that warrants for bounty lands heretofore issued under the authority of the act entitled "An act to provide for satisfying claims for bounty lands for military services in the late war with Great Britain, and for other purposes," approved the 27th of July, 1842, and of the several acts reviving it, approved 26th of June, 1848, and 8th of February, 1854, may be located, in conformity with the general laws in force, at any time within three years from the date of this act; and that all entries and locations made with such warrants since the 26th of June, 1854, shall be as valid and effectual as if the acts before mentioned had not then expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. The bill speaks for itself. By the act of 1842 there was a limitation of time, within which these bounty warrants should be located. It expired. Congress renewed it for five years in 1848, and again extended it for five years more in 1854. There are a few warrants which were issued under that act, the holders of which were unable to locate them within the time. I know a single one within my own State. I think the Public Land Committee say there are about a dozen cases, and that it is to supply in a general law what they are requested to do in so many special laws—that is to extend it three years more.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELATIONS OF STATES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolutions submitted, by Mr. Davis on the 1st of March:

1. Resolved, That in the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the States adopting the same acted severally as free and independent sovereignties, degrading a portion of their sovereignty to be exercised by the Government for the increased security of each against dangers, domestic as well as foreign; and that any intermeddling by anyone or more States, or by a combination of their citizens, with the domestic institutions of the others, on any pretext whatever, political, moral, or religious, with a view to their disturbance or subversion, is in violation of the Constitution, insupportable, and so interferred with the peace and domestic peace and tranquillity—objects for which the Constitution was formed—and, by necessary consequence, is a violation of the duties of the States.

2. Resolved, That negro slavery, as it exists in fifteen States of this Union, comprises an important portion of their domestic institutions, and that the duties of the States existing at the adoption of the Constitution, by which it is recognized as constituting an important element in the apportionment of powers among the States, and that no change of opinion or feeling on the part of the non-slaveholding States of the Union, in relation to this institution, could justify them or their citizens in open or covert attacks thereon, with a view to its overthrow; and that all such attacks are in manifest violation of the mutual and solemn pledges solemnly and solemnly entered into by the States respectively on entering into the constitutional compact which formed the Union, and are a manifest breach of faith, and a violation of the most sacred obligations.

3. Resolved, That the union of the States rests on the equality of rights and privileges among its members; and that it is especially the duty of the Senate, which represents the States in their sovereign capacity, to resist all attempts to discriminate unfairly in relation to persons or property in the Territories, which are the common property of the United States, so as to give advantage to the citizens of one State which are not equally available to those of every other State.

4. Resolved, That neither Congress nor a Territorial Legislature, by direct legislation, has the power to annul or impair the constitutional right of any citizen of the United States to his life, liberty, or property in any Territory, and there hold and enjoy the same while the territorial condition remains.

5. That the experience should at any time prove that the judicial and executive authority do not possess means to insure adequate protection to constitutional rights in a Territory, and the territorial government shall refuse or refuse to provide the necessary remedies for that purpose, it will be the duty of Congress to supply such deficiencies.

6. Resolved, That the inhabitants of a Territory of the United States, when they rightfully form a constitution to be admitted as a State into the Union, may then, for the first time, like the people of a State when forming a new constitution, decide for themselves whether slavery, as a domestic institution, shall be maintained or abolished within their jurisdiction; and "they shall be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission."

7. Resolved, That the provision of the Constitution for the extradition of fugitives from service or labor, without the adoption of which the Union could not have been formed, and that the laws of 1793 and 1850, which were enacted to secure its execution, and the maintenance of which is essential to the safety and security of the Union, and the highest judicial authority, should be honestly and conscientiously maintained, and that all acts of individuals or of State Legislatures to defeat the purpose or to evade the maintenance of that provision, and to evade its purpose, if it is to be maintained, are hostile in character, subversive of the Constitution, and revolutionary in their effect.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, it is not my intention to speak to the merits of the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Mississippi. They are the occasion rather than the text of my discourse. I propose to speak briefly to a word concerning the state of the Union; to inquire whether its harmony is endangered; whether its integrity is threatened; whether its existence is imperiled; and if so, by what means and through what agency, as it results have been produced; upon whom responsibility therefor is to be laid; and whether there be any remedies for such evils, and what those remedies are. Taught from earliest boyhood to respect the teachings of the Father of his Country as both patriotic and wise; to regard the Constitution as a sacred law, and to believe that his precepts should be by no means disregarded; believing that the liberties which our fathers achieved can only be permanently secured by the preservation of the Union which they formed; that liberty and union are one and inseparable, I have accustomed myself to regard the Federal Union as the palladium of our liberty, and for that, above every other reason, earnestly to oppose every political party organization whose principles were calculated, if practically applied in administration, to the ruin of the Union, to subvert the Government, to subvert the Union of our common country from the people of another.

That differences of opinion should exist, both in reference to the domestic and foreign policy of a Government, in a country where such policy is dependent upon the popular will, is a necessary matter of wonderment nor cause of regret; but that a people prosecuting the inestimable blessings of a free Government, themselves the real sovereigns, and those charged with the administration of public affairs, subject to their control, and removable at their pleasure, should allow those differences, in themselves capable of legal and satisfactory adjustment in accordance with the fundamental law of their political society, to endanger that possession, to wreck the fortunes of the present, to blight the hopes of the future, shows them ungrateful of the liberties which they are inheriting, not by purchase, and they who negligently surrendered. That such may be our sad, our mournful fate as a people, the indications of the present, no less than the examples of the past, admonish, unless we timely pause, calmly think, and wisely act. It is not the struggles of national infancy, nor in the early battles with adverse fortune in individual life, that the existence of the one is forever destroyed, or the hopes of the other generally blighted. Property is more dangerous to either than adversity; and each would be equally fortunate, could the spirit by which property was attained be remembered and practiced, when dangers have been passed and difficulties subdued.

Scarce eighty years have passed away since our fathers, few in numbers, but brave in spirit, fought the battles of the Revolution, and the people of the North, they came from the South, they came from the East, they came from their then West, and, by their united efforts, achieved a common liberty for a common people—liberty for themselves, and liberty for us, their posterity. To achieve that liberty, many of them fell a sacrifice on freedom's altar.

"They fell, devoted but undying.
The very pearls that names were sighing:
The waters murmur of their name,
And the winds sigh in the same name.
The moanest rail, the mightiest river,
Rolls singing with their name forever."

To secure the liberty thus achieved to themselves and to their posterity, the people of the several States agreed to meet together through their representatives, to form a Government for the good—the good not of each separately, but of the whole unitedly. They did meet; they did consult in the spirit of fraternal feeling. They were not without their differences of opinion; they were not without their apparent conflicts of interest; but these differences, these conflicts, these apparent conflicts were not "irrepressible," they were harmonized, and they entered into a compact; they formed a Union which they intended to be perpetual, and which will endure forever if we act for its preservation in the same spirit of moderation and justice in which they acted in its formation. Our fathers were wise men—practical men. They had not studied in the schools in which were taught the sublimated theories of "irrepressible conflicts." They assumed not to be wiser than their Maker, nor better than their fellow-men. They essayed not to govern the destiny of Providence to man, nor impartially assumed the moral government of the world. They had not even learned the simple nomenclature of "capital States" and "labor States" now incorporated into the political vocabulary. They were not inspired with the theories which they have never merited, and of political honors which, if conferred, would be worn only to be disgraced. They found society formed; they did not attempt to reform or disrupt it. They were members of distinct and independent political communities, differing in some extent, in their domestic institutions and economic pursuits, but discovered in these no serious impediment to a common union for a common good.

Under the mysterious dispensations of an all-wise Providence, African slavery had existed in the thirteen States of the Union, from the time of their first settlement. It had become incorporated into the very frame-work of society. Had it been desirable, it would have been impossible for the superior or white race to rid themselves of the inferior or servile race. The discovery of the equality of races was not made until after the American finger and providence of the Almighty are traceable in that distinction, was reserved for the political seeds of a subsequent generation. The framers of the Constitution were the representatives of independent political sovereignties. They formed a Federal Union for the common benefit of all.

They clothed the Federal Government with such powers, and such powers only, as they considered essential or necessary for the equal and common interest and position of each and all. They reserved to the States respectively the regulation and government of their own domestic institutions and internal policy in their own way. They did not question the right of property, but as respects the nature of that property, its owners might be subjected to its loss by reason of its escape, either voluntarily or through the solicitations and persuasions of others, and as the Constitution was formed, among other things, to secure domestic tranquillity to the people of the States, and between them and their fathers provided in the Constitution, in the common bond of their Union, that—

"No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."

Here is a distinct and positive recognition in the Federal Constitution of the right of property in slaves. Here is a constitutional recognition that one man may have a right of property in another, and a constitutional guarantee that such right shall be respected and enforced not only against the opposition of individuals, but against the interference of States. "Historically," remarks Justice Story, in the case of Prigg vs. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania—

"It is well known that the object of this clause was to secure to the citizens of the slaveholding States full and perfect right and title of ownership in their slaves as property in every State of the Union, into which they might escape from a State where they were held to service or labor. The full recognition of this right and title was indispensable to the security of this species of property in all the slaveholding States; and, indeed, was so vital to the preservation of their domestic interests and institutions, that it cannot be doubted that it constituted a fundamental article, without the violation of which Union could not exist. It was its true design was to guard against the doctrines and principles prevalent in the non-slaveholding States, by preventing them from interfering with, or obstructing, or abolishing the rights of the owners of slaves."

Again, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, he remarks:

"The great object of a provision under the Confederation was to fill a previous controversy by the slaveholding States; since in many States no and wherever would be allowed to the owners, and sometimes, indeed, they met with open resistance."

And here, sir, it may be remarked that this provision was incorporated in the Constitution by the unanimous vote of that body; and that it appears, from the opinion and Commentaries of Mr. Justice Story cited, that—

"The true design was to guard against the doctrines and principles prevalent in the non-slaveholding States, by preventing them from interfering with, or obstructing, or abolishing the rights of the owners of slaves."

What were those principles and doctrines? The name which have been recently revived, and which are now advocated by the leaders and masses of the Republican party: that slavery is a moral, social, and political evil; that it is contrary to the law of God; and that all men—African slaves as well as American freemen—are of one race and equal; and that political institutions which deny them equal political rights and advantages are unjust; and that the denial to them of these rights is in contravention of the Scripture injunction, Do unto others as ye would have them do unto you. Let those who now profess such a reverence for the memory of the fathers, know that those very fathers, by incorporating this provision in the Federal Constitution, meant to guard their countrymen against the doctrines and principles which they now advocate, and to prevent, in the future, the repetition of the wrong resulting from these doctrines and principles which had been suffered in the past.

Upon this provision and its historical illustrations, I remark that the Constitution, in which it is contained, has long been the property of the several States, and thereby the general advantages which it was designed to secure having been obtained by them, the faith of such States, and of every State which has since been admitted into the Union under it, was and is pledged to see to it that this clause, as well as every other clause, is fairly observed and honestly enforced. It is the agreement, it is the covenant, it is the bond. Each citizen is bound to see that the faith of his State is preserved, and any attempt, either by the individual citizen or by a State to evade or violate, weaken or annul, the obligation thus assumed, is personal dishonor and State perjury. But, sir, our fathers were not perfidious. They assumed obligations as patriots, as patriots they discharged them. In 1793, they passed the first fugitive slave act to carry out in good faith this provision of the Federal Constitution. It was approved by George Washington, President of the United States, who framed the Constitution, and then President of the United States. Under his administration, and those of the elder Adams, of Jefferson, and of Madison, the domestic and foreign policy of the Government was shaped and advanced, if not perverted, to the public mind of the country was at times deeply agitated in reference to that policy, and deeply stirred by the discussions of questions connected therewith. But from the violation of pledged faith there was no cause for general or sectional complaint. The failures of the Republic in her domestic and foreign policy, and her opposition against the formation of political parties founded upon geographical distinctions and sectional interests. No State had been denied admission into the Union on account of the character of its domestic institutions.

But many of the fathers had fallen asleep. Most of those remaining had gone into the retirement of private life, and there awaited, in the tranquillity of age, the expected summons to their kindred dead. But, sir, that repose was destined to be broken. A people who had achieved so fully achieved their independence of a powerful foreign and oppressive foe, who had established a free and independent Republic, far, far away from the seats of former civilized political empire—a Republic the anomaly of the present, and fit to be the model of the future; who had widened the principles of the Government they had established practically and felicitously applied in the development of their national resources and in the expansion of their growing power; who in a second struggle with their former oppressor had vindicated their rights and secured the permanent maintenance of their national rights, now, that peace with her olive branch had again returned to bless the husbandman in his toil, the merchant in his traffic, the artisan in his trade, and all in their honorable pursuits, and all in their peaceful and useful avocations, were suddenly startled by a fearful apprehension that the Government they cherished was about ingloriously to end, not by the assaults of a foreign foe, but from the folly and madness of those upon whom his blessings were lost.

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution many of the States were slaveholding States. In 1789 and 1790, many of them having found that slave labor was to them unprofitable, unsuited to their soil, their climate, and industrial pursuits, and having to a great extent parted with their slaves for a valuable consideration, by sending them among their more southern brethren, where the condition of the slave would be improved, and where his labor would be more remunerative, had become non-slaveholding States. No one of these States, however, had freed their slaves solely from motives of humanity. Economic considerations, their aversion to their African race, their philanthropic, philanthropy was dormant. When personal interest ceased, humanity—falsely so-called—became active. The Constitution of the United States had provided that "no States may be admitted into this Union." There was no qualification annexed, and no condition imposed, in respect to the domestic institutions or internal policy of such States. No such qualification or condition could, therefore, constitutionally be imposed by Congress upon the admission of a State. All States were equal before the Constitution, equal. Those originally ratifying the Constitution, equal to one another, being the sole judges of what their domestic institutions should be. Unless those to be admitted by Congress upon their application were equally their own judges in this respect, then the States, that were equal, were no longer equal.

Under these circumstances, and at the time I have mentioned, Missouri applied for admission into the Union. Her government was republican in form. She labored under no constitutional disqualification for admission. Does any one believe that Missouri had been so inferior to the community, as was New York, as was Delaware, at the time of the formation of the Constitution, that, under the same circumstances, her admission into the Union would have been opposed? Does any one believe that had the framers of that instrument been clothed with the power of determining whether Missouri should be admitted, they would have refused her admission? Not unless party prejudice has so blinded his judgment as to render it an unsafe counselor even in the ordinary duties of life. Yet, sir, the admission of Missouri was opposed, and the Senator from New York has said "that Missouri was refused admission on the verberance of that great debate."

If such be the fact, it only proves that there were men then, for the first time in the Federal Congress, as there are men now throughout this country, who, for the purpose of gaining a sectional and party triumph, were willing to sacrifice to their followers the high places of power and the emoluments of office in the prosecution of unconstitutional measures, would cause the Union of their country to reel. Sir, in that struggle patriotism did not take counsel from prudence, as suggested by the Senator from New York; but patriotism unwisely listened to the demands of ambition. If ever there was a blot and a blur upon the statute-book of this country, it was the miscalled compromise of 1820. It was a statute, since judicially declared unconstitutional, which was extorted from patriotism by the spirit of election and the suggestions of selfishness. Sir, ever since I read the able and conclusive argument of the eloquent and gifted Pinckney upon the Missouri restriction, I have regarded the motives that demanded it, or was it those motives that provided the act of 1820, which attempted to prescribe the conditions of the admission of States into this Union, with a loathing and a detestation which is only half removed by the tardy but patriotic repeal of such conditions in 1854.

Mr. President, our opposing friends are now talking about the aggressions of the slave power. They would have the country believe—the even have the effrontery to assert on this floor—that the peace of that country, in reference to the institution of domestic slavery, would have been uniform and unbroken, but for the interference of the reasonable and unconstitutional demands of that power. To history I appeal. Let her decide the controversy. Who was it that crented the excitement in 1819 and 1820? Was it the friends and supporters of the equal rights of the States, who then were the friends of the rights of the South and the people of each Territory when they came to form a constitution, preparatory to their admission as a State into the Union, should form and regulate their own domestic institutions in their own way, or was it those who thought the Republican party now profess to think that Congress should form and regulate those institutions for the people of the Territories? Had the slave propagandists of the South forced slavery upon the people of Missouri? Had "border ruffians" from other States expelled the friends of freedom from her fertile plains? Had not her own people, freely, of their own choice, established among themselves the relation of master and slave? Did she not, with that relation thus established, apply for admission as a State into the Union? Had Congress refused her admission, would the world have been any more excited in the world in reference to slavery if objection had not been made to her admission? Who made that objection? Was it the Democratic party of that day; was it the Representatives from the slaveholding States, or was it the Representatives from the non-slaveholding States; those who, for the accomplishment of partisan purposes, had become the advocates of the Free-Soil principle which has since become intensified into modern Republicanism? By the recorded sections of the Republican party are refuted. By the recorded history of the friends of domestic slavery are proved to be the friends for the first excitement since the formation of the Constitution upon this subject.

But, sir, we are told by the Senator from New York, that the question of Missouri was not the question of 1820, so far as principle, and even the field of its application, was concerned. Every element of the controversy now present entered it then; the rightfulness or the wrongfulness of slavery; its effects, present, and future; the constitutional and political rights of the people of the States, and of their citizens; the nature of the Federal Union, whether it is a compact between the States, or an independent Government; the springs of its power, and the ligatures upon their exercise. Sir, I accept the issue, and will hereafter consider it more particularly in reference to its principle. But the Senator, like most of the members of his party, who are also members of this body, professes great reverence for the memory and labors of the fathers. I wish to cite the opinions of one of those fathers in reference to the issue of 1820, which was the issue of 1850; and of one for whose opinions upon the subject of slavery some of our opponents have expressed unbounded admiration. In the retirement of private life, and in the veneration of declining years, lived Thomas Jefferson at Monticello, in his own native and loved Virginia, when the controversy of 1819 and 1820 started the country from its comparative repose. His hand had drafted the Declaration of Independence. He had been a chief in establishing the principles and policy of the infant Republic. He was now awaiting his summons to the spirit land. He was "originally opposed," remarks his biographer, "to the slavery restriction clause of the bill, and equally so to the establishment of the Missouri compromise bill," said wascalled. Instead of regarding the efforts of those who opposed the admission to the Union with fear, and approving their motives, he readily apprehended, and promptly exposed, their true designs. In a letter to C. C. Cabell, dated January 22, 1820, he thus declares: "The Missouri question is for power."

Again, in a letter to H. Nelson, dated March 12, he says:

"I thank you, dear sir, for the information, in your favor of the 4th instant, of the settlement for the present of the Missouri question. I am so completely withdrawn from all attention to public affairs, that I cannot follow the course now than the definition of a geographical line which, on an abstract principle, is to become the line of separation between slavery and freedom. I have no doubt that the cause ever enjoy the blessings of peace and self government. The question sleeps for the present, but is not dead."

Again, in his letter to Mark Langdon Hill, April 5, of the same year, he says: "I am a legislator on the Missouri question. I wish I could say so to its death; but this I deprecate. The idea of a geographical line once suggested, will brood in the minds of all those who are not slaves, and excite their ungovernable passions to the peace and union of their country."

In a letter to William Short, of the 13th of April, he observes:

"Although I had laid down as a law to myself never to write, talk, or even think of politics; to know nothing of public affairs, and therefore had ceased to read newspapers, yet the Missouri question has been so long in my mind, that I cannot avoid thinking of it. The old schism of Federal and Republican threatened nothing, because it existed in every State, and united them together by the federation of the mind. But the excited debate on a marked principle, moral and political, with a geographical line once conceived, I fear would never more be obliterated from the mind; that it would be recurring on every occasion, and renewing irritations until it would kindle-rage around and mortal interest as to render separation preferable to eternal discord. I have been among the most zealous in believing that our Union would be of long duration. I now doubt it much, and see the event at no great distance, and direct consequence of this question as to the line which has been so confidently counted on—the laws of nature control this—has by the Fugitive, Ohio, Missouri, or more probably the Kansas, and the northern boundary. My only comfort and confidence is, that I shall not live to see it, and I carry into the present generation the glow of thoughts and feelings which the fathers' sacrifices of life and fortune, and of rendering defense the experiment which to decide ultimately whether man is capable of self government. But the excited debate upon him will signify their epoch in future history as the celebration of the model of their predecessors."

And in his celebrated letter to John Holmes, which has heretofore been cited in this Chamber by opposition Senators, he says:

"I thank you, dear sir, for the copy you have been so kind as to send me of the letter which you have written to the Missouri question. It is a perfect justification to them. I had for a long time ceased to read newspapers, or pay any attention to public affairs, and I was in a state of peace, and content to be a passenger in our bark to the shore which I saw not distant. But this momentous question, like a fire-bell in the night, awakened and filled me with terror. I considered it at once as the knell of the Union. It is hardly exaggerating to say that I have written a reply only a weak specimen. A compromise bill, concerning with a naked principle, moral and political, does conceived and kindled in every angry passion of the mind, and will never be obliterated; and every angry irritation will mark it deeper and deeper."

And again:

"Of course I am certain that as the passage of slaves from one State to another would not make a slave of a single human being who would not be so without it, so their diffusion over a greater surface would make them individually happier, and proportionally would they diminish the means of their emancipation by dividing the burden on a greater number of co-sufferers. An assistance, too, from this act of power would remove the jealousy excited by the undertaking of Congress to regulate the condition of the different descriptions of men occupying a State. This restriction is the exact opposite to what even the most humane of the South would have taken from them and given to the General Government."

"I regret that I have no new code to exhibit that the well-to-do suffered themselves by the generation of 1776, to acquire self-government and happiness to their country; that they were not so much interested in the rights of their fellow-men as their own; and that my only consolation is to be, that I live not in sleep over it. If they would but dispassionately consider the question, they would see that the principle, more likely to be effected by union than by secession, they would pause before they would perpetrate against themselves, and of treason against the hopes of the world."

But I will not multiply quotations. These sufficiently show the motives of those who caused the "Union to reel" in 1820. It was the thirst for power, the promptings of philosophy, or the love of freedom. "The question sleeps," says Jefferson, "it is not dead." "This is only a reprieve, not a final sentence." Subsequent events proved his opinions to be prophecies. Miscalled a compromise, it was never observed nor intended to be so by those who caused it. The possession of present power never gratified; it must continue, expand, and be perpetual. Hence, aggression is its handmaid; injustice and oppression its agencies.

This much-talked-of compromise proved to be no compromise at all. Why not and who are responsible therefore? Even the Senator from New York, in his arraignment of the Democratic party at Rochester, unintentionally, it is true, but in fact, abetted, it and admits its enemies to be responsible for whatever of excitement and of aggression has arisen upon this subject. Hear him. He says:

"From 1820 to 1840, the subject of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia, and in the national dock-yards and arsenals, has been the subject of the most heated debate. The Democratic party thereupon promptly denied the right of petition."

Who was it, then, they retorted, the slavery agitators, who were unwilling to let things remain as the fathers left them; who, from 1835 to 1844, were making their appeals to the national Congress to legislate further, notwithstanding the Missouri compromise, upon the subject of slavery? Was it the Democratic party? Assuredly not, if the Senator from New York is credible. They refused to legislate upon this exciting subject when called upon to do so, against the faith of compromises, the guarantee of the Constitution, and the peace of the country, by anti-slavery forces, who had no possible practical interest in the legislation they demanded. Again, says the Senator:

"From 1840 to 1842, good and wise men counseled that Texas should remain out of the Union until she should consent to relinquish her self-inflicted slavery; and charges that the Democratic party precipitated her admission into the Union. This is only additional evidence that, upon every occasion when the subject of domestic slavery has awakened excitement either in or out of Congress, and excitement was never produced, and never sustained, by the Democratic party, but its enemies. They have invoked the action of Congress for its suppression in the original Territories; they have opposed the acquisition of other territory, unless the people thereof would abandon their own domestic institutions; they have opposed the admission of any new State into the Union, unless the people of that country to say what those institutions should be."

Again, when we acquired our Mexican possessions, what occasioned the excitement then existent in the country? The attempt not to legislate slavery into, but to exclude slavery therefrom; to prohibit its growth, and to determine in advance what the domestic institutions of a distant people should be; to determine these matters for them, and not allow them to determine them for themselves. When, for the purpose of preventing excitement and sectional feeling upon this subject, propositions have been made in Congress by Democratic members to extend the Missouri compromise line to the Pacific ocean, the propositions have invariably been opposed by these pretended friends of that compromise, but real disturbers of the peace.

I will not dwell upon the history of the compromise measures of 1850. How intense was the excitement, how bitter the controversy, is already too familiarly known. If by their adoption, the storm was apparently for a time allayed, it was soon to be revived, with far greater intensity; to grow and swell until the "Union was indeed convulsed under the rebuke of the great debate." The passage by Congress of the fugitive slave law, as one of those measures to carry more fully into effect the great constitutional compact entered into by our fathers, was seized upon by designing men as a pretext for popular appeals to kind and fanatical spirits, and for stirring up the passions of the northern portion of our country. Men of extreme views and unbounded personal ambition, unwilling to bide their time, perceived in this spirit an engine of political power, and a means, if it could be made available, of displacing the more conservative men in the free States; and when Congress, finally, in establishing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, repealed a former unconstitutional act, the occasion was too opportune for the purposes of sectional agitation to be left unimproved by personal ambition. As the Senator from Massachusetts by his legislation to nullify the fugitive slave law; and a great sectional party arose, relying solely for success upon the superior strength of section over section, waging a political warfare, which, for virulence of feeling and bitterness of speech, is scarcely to be paralleled in the history of the great ages in this or any other civilized country, either in ancient or modern times. Having selected an advocate at their standard-bearer, they enter the contest of 1856, the assumed representatives of the philosophy, morality, civilization, and Christianity of the age; and with scarcely a dissenting follower in fifteen States of the Union, they emerge from the conflict self-surprised at their almost triumphant success. Upon the distant plains of Kansas they placed in the hands of their maddest followers the deadly weapons of a fratricidal war against the peaceful inhabitants, and exhort, far, far away towards the setting sun the impious sentiment, fallen from the lips of a degraded priest-hood, that in life's civilization, the rifle is more efficient and more pleasing in the sight of the Almighty God, than the plow, the sickle, or the reaping machine, for place and power, they have told the deluded followers, that in God's law, and in the Declaration of American Independence, it is written that all men are created free and equal, and that neither the arbitrary regulations of political communities, nor the selfishness of a few States, can interpose rightful barriers to the inalienable rights of man.

There is one listener to their teachings, believes in their principles, and resolves to carry them out to their logical conclusions. John Brown, in the private and secret, and in the public and avowed purpose, collects his meager but determined force, and goes forth upon his mission to free the slave, even by the murder of his master. The stillness of a Sabbath's night is chosen for the accomplishment of the heinous deed, and ere the morning sun flames the heavens, quiet and peaceful citizens sleep the last cold sleep of death. And where did this occur? Almost in sight of the spot where repose the ashes of him whose hand drafted the declaration of a nation's independence: of a man whose mission it was to free the slave, and to lead the infant armies of his country forth in glorious and successful war; and of him who, of all men, did most to frame that bond of Union—the Constitution of his country—which made the people of this land one in interest, one in right, and one in destiny. As the drums beat, and the bugles sounded, the mother clasps her unconscious infant more closely to her bosom, and the manly father girds himself for the defense of his country and his home. The invader, the murderer, and the traitor is seized, and awaits in a felon's cell the execution of the law's doom. Sympathizing messages are borne to him from sympathizing spirits far away, reminding him of his glorious fate, and still more glorious future historic name. Even Senators, while disapproving of the act, avow the sympathy of their people for the qualities of the felon hero; and a now, and then, the great and good men of the public principles, declares that John Brown will hereafter be regarded as the most glorious martyr in the history of martyrology. The whole land has been convulsed. The Senate of the United States has divided, as if by a house-line, and those on either side regard each other as common foes. Can these things be, and this Union stand? If the American people are wise, they will deeply ponder this question.

In tracing the history and causes of political events, I have indicated my views in reference to in any of the Territories of the United States. In utter contempt of this decision, the miscalled Republican party avow that, if successful in their efforts to gain the political control of this Government, they will, by congressional legislation, make that prohibition, and that they will so construct the Federal judiciary that they shall register, as constitutional, their decrees. A lawless legislature, a plant, subvert, party-faring and corrupt judiciary, these are the things that, if consummated, liberty will have fled our land and ascended to her native heaven.

Mr. President, against such calamities I know of but one protection. It is in the union and harmony of the Democratic party, and the cooperation therewith of all truly conservative and Union-loving citizens throughout this whole country—North, South, East and West. The Senator from New York was right when he declared that the issue was between the Democratic and Republican parties. There never has existed in this country at the same time more than two great political parties. There can exist but two now. This is no time for the formation of a Union or other party. There has existed in this country a great Union party from the beginning, and it exists to-day, powerful and great, the bulwark of the Union of the Constitution; the conservator of the Union of these States. Under its guiding councils we have increased from less than five, until we now number thirty millions of people. Its policy has excluded the number of your States from nearly the original number—thirty-three. It has secured for you every foot of territory which has been added to your national domain. It took the banner of your Union and planted it upon your southern Gulf, and Florida became one of the galaxy of States. It took that banner and planted it upon the vast Territory of Louisiana—an empire in itself, and thus extended your possessions towards the setting sun. It took that banner and planted it upon the virgin soil of Texas; and she now is one of the sisterhood of States. Westward still "the power of empire takes its way," and, faithful to its true mission of expansion and development, it takes that same banner of your Union and, marching right onward, plants it in glorious triumph upon the shores of the mighty Pacific; and Utah, New Mexico, and California are yours forever. This true banner has made ours an ocean-bound Republic; great, mighty, prosperous, and free. In peace it has developed our resources and expanded our power; and in war it has successfully maintained our rights and nobly vindicated our national honor. Under its policy, and by its courage, in thirty-three wars, the feeble Republic of yesterday has become one of the greatest and mightiest among the nations of the earth.

Mr. President, this true Union party will also soon meet, through its representatives, in national council. When its roll is called, there shall be a response from every State in this vast Confederacy—from Maine to Oregon; from Georgia to California; from northern lakes to southern Gulf. From the banner which shall float over the hall of its nomenclature to that Union, but its banner shall be the banner of our common Union. If counsel of one of its feeblest yet most devoted of friends could be heard by that convention, it would be: Be true to your principles; be just to all the members of the noble party you represent; accept the issue presented by the Senator from New York and those whose chief life is apply no new tests of party faith; forget your past differences upon abstract and comparatively unimportant issues; be tolerant of present differences of opinion on questions of minor importance; lay upon the altar of your country the sacrifices of personal, political, and religious differences; plant yourselves firmly upon the great principle of non-intervention by Congress with slavery in State, Territory, or the District of Columbia; and, remembering that a nation's destiny only depends upon your conduct, go forth to the achievement of a noble and a glorious triumph.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. President, so much has been said, during the present session of Congress, in both of its branches, about the infidelity of avowed members of this Union to their constitutional duties and obligations, that I feel myself called upon to submit a few remarks in behalf of the State which I have the honor, in part, to represent upon this floor. In doing so, I beg it to be distinctly understood, that I have no accusations, "raising" or otherwise, to bring, and no excuses or apologies to make, save, however, for an apparent want of tact in referring more particularly than I should do to the State I partly represent.

The State of New Jersey, sir, has always been true to the Union; she has always been just, faithful, and devoted to the Constitution—the Constitution as understood by its framers and the States which she includes, and which she protects, and as subsequently interpreted and expounded by a Marshall and a Story, by a Webster and a Clay. It was a suggestion of hers that led to the meeting of the convention in May, 1787, in Philadelphia, which framed this Constitution. When that State of Virginia, by her House of Delegates, recommended the meeting of a convention at Annapolis, in 1786, it was solely for the purpose of regulating that trade and commerce which, during the Confederation, by reason of the selfish, jealous, and contentious of the several States, had become well nigh ruined and destroyed. When this convention met at Annapolis, owing to the small number in attendance—there being present commissioners from but five States of this Union—New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Virginia, the latter concluded to the transaction of no business other than the adoption of a report to the several States sending them and to the Congress, in which they say:

"The State of New Jersey had enlarged the object of the appointment, empowering the commissioners to consider how far a uniform system in their commercial relations and other important matters might be necessary to the interest and permanent happiness of the several States," and to report such an act on the subject as, when ratified by them, would enable the United States, in Congress assembled, effectually to provide for the calamities of the Union."

And the report further goes on to state:

"The commissioners entertain an opinion that the idea of extending the powers of their delegates to other objects than those above mentioned, which has been broached by the State of New Jersey, was an improvement on the original plan, and will deserve to be incorporated into that of a future convention."

In consequence of this, and the recommendation of the Congress of the Confederation, the constitutional convention met in Philadelphia, in May, 1787, and on the 17th of September they finished their labors. The State of New Jersey was one of the States of Virginia has received all the credit of this. It has been with her as it was with the great Alfred. On account of her having done much—and she has done much and nobly—it has been usual to attribute everything to her. Why, sir, the State of New Jersey was first, and before a series of able resolves in her Legislature, called the attention of the Union, as it then existed, to the necessity of a more efficient form of government. But I do not mean to institute comparisons between the different States of this Union, much less to undertake the disparagement of any one of them, for I hold that the fame of each is the glory of the whole, and that the slightest shade cast upon one tarnishes, to a certain extent, the common luster of them all. The State which I have the honor to represent was one of the first to propose, and which adopted this Constitution. It was preceded, by only a few days, by the States of Pennsylvania and Delaware, and she did it in a convention of her people called for that purpose, promptly, cordially, and unanimously, without a dissenting voice. She was first to adopt the amendments to it, and I trust I may say that she will be the last to abandon it, and that, if this wisest frame of government ever devised by human ability, skill, genius, and philosophy, shall be destroyed by violence, it will be no hand of hers that strikes the blow. I am therefore, sir, confident that I cannot consider the destruction of this Union as excusable, much less as justifiable; for with it will perish the hope of civil and religious liberty on this continent; and instead of being an empire, grand, powerful, and magnificent, we should be a collection of discordant, warring, and selfish States. The Constitution was a sacred covenant, entered into by our fathers for the purpose of forming a more perfect union, establishing justice, insuring domestic tranquility, providing for the common defense, promoting the general welfare, and securing the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity. It must be maintained; it must be sustained in the letter and in its spirit in each and every particular; ay, sir, even so far as regards that particular institution which is now making so much noise in the world. If attempts should be made to interfere with it in the several States of this Union, where it exists by law, either by violent means, or by bribery, or by fraud, or by a bare-headed exposure to the sun of Kansas, or in the shape of seditious and intestine insurrection, or by assaults or attacks from without, the people of my State will stand, if need be, by their brethren of the South, and by stand and shoulder to shoulder, as their fathers did in the time of fiery trial, when their blood ran together on the same battle-field; when they put forth a common shout for victories achieved and mingled in a common sorrow at defeats sustained.

But, sir, when it is attempted to carry it further, and beyond this into the Territories of the United States, then we, in common with others, have something to say upon the subject. The question is not now whether slavery shall be abolished in the States of this Union, where it exists by law, arising from the action of the several States, but whether it is to be carried into the Territories of the United States. No one pretends to abolish it within the States, except a few who are enemies of the Constitution, anyhow. But, sir, the question is, I repeat it, whether these broad domains are to be made a free labor, with its thrift and enterprise, its trades and handicrafts, its enterprise and industry, its busy marts and commerce, its shops, its mills and factories, its school-houses, colleges, and churches, its fields of luxuriant grasses, its flocks and tending herds, its golden harvests, whether they are to be made the abode of servitude, with its wealthy few, its landless manhood, its worn-out and impoverished soils, and its negro huts and quarters, and its waste and dilapidation.

The practical question, in fact, is whether the Territories are to be open to all the free white citizens of this Union for homes and firesides for themselves, their families, and descendants, or whether they are to be closed up and forever barred against them by the introduction of African slavery, and whether they are to be open to all, or whether they are to be open to a select few, or whether they are to be open to no one inconsistent or incompatible between the two different systems of labor that they may not both exist and continue to exist without the one necessarily impinging upon the other in the different portions of this country, as they have decided for the Territories. I am, sir, a free laborer, and I manifest that they cannot both flourish and exist together in the same place, in the same spot, on the same plantation, in the same field, and in the same workshop; and I submit that although this institution is to be maintained where the people, by their legislative laws, have agreed to maintain it, yet still, when it is attempted to introduce it into the Territories which, since the morning dawn of creation, have been as free as the wild deer bounding over their prairies, it should be mildly and constitutionally, yet firmly and forever resisted. Why? I have no hesitations in saying that it is running through so many different degrees of latitude; embracing almost every variety of climate; furnishing every species of production—the South having its sugar, its cotton and tobacco; the middle and western States their agriculture, mules and manufactures; and the East having also its manufactures, fisheries and commerce—there must be, of necessity, diverse pursuits and interests; and although we, as legislators, are bound to have a general regard for the welfare of the whole, still as we are expected to be true to the welfare of home and its concerns. According to the method by which the right of representation is computed under the three-fifths rule, we think that a portion of this Union has already power; controls and influences the legislation of Congress to as great an extent as the States which are represented by the framers of the Constitution that they should have, and that it ought not to be extended. This was a bargain entered into by our fathers upon a compromise, and we should and must stand to abide by it according to the letter and spirit of the contract, when it is attempted to carry it further, and to an extent beyond what was embraced within the limit of the contract, we think it is injurious and unjust to us, and ought, in the opinion of this Legislature, to be speedily abolished; and that our Senators and Representatives be requested to use their influence in favor of this desirable object.

4. Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor of this State be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to transmit certified copies of the foregoing resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from this State, with a request that they be presented before the bodies to which they respectively belong.

Approved March 9, 1848.

This occurred the year before the act of Congress was passed abolishing the traffic in slaves in the District of Columbia; a year before the ratification of those measures usually denominated the compromise measures of 1850. Before resuming my seat, I wish to say a few words on the subject of the fugitive slave law. That subject is embraced within the scope of the resolutions which have been submitted by the honorable Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Davis.] In New Jersey, we have always regarded the act of Congress passed in 1793, respecting the rendition of fugitive slaves, as obligatory upon us. No grave doubts as to its constitutionality has ever been raised or agitated there. I recollect that many years ago, a quarter of a century at least, a case occurred which was referred to some two weeks since by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Wade], in a speech made by him. He referred to a case that had been decided by Chief Justice Horiblower, and which I recollect that he stated him to say that his recollection of that case was, that Chief Justice Horiblower had held this act to be unconstitutional. The case occurred before the chief justice at chambers. There has been no report of it. It occurred about the time it came to the bar, and my recollection is that chief justice decided the cause and set the fugitive at liberty, on the ground of defective evidence in support of the claim; but, in giving his opinion, he may have thrown out some ideas of his own with respect to the unconstitutionality of the act; but I cannot say now that they were his.

Aside from that, however, there has never, so far as I know, been any question raised in our State with respect to the constitutionality of that law. We have always acknowledged the binding force of that provision of the Constitution which declares that "no person held to service or labor in one State under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor is due." Why? For the reason that it was one of the terms of the compact or agreement on which the Union was framed. This was the understanding at the time; and this is what its framers meant and intended, let its language be what it may. The Constitution of our United States was not a mere contract entered into between two sharp dealers, so framed and contrived as that one party might get the advantage of the other upon a technical construction; but it was a broad, fundamental, frame of Government, entered into by high-toned men for the purpose of securing Government for themselves and their posterity; and it is to be construed and interpreted according to the way and in the manner in which they meant and intended that it should be.

I believe that the States such as are not bound to furnish the means of enforcing this provision of the Constitution by the agency of their own officers and tribunals; but they are as clearly bound to surrender up fugitives from labor, when so adjudged, as they are prohibited by this provision from discharging them from labor and in the State from which they may have escaped; and I think it also clear that the people of the several States, upon whom the Federal Government within the scope of its authority acts individually and directly, are bound to assist in the enforcement of its authority when the law is in the form of law. For instance, if a marshal should be resisted in effecting an arrest, and in the proper execution of this law should call on a citizen, a bystander, for aid, it would become his duty, however disagreeable or unpleasant it might be, one of the posse comitatus, to assist in the enforcement of it.

Slavery, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, existed in most of the States of this Union; nearly all. No such provision as the one referred to existed in the Articles of Confederation, and it was felt to be a grievous inconvenience by the slaveholding States. In several of the States, no aid whatever was allowed to the owners, and sometimes open resistance was made to the recovery of such fugitives. This provision, then, had a meaning, and was intended to meet the difficulty and put an end to the complaint. The States which consented to the Constitution agreed to it; and in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, we have acknowledged its obligation and force. The concession was made, and we will abide by and adhere to it. Let our southern brethren not forget that it was made by some sacrifices of feeling and for their benefit and advantage. Under this provision of the Constitution and the act of Congress of 1793, fugitives from labor have been surrendered up in our State to the party to whom their labor was due. We have always kept the bond. It was a covenant, with many others, made understandingly, made on a compromise, made to form a more perfect union, and to escape from the debility, antagonism, and ruin of that wretched and feeble Government of the Confederation under which all the talents and glories of the Revolution were wasted, and of being lost forever.

But we hold that if a doubt about the constitutionality of this act of Congress could be raised, it is now too late to raise it; it has been settled by repeated decisions of the courts and the practice of the States for many years, and so much ought to stand. But, sir, this is not all. I wish to say something on the subject of the action of the State which I have the honor in part to represent. In 1836, the Legislature of New Jersey, under its power to pass regulations of policy, passed an act concerning fugitive slaves. It was re-enacted in the revision of 1846. This law is now in force. I have it before me, and I take leave to refer to a few of its most important sections, for the purpose of showing what the contents of this statute are.

The first section authorizes the arrest of the fugitive on a warrant to be issued by a judge of the common pleas or a justice of the peace, on application of a claimant, his agent, or attorney, accompanied by an affidavit that the fugitive has escaped from service, and stating the claimant's title to the service of such fugitive.

By another section it is required that the sheriff or constable receiving and executing such warrant shall, without unnecessary delay, carry the person arrested before the judge, according to the expiry of the warrant; and it is further enacted, that if the sheriff or constable who is called upon willfully neglect so to do, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months.

By another section it is provided that the hearing of the case shall be before the judge issuing the warrant, and two other judges called by him to his assistance, and unless either party shall demand a trial by jury, when a venire is to be issued by the judge directed to the sheriff of the county to summon a jury of twelve men, who shall pass upon the merits of the case.

By another section it is provided that if the judge shall authorize the removal of a fugitive without the title of the claimant being first directed upon in his favor, he shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not exceeding six months; and any judge refusing to perform any of the duties required by the law, shall be liable to pay a sum not exceeding $500. And the act creates other fines and penalties for arresting a person as such fugitive without a warrant or other legal authority for the purpose, under some act of the Legislature, or of the Congress of the United States.

In Nixon's Digest of 1846, an old statute of our State is found, still unrepealed, in these words:

"It shall be lawful for any person not an inhabitant of this State, who shall be traveling to or from, or passing through this State, or coming into this State from any of the United States, and having a temporary residence in this State, to bring with him or her any slave or servant, and to convert or leave this State to make such slave or servant out of this State: Provided, That the number of such slaves or servants shall not exceed the whole number of free or household slaves or servants then and continued by said traveler or temporary resident."

Now I refer to these matters and statutes in the hearing of Senators from the different States of this Union, to show that we have kept our part of the covenant, and to ask them to keep theirs—not to violate it; not to extend it to matters and things and places where it does not belong and was not meant to apply.

I am familiar with several cases that have occurred in the State of New Jersey, where slaves have been delivered up under the act of the Legislature of our own State upon proceedings had before the county judges. The last case of the kind I recollect to have occurred was that of three fugitives claimed by Mr. John Roth, I think of Cecil county, Maryland. Mr. Roth applied to the tribunal furnished by our State laws—not to the tribunal furnished by the act of Congress. The case was tried before a jury composed, almost exclusively with the same political party to which I at that time belonged, and which I believe I hold the principles of at this time—the old Whig party. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the claimant, and Mr. Roth took his fugitives out of the State without difficulty and without interruption. Nay, more, the honorable Representative from the second congressional district of my State, now in Congress, Hon. JOHN L. STRATTON, was the attorney of the claimant on that occasion, and prosecuted the case with great success and ability. During the canvass which took place, and resulted in his election, it was made a point against him by his political opponents that he had thus been engaged in a trial that had ending in sending three fellow-beings back to the land of bondage; and what was the combat between the two sides? The result of Burlington he received a majority of near eighteen hundred votes over his competitor—nearly eight hundred majority more than any other man since my recollection has ever received in that county in either a national, State, or county election. Sir, the people of this State, and I think the people are not in favor of this institution, are still in favor of executing the laws, and will maintain and support them. I do not pretend to say that my friend in the other branch of Congress had his majority augmented in consequence of the part he took in the prosecution of that claim; but I mean to assert that in his district it did not cost him a single vote; and yet there is not a man in that district, who, so far as he himself is personally concerned, would have any part or lot in the holding of a man as a chattel, or as property in any way.

Sir, the people of that State, as well as the people of the middle and western States generally, are opposed to all extravagance and all ultraism. They are opposed to all extremes. They will stand as a rock between the two extremes of ultraism and ultraism, whether it comes surging down from the North or lashing up in fury from the South. But, sir, they would rather, far rather, prefer standing as friends upon the fields of Monmouth, Trenton, Germantown, and Brandy wine, and reaching forth their arms to their brethren of the old and new age, and Concord on the one hand, and to their brethren of Yorktown, Guilford Court-house, and King's Mountain, on the other; beg them to cease their threatening menaces; beg them to cease their criminality and recommitment; beg them to stand by the compact of the Union; beg them to cease to cease their unholy fraternal strife; beg them to join their hands once more in a long, lasting, and fraternal clasp; beg them to do this for the Union—for the sake of that Union upon which our truest, noblest destiny as a nation hangs.

Mr. BROWN. It is known, Mr. President, that I have demanded protection for slave property in the Territories by congressional enactment, and that I have denied the authority of a Territorial Legislature, by non-action, unfriendly action, or direct action, to destroy or impair the value of slave property. It is further known that I have appealed to Congress for immediate and direct interposition for the protection of slave property in the Territories.

These positions of mine have subjected me to the attacks of the friends of the old and new age, and of attempting to interpolate new theories into the administration of the Government.

I propose, very briefly, to vindicate myself against these charges, and to show that I have asked nothing new.

As in 1822, Congress, by direct act, set aside, and declared null and void, certain ordinances of the Legislative Council of the then Territory of Florida. Congress went further, and ordered certain sums of money which had been paid under those ordinances to be refunded. It may be more satisfactory to Senators to show the the powers of this Government, as understood by the Democracy. The Democratic party has declared, in the most unmistakable terms, that Congress has not the right to legislate slavery into a Territory, or out. The President of the United States, Mr. Buchanan, said in his letter—"I believe I can quote it correctly without referring to it, except from memory." He said that the people of the Territories had the same right with the people of the States over the subject. I believe in all this; and yet I deny that either Congress or the inhabitants of the Territories can legislate slavery into a Territory, or out of it; and why? Because I draw a distinction which has not been usually drawn in debate here, between slavery as a political institution and slaves as property; and in this, as it occurs to me, consists the entire difference between gentlemen who call themselves Democrats, and suppose that they stand on the same platform.

I admit to the fullest extent that the people of a Territory have the same right as the people of a State to legislate slavery into the Territory, or out; but what right have the people of a State? Can a State Legislature legislate slavery into a State, or out of it? I think that a man who stands upon this floor will assert such a proposition. If so, then a State Legislature can destroy property. If it can destroy the title of an individual to his slave, which is his property, it follows that the State Legislature can destroy title to land, and to every other species of property, from all of us must deny. What power, then, have the people of a State? because this vague expression, undefined at the time, has created very much misunderstanding in the minds of Democrats on this question as to the principles to which they are committed.

Let me take for illustration a case which has occurred a few years ago. In 1836, upon the bloody field of San Jacinto, men with arms in their hands established a government. Suppose that those men had then and there declared that every land title within the limits of the Republic of Texas should be annulled; who would have said no? Certainly not Santa Anna, with his Mexican myrmidons, for they were conquered; surely not the people of the United States, for they had no connection with us. Who, I ask, would have said no? Suppose or they had declared upon the same spot, upon the limits of that Republic, hold property in man, who could say no? Suppose they had established a government, republican in its form, dividing its powers into legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and that some man had subsequently, who held a title from Ferdinand and Isabella—a league or eleven league claim—brought suit against one of the men who had there established the government; and that the courts had attempted to interfere: what would have been the answer? "From whom do you derive your authority who brought this breach of faith upon your people? How do you sit here and adjudicate these cases? Did not those men, upon that bloody field, at the very moment that they organized this Government, dividing its powers into legislative, executive, and judicial departments, declare that all land titles within this Republic should be abolished? You hold your office and authority from them, and this defendant holds his land by a title derived from the same source."

There is a moral wrong in this, you say; answer me in a moral wrong in denying property in lands so there is a moral wrong in destroying property in slaves; for as often as it has been reiterated and reiterated that man cannot hold property in man, it is a fact that the first property that man ever held was in man; and as to the authority of the States and Territories to legislate slavery into an organizing a government, I will undertake to say further, that the only government that was ever formed by God himself, for man on earth, established that very right; and that when the Israelites, non-slaveholders, were coming from Egypt to the promised land, and their government was organized by the Almighty, their constitution and their laws given amid the mutterings of thunder and the flashing of lightning on Mount Sinai, He told them not only to have slaves, but He established the slave-trade among them, and declared that the leaders round about should be their bondmen and their bondmaids. But I am told, in these latterdays of progress by the latterday aunts, that it is immoral to own property in man. They are wise beyond what is written, and they who denounce the institution of slavery, have to denounce the God who made them, who breathed the breath of life into their nostrils, and at whose will they exist.

Then when is it and how is it that property can be established or destroyed? It is not, I say, by a Government, but by the power that creates Government. In every political community there are two powers constantly at work. There is the creating power, the constitution-making power, the organic law-making power; and there is the executing, or law-making power. In every political community, then, the creating, or the constitution-making power, establishes what is or what is not property, either directly or by acquiescence and silence. By one process or another that creating, organic law-making and constitution-making power establishes what is and shall be property, as well as it shall be no property. When is it once done, and the Government is at the same time organized, that Government operates upon what it finds to be property: that Government is organized for the purpose of taking care of life, of liberty, and of property; and if it fails to do that, it is guilty of the high purposes for which it was organized.

Then I deny that the executing or law-making power can decide what is property or what is not; and therefore I deny that a State Legislature can legislate slavery into a State or out of it; but I admit that it can legislate what is or what is not slaves. It must legislate upon that subject. It must protect and pass laws for the protection of this, as it does for every other species of property. Denying, therefore, that a State Legislature can legislate slavery into a State or out of it, I insist that a State Legislature can legislate what is or what is not slaves; it must legislate upon the subject of slaves; it must pass laws for the punishment of the larceny of slaves as it must pass laws to punish the larceny of any other species of property. It must pass laws for the defense of slaves, and the protection of them, as of every other species of property. It must pass laws establishing particular forms of action for the recovery of them, as of every other species of property; and if it fails as to any species of property, then to that extent it has failed to carry out the great purpose for which it was organized. Drawing a distinction between slaves and slavery, I say that the Democratic party has not now, and never has, been committed to the absurd doctrine that the inhabitants of a Territory, because they cannot legislate slavery into a Territory or out of it, cannot legislate upon the subject of slaves, and must not—I mean through the territorial government which is established by the Federal Government. When they become, by the consent of this Government, through which the States act, a people, and come to charter a government for themselves, then, but not till then, can they, like the people of the States, legislate slavery into the country or out of it. Like the people of the States, for then they become a State—a political community. Then they cease to be inhabitants of a Territory belonging to another people.

Then they become a people, and can determine on their own institutions. Then, sir, how is it as to Congress? But before I get to that, let us take up the territorial government and its powers. If a State Legislature can legislate slavery into a State or out of it, because it cannot establish organic law; because it has no constitution-creating or organic law-making power, then it follows, as a matter of course, that the Territorial Legislature cannot do it, and hence the squatter-sovereignty doctrine of the Democratic party is an absolute truth. Has Congress any constitution-making power? Has Congress any organic law-making power? Has Congress any creating power? Where, I ask, is the grant? Then, if Congress cannot make constitutions; if it cannot organize governments and declare what is property, and what is not; if it can charter corporations only, and those of a particular kind, I ask, where is the power to legislate slavery, as a political institution, into a Territory, or out? By chartering incorporations, I mean such as are chartered for this city or for a Territory; but I do not mean those which are created or repealed at the will of the Government chartering it. Should either fail to carry out the purpose for which it was incorporated or chartered, it would be the duty of this Government to repeal it.

Let us test the question as to the District of Columbia. Every one knows that, by the Constitution of the United States, Congress has exclusive legislative power in this District; but I have already drawn—and I trust I have made myself comprehended—a distinction between the legislative power and the executive, constitution-making power. Congress has exclusive legislative power in the District of Columbia, and therefore is bound morally and politically to the States that vested the authority which it exercises in it, to pass laws for the protection of every species of property in the District, and to do so, not because it has legislative power, Congress can legislate slavery into the District or out of it. Not from the power to legislate, unless I am mistaken in the distinction I draw between the ordinary legislative powers of Governments chartered by the people, and the organic law-making power exercised only by those who charter their Governments. But I am answered that, as to the Territories, we are committed to the non-intervention doctrine, and that it applies to the District as well as to the Territories. I go for non-intervention with slavery; but I am not for the denial of non-intervention on the part of the Federal Government with slavery. I do not intend to assert, and never did assert, never admitted, but have always repudiated, the idea that Congress could not, or should not, or was not bound to pass laws for the protection of every species of property, wherever it had jurisdiction; and what certain gentlemen call non-intervention, I call intervention; what they call intervention, I call non-intervention. In this District Congress has jurisdiction, "exclusive" legislative power; yet it cannot legislate slavery into, or out of it, but it must as to slaves, because here they are property.

In this District the inhabitants have property in land, in negroes, in horses, in mules, in hogs. If the Federal Government were, by its legislation, either hostile or unfriendly to, to pass such a code of laws, or refuse such a code of laws, for the government of this District as utterly to destroy all land titles, all titles to horses and mules, would any man say that was not intervening? Would any man deny, or dare deny, that that was not intervention; but that the denial of it? The sense of proper means to protect property is intervention against property; and if this Federal Government has not the right within the limits of the District of Columbia to intervene to destroy landed property, I ask, where does it derive its right to intervene to destroy negro property? There is the question; and I wish it to be met fairly and squarely on both sides of this Chamber.

I take it, therefore, that if we were to pass a bill, and it were concurred in by the other House, and were approved by the President, and the laws were proceeding actively for the recovery of and within this District, all actions to recover damages for a trespass upon land, all laws providing for the detinue, descent, and distribution of land as property; and especially if we were to provide by law that any man who should violate the limits of this District for sale should forfeit his title to it, I say there is no man on either side of this Chamber who would or could deny that we were derelict in our duty; that we were exercising an authority which had never been vested in us; that we were making a law, and that we were bound to execute it. Why? Because we do not possess the creating or organic law-making power; because we cannot declare what is property or what is not; because we possess no sov-foreign power. That resides in the people of the States, as separate political communities. We legislate to protect what is property.

If then we cannot destroy the title to property in lands, either directly or indirectly, by what authority can we repeal laws for the recovery of slaves in this District? By what authority can we repeal all patrol laws, or laws for the device, decent and distribution of slaves as property? I deny that we at the South draw any distinction between slaves and other property. We ask simply that that property shall be put upon the same footing as every other species of property. We ask that, and we ask nothing more.

Then, sir, the point I rose to discuss was, that the Senator from New Jersey was mistaken in supposing that Mr. Jefferson was quoted as authority for any such legislation as he now desires. He must not bring up the opinion of a man that slavery is either socially, morally, or politically, an evil; he must bring up the opinion of a man that this Federal Government has a right to legislate slavery into the District, or out of it, to legislate slavery into a Territory, or out of it, or to legislate slavery into a State, or out of it, or that this Government can do indirectly what it cannot do directly; and until he shows that authority, he cannot quote the fathers as authority for the course he is now pursuing.

Now, sir, the Senator from Mississippi who has just addressed the Senate, [Mr. BAWG], complains somewhat of inconsistency on the part of some of us in not sustaining the resolutions which he introduced some time ago; and upon that point he has a few words, and he has finished. I said in the opening of my remarks that I regretted that these matters had been brought up for discussion. If there was a necessity for action, it would have been better to have introduced a bill, and to have discussed it upon its merits as a practical question; but the resolutions have been brought up; we have to vote upon them. I regret that the Senator is not present. I would ask him if the want of protection for slavery upon constitutional principles in Kansas is the only evil we are now suffering under upon that question, in his opinion. Why does the Senator from Mississippi insist that we shall vote upon that question as to Kansas, and yet fail to introduce a resolution upon a question as delicate, involving as deeply the constitutional question, as deeply the interests of the South, directly as he has introduced the bill of Columbia? A law of Congress passed in 1850 forbids any man to offer his slave for sale in the District of Columbia. It does not provide that he shall be hanged, or that he shall be put in the penitentiary, or that he shall be put in the pillory, or that he shall be fined or imprisoned; but it provides that the title which he holds to his slave shall be abolished, and the negro free. Is there any power in this Federal Government to free a negro in the District of Columbia, if he is offered for sale? If so, there is no question as to the abolition title to land, if the owner shall offer it for sale? Draw a distinction, if you please. Why then bring in this eternal Kansas question, and leave the matter nearer home untouched? I judge that the Senator does not introduce a bill on the former question, or on the latter, because he knows it cannot now pass; that it would be useless and senseless agitation.

I say, for the same reason I am unwilling myself to introduce a bill, or to vote for a bill, establishing slavery in Kansas; or passing what is called—and it is unquestionably a slave code in Kansas. My objection to that at this time is greater than to the former; and for this reason: in the first place, it cannot pass, as a bill repealing the act of 1850 could not pass; in the next place, if it did pass, it could not be enforced. Of the Abolitionists who have been elected to Kansas by New England emigrant aid societies, you could not get a jury that would not perjure themselves rather than enforce a criminal code in that Territory at this time. Then, why do it? If I went for any legislation upon that subject at all, it would be to take from them their character of incorporation, and to annex them to some people who would enforce the laws there, and who would carry out the provisions which were made for the purpose of protecting property. Kansas had ceased to be a Territory, and from that day I am unwilling to pass, on the eve of a great contest—I say it without fear, favor, or affection, or hope afraid; I fear not who hears it or who knows it—I am not willing now to aid a party in the coming contest, the success of which I believe involves the destruction of this Union. I am willing, therefore, to go into the next presidential contest, and to fight for the land and the people. I am willing, they say, will starve and tame the wolf, and hunger may tame the Black Republicans into some little common sense, if not patriotism, before four more years roll around. They are fighting for property, beat them, and they will disband. I am forever willing to fight the Devil with fire; and when I eat with his satanic majesty, to have a long-handled spoon. [Laughter.] I am willing to meet them on the platform that we now have; to fight them on the present issues; to give them no advantages; to defeat them; to put in power the only party that is, in my belief, capable of administering this Government; the only party that can save the Union; the only party that can render the Union whole again.

For these reasons, I have been opposed to these new and impracticable questions, or, if not new, questions that are started now at a most unfortunate time. For these reasons I differ with my friend from Mississippi as to his resolutions, and shall vote for those which were introduced by the other Senator, if they shall come up and a vote be demanded on them; though, in my judgment, it would have been better to let the whole matter pass, leave the Charleston convention to nominate its own candidates upon its own platform, or select a sound, good man without platform, defeat and starve out the enemy, and between this and four years hence we would have time to rectify things. It is not, therefore, that I have no sympathies with the Senator's doctrine; it is not that I have no sympathies with this idea of congressional legislation; it is not that I am afraid to meet any practical issue at the proper time; but I think ought to deal with things practically, to deal with them as we find them; and if the Senator from Mississippi can allow this act of 1850 to remain on the statute-book, I think he can let Kansas alone, at least for a few months.

These are my reasons. I would not have obtruded them on the Senate, but as I was obliged to vote at some time or other on these resolutions, and as we would do so other business to-day, I thought I might just as well consume time now. I trust that the Senator from New Jersey, who addressed me for four years, will accept my position. The fathers may have thought that slavery was an evil. They never admitted that this Government could destroy property. I commend to his perusal the views of Mr. Madison as to the unconstitutionality of the ordinance of 1787, and Mr. Jefferson's as to the Missouri compromise. They opposed those measures; and, were they alive, could not act with the Republicans without ignoring all their strict construction notions.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I called upon these resolutions for a simple purpose, I move that they lie on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 89) to liquidate the unadjusted contracts of the Tennessee river improvement—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (No. 177) to extend the time within which the Governor of the State of Oregon shall select Indians, as provided in the act for the admission of Oregon—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 213) to incorporate the United States Agricultural Society—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (No. 230) for the relief of Anson Dart—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (No. 245) for the relief of Eben S. Hanscomb—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 254) for the relief of Thomas Atkinson, of this county, Indiana—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 258) for the relief of Robert Johnston—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 523) extending the charter incorporating the "German Benevolent Society," of Washington, D. C., to the District of Columbia, approved July 27, 1843—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. No. 230) for the relief of Anson Dart was read twice by its title.

Mr. LANE. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DUFFELL. That claim has been twice before the Committee on Indian Affairs, has been reported by that committee to the House, and has passed the Senate. It is in reference to matters growing out of his appointment as superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon, as I understand. I have no objection to the Committee on Indian Affairs having the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Mr. CLAY in the chair. Does the Senator from Oregon insist on his motion?

Mr. LANE. I have not heard the bill read. I should like to hear the bill read. It is very short, I think.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. LANE. I do not want to throw any obstacles in the way of the bill; but it will be observed that it has for its purpose an increase of pay after the service was performed and paid for, and I am not sure that it had not better go to the Committee on Claims, for it is in the shape of a claim, as I understand. It is a claim for additional pay as superintendent of Indian Affairs. I have no disposition to throw any obstacles in the way of the bill, but I have not yet had a hearing before a committee; and I have moved its reference to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. A single word, not to take up the time of the Senate. I understand this matter has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I was a member of the Senate, when the Senator from Georgia [Mr. TOOMAS] was upon that committee, and has been reported twice by the Committee on Indian Affairs since I have been in this body. It is in the shape of a claim, as the Senator says, that it is for an increase of salary; but the facts before the committee, in a single word, were these: that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, at the time of Mr. Dart's appointment, when he went out to Oregon, understood that the salary was not sufficient, and that he had applied to the Congress that it is for an increased amount should be given. That fact appears. I will not go into a statement of all the facts now; but it is not an application for an increase of pay for services that had been rendered, without any facts connected with it, but it is for an increase of salary, and pay being increased, I, of course, do not insist upon its going to the Committee on Indian Affairs, because I am a member of that committee. I am willing the claim should be investigated by any other committee; but having been investigated by the Committee on Indian Affairs for three sessions at least, it seems to me that would be the proper committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection to the reference proposed by the Senator from Oregon, the Chair will take it as the sense of the Senate, and it be referred to the Committee on Claims. If it be objected to, the Chair will send the sense of the Senate on the motion.

Mr. DURKEE. I object to that reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the Chair will put the motion to the Senate to refer the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH M. COCKE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 81) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Cocke, widow of Major James H. Cocke, late marshal of the district of Texas; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert—

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to stay the issuance of execution on said judgment for such time as in his opinion may enable said administratrix to prosecute to final judgment a suit against said Martin, deputy marshal of said James H. Cocke, who received and disbursed the money for which said judgment in favor of the United States was, said Elizabeth M. Cocke, administratrix, as aforesaid, was rendered: Provided, however, That before such stay of execution shall be granted, the security of said James H. Cocke shall be established to the satisfaction of the court in which said judgment was rendered.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, of the 26th of February, in reference to the uniform or costume of persona in the diplomatic or consular service.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that those papers be laid on the table, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POLK. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, April 3, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Theophilus H. Street, D.D. The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

PETERS, MOORE & CO.

Mr. PARROTT. I ask leave of the House to withdraw the papers in the case of Peters, Moore & Co., for the purpose of referring them to the Court of Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask whether these papers have not been passed upon by a committee of the House, and decided adversely?

Mr. PARROTT. I understand not; but I would not be certain as to that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If they have been considered by a committee of this House and decided against, I should doubt the propriety of their being withdrawn, unless there is some special reason for it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to interpose an objection to everything that is not in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well; that cuts off the gentleman's request, of course.

Mr. PARROTT. I will say that this is an old case. The parties live in the State of Pennsylvania, I believe. They are not my constituents, and I merely made the request at the instance of a gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The papers cannot be withdrawn, objection being made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under the rule of the House, the committees were then called in their order, for reports for reference to a Committee of the Whole House alone.

JEREMIAH MOORS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back an act (S. No. 80) for the relief of Jeremiah Moors, which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. ELIOT presented a bill to remove obstructions in the navigation at Hell Gate, in the East river, opposite the city of New York; and a bill for the improvement of Harlem river and Spuyten Duyvel creek, in the county of New York; and moved that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I object to everything except the reception of reports of committees for reference.

Mr. ELIOT. Very well; I withdraw the bills.

MILWAUKEE LIGHT-HOUSE.
